Greeley's Editorial When Lincoln Died.

THE following very remarkable story is told in "James Russell Lowell and His Friends," by Edward Everett Hale. He is writing of Sidney H. Gay, then managing editor of the New York "Tribune:"

"I have never seen in print Gay's story of that fearful night when Lincoln was killed. But one hears it freely repeated in conversation, and I see no reason why it should not be printed now.

"With the news of the murder of Lincoln, there came to New York every other terrible message. The office of the 'Tribune,' of course, received echoes of all the despatches which showed the alarm at Washington. There were orders for the arrest of this man, there were suspicions of the loyalty of that man. No one knew what the morrow might bring.

"In the midst of the anxiety of such hours, to Mr. Gay, the acting editor of that paper, there entered the foreman of the typesetting-room. He brought with him the proof of Mr. Greeley's leading article, as he had left it before leaving the city for the day. It was a brutal, bitter, sarcastic, personal attack on President Lincoln—the man who, when Gay read the article, was dying in Washington.

"Gay read the article, and asked the foreman if he had any private place where he could lock up the type, to which no one but himself had access. The foreman said he had. Gay bade him tie up the type, lock the galley with this article in his cupboard, and tell no one what he had told him. Of course no such article appeared in the 'Tribune' the next morning.

"But when Gay arrived the next day at the office, he was met with the news that 'the old man' wanted him, and the intimation that 'the old man' was very angry. Gay waited upon Greeley.

"'Are you there, Mr. Gay? I have been looking for you. They tell me you ordered my leader out of this morning's paper. Is it your paper or mine? I should like to know if I cannot print what I choose in my own newspaper!' This in a great rage.

"'The paper is yours, Mr. Greeley. The article is in type upstairs, and you can use it when you choose. Only this, Mr. Greeley: I know New York, and I hope and believe, before God, that there is so much virtue in New York that, if I had let the article go into this morning's paper, there would not be one brick upon another in the "Tribune" office now. Certainly, I should be sorry if there were.'

"Mr. Greeley was cowed. He said not a word, nor ever alluded to the subject again. I suppose the type is locked up in the cupboard of the 'Tribune' office at this hour.

"It was by this sort of service that Mr. Gay earned Mr. Wilson's praise that 'he kept Mr. Greeley up to the war.'"

A Boom Town.

Bridgewater, Ontario, once a boom town of note, was brought into existence by one of the strangest gold finds and crazes in the history of this continent. Nearly thirty years ago a farmer's wife was searching the woods near their farm for a sow that had strayed, and, becoming thirsty, stopped to get a drink from a spring. Slipping, she fell upon a small, loose rock, which rolled to her feet, and which proved to be a twenty-pound nugget of almost pure gold. Bridgewater at that time was nearly forty miles from the nearest railroad, and the present site of the town was nothing but a wilderness, but inside of six months what had been a burned-over, barren wilderness was converted into a substantial city of nearly five thousand people.

In digging a shaft about a mile south of the town site, an immense quarry of the purest white marble was found, and the town was practically built of marble, for it has to-day the only hotel, church school, court house, and private dwellings constructed entirely of white marble in the world, and a mile north of the town are an abandoned axe factory and grist mill, whose foundations are built of the same beautiful material. And now comes the strangest part of the story. During the building of the town thousands of men prospected the entire country, and shafts and tunnels were driven—some of them nearly one hundred feet deep—but, strange as it may seem, there was never enough gold found to pay the cost of a single shaft or tunnel sunk or run in the entire district.

A Sensible Bishop.

The Italian Bishop of Fano, reports "La Science pour Tous," has sent out to the priests of his diocese the following circular:

"1. In all churches, immediately after feast days on which there have been very large congregations, the floors must be disinfected by means of wood sawdust soaked in one-tenth per cent. solution of corrosive sublimate. On ordinary days they must be frequently swept, after sprinkling them with water so as to raise no dust.

"2. Every week, and even oftener, the pews and confessionals must be cleaned with sponges and cloths moistened with pure water.

"3. Every week, and oftener if necessary, the grills of the confessionals are to be washed and polished.

"4. The holy water receptacles must be emptied every week, or oftener if necessary, and washed with hot water or a solution of corrosive sublimate."

The same journal comments as follows:

"That the provisions of the circular may be carried out, the bishop has instituted a service of inspection, and requires the payment of fines into the diocesan treasury for transgression of any of these hygienic rules. It is to be desired that the Bishop of Fano's example should be imitated by church authorities in other countries."

Curious Bits of News.

A Boston woman will agitate for a law prohibiting the boiling or roasting of chestnuts, on the ground that it involves painful death of worms "whose right to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness is no less than that of the most highly dowered man."

Last summer Doctor Berson, the German aeronaut, accompanied by Doctor Suering, made a balloon ascent from Berlin, and attained the enormous altitude of about 33,000 feet, or six and a quarter miles. Then they lost consciousness, so that, although they descended safely, they have no record to show what the maximum height attained may have been.

The laurels have been stripped from Byron's brow and also from Leander's by two plucky women who have just succeeded in swimming across the Hellespont at its widest part—which is about two miles. They are Miss Wood, daughter of Vice-Admiral Wood of the English navy, and the wife of the German military attache at Constantinople.

One New York hotel that suffered severely from the souvenir spoon and salt-cellar mania adopted the plan of notifying guests that each waiter was responsible individually for all articles on his table, and would have to make good any loss. This reduced the taking of spoons to a robbery of the waiter instead of the hotel, and even the souvenir hunter has some conscience about such a theft.

The postal savings bank building in Amsterdam, Holland, is being constructed by the "Monier system," a new method of construction. A steel framework, like a bird-cage in appearance, is enveloped in Portland cement, which prevents the steel from rusting, while the cement itself is rendered elastic. This construction is said to be strong, fireproof and waterproof, and to be growing in favor in Europe for government buildings and factories.

The moment a man ceases to grow he begins to diminish. Such is the conclusion at which a German physician has arrived, after several months' careful study of the subject of human height. Men, so it is asserted, begin to grow smaller in their thirty-fifth year, and women a little before they are forty. Men, however, stop growing when they are thirty, and for five or six years their stature remains stationary. Then it decreases, at first very slowly, but afterwards more rapidly.

The Presidents that Ohio has given to the United States have been pursued by a curious and most lamentable fatality. Of the four, only President Hayes survived office. Garfield and McKinley were assassinated, and William Henry Harrison served but one month of his term. Ohio men have been elected to five terms in office, but succeeded in serving only nine years and one month of the twenty years—Harrison one month, Garfield six months, Hayes four years, and McKinley four years and six months.

Had not King Edward issued a decree to the effect that widows of peers who have contracted marriages with commoners had forfeited thereby their prerogatives as peeresses of the realm, there might have appeared among the latter at Westminster Abbey on the day of the coronation a coal black negress of the Hottentot type, arrayed in the ermine trimmed red velvet robes and the gold coronet of her rank as a countess. For the dusky widow of the late Earl of Stamford has since his death married a Boer named Pieter Pieterse, and has made her home in South Africa since her unsuccessful attempt to prove the rights of her son to his father's earldom.

Dr. Drummond's Chinese Dinner.

DR. W. H. DRUMMOND, the author of those fascinating delineations of the habitants' life, underwent a novel experience at Vancouver the other day when he was entertained to dinner in Chinatown. Dr. Drummond, it appears, is intensely interested in the conditions surrounding the life of the Chinese, and it was with a view to aiding him in his observations that the Chinese dinner was arranged for him by a few friends. It was held at the Quang Fong Low restaurant, in Dupont street. The front of the restaurant was gaily lit with lanterns in honor of the distinguished guest. Eight others sat down with Dr. Drummond at the round table, which had been decorated in customary Chinese fashion. The array of preliminary sweetmeats having been sampled, the dinner proper began. The time of the commencement was 10 o'clock and the meal lasted until 2 in the morning; no time was wasted, however, as the bill of fare was a formidable one, consisting of no less than 15 courses. They were as follows: 1. Stewed shark fins. 2. Pigeon with mushrooms. 3. Birdsnest soup. 4. Stewed chicken. 5. Boiled fish tripe. 6. Duck and tomato sauce. 7. Hairy mushrooms. 8. Duck and shellfish sauce. 9. Chicken with green peppers. 10. Sliced chicken. 11. Shrimps. 12. Pigeons. 13. Duck cooked in melon. 14. Sliced chicken and pineapple. 15. Ground almond gruel.

There were one or two extras, as to the composition of which the bravest did not dare enquire. The viands were handled more or less clumsily with ivory chopsticks and were washed down with many a "yum poy" of orange wine and the inevitable tea. After the usual toasts the doctor thanked his entertainers in a characteristic speech, stating that the evening had been one of the most enjoyable in his experience, and one of which he would ever retain a happy remembrance. All one can say is that the doctor must have a peculiarly good digestion.

A Prophecy.

Some eight or nine months ago a self-appointed prophet, residing, as his fellows generally do, on the Continent, predicted that in about two centuries the lunatic asylums all over the world would be empty. Lest, however, the actual generations should rejoice in anticipation of the happy condition of their posterity, he proceeded to explain, and the explanation, though short, was to the point, and did not lack a substratum of far-seeing philosophy. The madhouses would be untenanted not because there would not be any demented people, but because there would not be a sufficient number of sane folk to conduct them thither and to sequestrate them.

Information for the Farmer.

Honesty in business pays in the long run. The Americans exported in 1880 127,553,907 pounds of cheese. Owing to adulteration, skim and filled cheese, the United States output to foreign countries decreased last year to 39,812,517 pounds. On the other hand, Canadian cheese, which has a name for reliability, has grown in exports from 40,368,600 in 1880 to 190,926,327 pounds in 1901.

The amount of carbonic acid gas given off by a few plants is so small that one hundred plants in a room would not give as much as one man during a night, and they make many volumes of oxygen during the day more than sufficient to compensate for their presence. Rooms in which plants are kept have, moreover, a fresh odor about them, owing to the fact that they absorb nitrogen, and it is this in part that makes a room stuffy, because nitrogen occurs in most of the secretions emanating from man or animals.

Choice of Grain for Seed.

By instructions of the Minister of Agriculture another distribution will be made this season of samples of the most productive sorts of grain to Canadian farmers for the improvement of seed. The stock for distribution is of the very best and has been secured by the Director of the Experimental Farms from the record-breaking crops recently had in the Canadian Northwest. It will be worth while for farmers generally to renew their seed of oats when varieties which have produced more than 100 bushels per acre can be had. The distribution this spring will consist of samples of oats, spring wheat, barley, field pease, Indian corn and potatoes. Every farmer may apply, but only one sample can be sent to each applicant, hence if an individual receives a sample of oats he cannot also receive one of wheat, barley or potatoes, and applications for more than one sample for one household cannot be entertained. These samples will be sent free of charge through the mail. Applications should be addressed to the Director of Experimental Farms, Ottawa, and may be sent in any time before the 15th of March, after which the lists will be closed, so that all the samples asked for may be sent out in good time for sowing. Parties writing should mention the sort of variety they would prefer, and should the available stock of the kind asked for be exhausted some other good sort will be sent in its place.

Winter Washing of Fruit Tree.

The winter season offers the fruit-grower his opportunity for wreaking vengeance on the insect enemies which play such incalculable havoc with the fruit trees in the summer months. The insects are practically at his mercy in the dead season, for they cannot flee from the deadly poison he may with safety apply for their destruction, and if the owners of orchards care to exercise their powers of quelling infestation at the proper time and in the proper way they can largely diminish, if not entirely remove, the risk of harmful insect attacks. The Board of Agriculture has prepared, and is circulating free of charge, a leaflet dealing with this subject which is deserving of thoughtful attention.

As is well known, the insects hibernate in the broken bark of the trees, and the course of treatment proposed is the washing of the trees with caustic alkali wash, the use of which has been found effectual in removing the rough decaying bark under which the insects shelter, and at the same time in destroying the eggs of noxious insects. The directions given for the preparation of the wash are:—First dissolve one pound of commercial caustic soda in water; then one pound of crude potash in water. When both have been dissolved mix the two well together; then add three-quarter pound of agricultural treacle, stir well, and add sufficient water to make up ten gallons. The best time to apply is about the middle of February, when the eggs are in a more susceptible state and the trees still safe from injury.—London Post.

It Pays to Keep Hogs.

It is a mistake for any farmer not to keep live stock of some kind. Almost all farmers appreciate the profit there is in cows, and the fact that they maintain the good condition of the soil and tend to add wealth in more ways than one.

But how is it about hogs? They go well with the dairy. It was a mistake to get scared at the time when hog cholera prevailed—at least to get so scared as to give up hogs altogether. We know a great many farmers who made money out of hogs the last year. Hog cholera has not prevailed so extensively as in some years in the past.

But it seems to be the fact that on many farms not a single hog is to be found. As some one has said, these farmers are throwing away enough milk and refuse from the table to keep a good sow or two, and besides raising their own meat have a nice little bunch to sell each year. "The idea seems to prevail among a great many," says this writer, "that unless you own or are operating a large farm there is no place for the hog. This is a very mistaken idea. There can be just as much made in proportion with hogs upon a small farm as upon a large one.

"Few are the farms (it matters not the size) that will not support a brood sow or two and do it well, with scarcely any other feed than the milk, parings and refuse from the table and a liberal supply of grass. Sows kept in this manner will, as a rule, have more pigs, and they will also be healthier and stronger. After the sows have their pigs, push them along and do not let them become stunted, because a pig stunted when it is little will never make the hog it would have made had it been kept continually growing. After the pigs will weigh from 60 to 70 pounds, if they are nice, growthy, attractive fellows, there is always a market for them. There is scarcely a neighborhood where you will not find men that are always on the lookout for shoats of this kind, to follow cattle or feed out, and this is the small farmer's opportunity to dispose of them at a good profit, too."—Farm, Field and Fireside.

DAISY GORDON'S FOLLY

—OR—

The World Lost for Love's Sake

By Laura Jean Libbey

Author of The Crime of Hallow-E'en, The Flirtations of a Beauty, Willful Gaynell, Little Leahy, Only a Mechanic's Daughter

on, but this strange young man was handsome, dark and splendid looking like the picture of Romeo.

"We soon learned that he was one of the most noted of criminals — a blackguard of the deepest dye. It seems that he was convicted of some terrible crime, and while he was being taken to prison, by a daring leap into the darkness, while the train was passing at full speed over a high bridge, he made his escape. The officers had been searching for him ever since.

"By the merest chance, as they were riding along last night, they came face to face with their man. He fought desperately, but they overpowered him, and took him. In his breast-pocket they found, much to their amazement, a marriage certificate, certifying that on that day he had wedded Lillian Ruthven the heiress."

They were all so much interested in the narrative they did not notice how white Daisy had grown—how her beautiful eyes dilated with terror, and how she clutched her little fluttering white hands over her heart with a wild, piteous sob.

Hetty went on quickly:

"The officers, who knew Colonel Ruthven well, were surprised that this handsome fellow should have met, wooed and won the heiress— all unobserved and in so short a time. They took him to Briar Hall without delay, and called for Miss Ruthven; and now comes the strangest part of all—the heiress, when she found out her handsome young husband's true character, denied her marriage to him point-blank, and so vehemently she nearly went into hysterics."

"And he— what did the young man do, and say?" faltered Daisy, scarcely breathing in her intense excitement.

"He!— why, he refused to speak one word either admitting or denying her statement; but then, why should he!— there was the certificate to speak for itself.

"The minister who wedded them was sent for— he is old and nearly blind— he identified the young man as one of the contracting parties he had wedded within that hour, but he was uncertain about the lady; she was young— very young, slender and fair of face, crowned with a sheen of golden hair that fell to her waist in heavy curls. The old church was very dimly lighted, and he did not quite see her face. All this, you see, is a very good description of Lillian Ruthven.

"And then, another thing— at the very time this marriage took place no one at Briar Hall can remember having seen Miss Ruthven. She declares she stole away from her guests and went up to her room for a short rest; but her maid was not rung for, so no one believes that. Miss Ruthven fell in a deep, death-like swoon, and the handsome prisoner was led away to pay the penalty of his crime, which he had tried so hard to escape from— ten years at Sing Sing. I was sorry for him, he was so handsome."

No word, no cry broke from Daisy's white lips— no image carved in marble could ever have been whiter; the words Hetty had uttered had struck far down into her heart like a dagger's thrust.

The wind wailing outside amidst the apple trees seemed to take it up with a wild shriek— ten years at Sing Sing! and the wind seemed to mutter something else too. How she trembled lest Hetty and Olive should hear.

She rose from the low footstool beside her father's chair where she had been crouching, and tried to fly from the room, but the floor and ceiling seemed to meet— the light seemed to suddenly die out from the golden sunshine, and the whole world to be shrouded in a pall of darkness.

"Papa!" she cried, in an awful voice.

In a flash Farmer Gordon had sprung to his feet and threw out his strong right arm just in time to catch the swaying figure.

"Oh, my God, girls!" he cried out in a loud voice of agony. "Little Daisy is dying!"

"No, no, papa," cried Olive, springing forward, "she has only swooned; the terrible scene Hetty described was too much for her delicate nerves."

CHAPTER VI.

All for Love of the same Fair Face.

Both Olive and Hetty were greatly shocked at the terrible change that had come over little Daisy, the pet of the family.

They had left her a bright, joyous, mischievous, willful darling, flying into a rage at every one and everything that chanced to vex her.

Now she gave them the impression of being broken-hearted; she was so meek and humble she frightened them. The poor old farmer was distracted.

A doctor was consulted, who recommended change of air and scene at once.

"If I have to sell my farm to take her away I will do it," muttered Farmer Gordon.

When the plan was proposed to Daisy, she threw her arms around her father's neck, sobbing as though her heart would break.

"Yes, these scenes are hateful to me, papa," she sobbed; "but it would be the same everywhere. I—I—wish I could die and end it all!"

At this critical juncture Farmer Gordon's only brother died, and quite an inheritance was left him; from a poor plain farmer, he suddenly found himself a rich man.

Olive and Hetty were wild over the prospect of the glorious future opened out to them; nothing mattered much to poor Daisy.

"We can enjoy life like other girls of our age now," declared Olive, triumphantly. "Papa must take us to Cape May, Long Branch, or Niagara Falls for a season. It will be splendid to have lovely dresses like the fashion magazines, wear fine jewels, and stop at a grand hotel. It will be the dream of my life realized."

No such enthusiasm was awakened in Daisy's breast.

"Let them go, papa," she would say; "I will stay at home with you."

Her lack of interest distressed her father.

"If the girls go to a fashionable watering-place, you shall go with them, pet," he declared.

"Shall I tell you what I wish, papa?" she asked, laying her curly head on his knee.

"Of course, Daisy," he declared. "You can tell me everything."

"I wish," said Daisy, in a low, faltering voice, "we could sell the farm and go away, all of us, very quietly—so far away that no one who ever knew of us could find us; then perhaps I might be happy."

Surely no young girl ever had such a strange wish; but then Daisy was not like other girls.

"It shall be done, Daisy," he an[illegible], wishing to humor her. "You must go to Cape May with the girls for a few weeks, and by that time I shall have disposed of the farm. We can settle our destination then."

It was wonderful what cheer that assurance brought to Daisy.

Once alone in her own room, she gave way to a wild paroxysm of tears, sobbing out:

"In ten years he will come for me just as sure as the sun shines and the stars give light, but he will not find me. No, no. If he should find me it would kill me!"

From the papers she learned how

Anecdotal.

Some years ago when Bishop Potter, of New York, was traveling in Minnesota, a man approached him on the railway platform and scanned his features closely. "Excuse me," he said, finally, "but haven't I seen your picture in the papers?" He was compelled to confess that he had. "I thought so," continued the inquisitive one; "may I ask what you were cured of?"

Here is a new story of Paderewski. He recently lost his only son, and the effect on him has been to soften down the little eccentricities which used to charm his less artistic followers. He went to Dresden for the first performance of his own opera. Amid the enthusiastic demonstrations which greeted its success, he observed in Russian to a friend, "All this might be dust if I could have one smile from my child!"

At a seaside hotel the other day a new arrival, having made terms with the proprietor, proceeded to write his name in the hotel book. While he was so engaged a rather large flea hopped across the open page before him. "Well," he remarked, throwing down the pen, "I have been in hotels where there were fleas, but never before have I been in an hotel where the fleas search the register for the number of their rooms."

When the Transvaal war was at its height, Paul Kruger sent a commissioner to England to find out if there were any more men left there. The commissioner wired from London to say that there were four million men and women "knocking about the town," that there was no excitement, and that men were begging to be sent to fight the Boers. Kruger wired back, "Go north." The commissioner found himself in Newcastle eventually, and wired to Kruger: "For God's sake, stop that war! England is bringing up men from hell, eight at a time, in cages!" He had seen a coal mine.

A quotable story is told of a missionary who was spending a short holiday in Texas. After he had been at his hotel for some days he met with a very fierce-looking man of the cowboy type, who, he noticed, had anything but a sweet temper. "Do you know," he said to him one day, "that you should love your enemies?" "That's a thing I can't do, sir." "What! I am sure a man like you could do anything if you tried." "Anything but that, parson; it's impossible." "Impossible!" said the missionary, surprised and hurt. "How?" "I ain't got one to love. I shot the last this morning."

Julian Corbett may be said to have established himself as an authority on the history of the British navy. A while ago Mr. Corbett wrote to the admiralty to suggest that a new first-class battleship then building be christened "Drake." A formal intimation that his letter had been received and should have due attention was followed, after a decent interval, by a dignified reply from my lords, in which they expressed their regret at not being able to carry out Mr. Corbett's suggestion, and explained that it would be contrary to precedent to name a first-class battleship after a bird.

A Sunday School teacher who has a class of little girls makes it her custom to tell them each Sunday of some little incident that has happened during the week, and request the children to quote a verse of Scripture to illustrate the story. In this way she hopes to impress the usefulness of Biblical knowledge upon the little ones. Last Sunday she told her class of a cruel boy who would catch cats and cut their tails off. "Now, can any little girl tell me of an appropriate verse?" she asked. There was a pause for a few moments, when one little girl arose, and in a solemn voice said: "Whatsoever God has joined together let no man put asunder."

Sir Harry Poland, a British magistrate noted for his brilliancy, is careless in his dress. Once his family persuaded him to go to Poole and order a fashionably cut suit. To the chagrin of the household, Sir Harry looked more outlandish in the new clothes than in his old ones. His brother-in-law went to see Poole about it. "It is not my fault, sir," the tailor assured him. "Every care was taken, but how could we fit a gentleman who would insist upon being measured sitting down?" And the only satisfaction that could be obtained from Sir Harry Poland himself later on was the dry comment: "Well, it's my business, and not yours. I like to be comfortable. I spend three parts of my life sitting down, and I prefer to be measured so."

A Philadelphia paper tells of a bride and bridegroom who recently went to housekeeping and are blessed with a maid of all work who is fresh from the Emerald Isle. This is her first "place," and her ignorance of domestic affairs is only equalled by her adaptability and her cheerful willingness to learn. At first she didn't know the names of the ordinary household utensils, even mistaking on one occasion, when there was company at dinner, the ice pick for the carving steel. One day last week the bride had been doing some shopping, and among other things she bought an umbrella stand for the vestibule. It was late when she reached home. "Did any packages come?" she asked. "Yis, mum," was the reply. "The wagon cum wid th' cuspidore for th' umbrellas."

A certain Scotch minister was very anxious that an old couple in his parish should become teetotalers, an anxiety they in no wise shared. After much pressing, however, they consented, laying down as a condition that they should be allowed to keep a bottle of "Auld Kirk" for medicinal purposes. About a fortnight after, John began to feel his resolution weakening; but he was determined not to be the first to give way. In another week, however, he collapsed entirely. "Jenny, woman," he said, "I've an awfu' pain in my heid; ye micht gie me a wee drappie, an' oor gin it'll dae me ony guid." "Weel, gudeman," she replied, "you're owre late o' askin', for ever sin' that bottle cam' into the hoose, I've been bothered wi' pains i' my heid, [illegible]"

"No Cure, No Pay," is the Newest Proposal of the Proprietors of Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills

Editor Morning Times

Sir,—We make the following proposal to the readers of the Times: To any one who is a subject of rheumatism (no matter how long standing), or any blood disease, as enumerated below, and will give Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills a fair trial, and do not find a perfect cure, we will refund the money paid for the pills. If no substantial improvement is observed, we will in addition, pay $10 in cash on satisfactory evidence being supplied us to this effect.

We have yet to know of a single case where these wonderful pills have not been almost entirely successful in affecting a cure. CANADA CHEMICAL CO.

Ex-Ald. Bailey, St. John's, writes: I cannot speak too highly of Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills. They worked a miracle in my case, and cured me after many years of suffering. I do not think their equal is to be obtained.

Dr. Clarke's Little Red Pills are a positive and certain cure for la grippe, rheumatism, asthma, paralysis, catarrh, eczema, coughs, backache, indigestion, all stomach and liver troubles, female complaints, even when the disease have been standing for many years. The most stubborn cases will yield. Price 50 cents per box. For sale by Ormond & Walsh. The Canada Chemical Company will forfeit $10 for any case that these pills do not help.

Dr. Clarke's Sure Cure for Catarrh, and Dr Clarke's Sure Cure for Eczema, same price. $10 will be paid for any case they will not permanently cure.

Don't Allow Operation for Cancer

There is a simpler, safer and more effective Method of Treatment.

Dr. J. C. Oliver, of Cincinnati, Ohio, U.S.A., in a paper he read before the Ohio State Medical Society, May 1896, said: "I have operated in a considerable number of cases of Cancer recently, and with one exception all have died within fourteen months after the operation."

This statement of a prominent Surgeon, should make any one suffering from cancer, hesitate before submitting to operation and consider carefully the evidence offered on behalf of the new Constitutional remedy, which cures Cancers, Tumors and all malignant growths, without the necessity of operation. It is a simple vegetable medicine that searches out and destroys the cancer growths, completely eradicates the disease, and at the same time, builds up and invigorates the system.

Stott & Jury, Bowmanville, Ont., will be pleased to send full particulars of this treatment, in a plain, sealed wrapper.

Illegal Fishing

The season is at hand when the fish begin to "run" and usually large numbers of the finny tribe are speared and netted every season during the spawning season, when the fish are in a semi-dormant state, at which time the fish are easily taken. This practice is very injurious to the sport of fishing when the season is open as every parent fish taken from the water in the winter and spring means not only one fish less but perhaps from thirty to fifty or even more.

The law in this respect is very severe but even so it is being constantly broken, and we are informed that already large numbers of fish have been taken from Rice Lake this spring. In the interests of those who take pleasure in a few hours fishing in the summer months we would like to see the fishery wardens get out and do their duty and stop this [illegible] at once.

At St. Peters Cathedral, Solemn High Pontifical Mass was celebrated at 10.30 by His Lordship Bishop O'Connor's. The sermon was preached by Rev. Father J. O'Brien. Vespers at 7 p.m. Special Music was rendered for the Easter Services. The altar was beautifully decorated with easter lilies.

At St. John's Church, Holy Communion was celebrated in the morning at 8 and again at 12.15 p.m. Morning service at eleven and evening service seven conducted by the Rector, Rev. J. C. Davidson. Special music was rendered at all the services. The altar was decorated with a mass of easter flowers.

At All Saint's Church, Holy Communion was celebrated at 8 o'clock. Morning prayer and Commission at 11. Evening service at 7, conducted by the Rector, Rev. W. L. Armitage. The subject of the morning service was the "Resurrection" and in the evening "I lay down my life that I might take it again." The special music included the easter hymns, the Te Deum, by Constance, Jubilate by Schilling, communion service by Stuart, Rhodon's evening service and the anthem "I am He that Liveth" and, "This is the Day which the Lord hath Made." The church was specially decorated with flowers for the services.

At St. Luke's Church, Holy Communion was celebrated at 8 a.m. Morning Prayer communion, and sermon at 11 a.m. Evening service at 7 conducted by the Rector, Rev. E. A. Langfeldt, M.A. Special music was rendered by a very full choir. The church was decorated with flowers for the occasion.

At St. Andrew's Church, the services were conducted by Rev. J. G. Potter B.A. In the morning the anthem "Rejoice in the Lord" was rendered by the choir, and in the evening "Awake up, My Glory" The sermons and music were very appropriate to the season.

At St Paul's Church the Easter services were conducted by Rev. Dr. Torrance and Rev. J. Yule. Special music was rendered by the choir at both services. The pulpit was decorated with flowers and Easter lillies for the occasion.

At the Murray Street Baptist Church the services were conducted by the Pastor Rev. J. Bastow. The music was specially adapted to the occasion. At the morning service Miss Florence Hall rendered a solo "The Resurrection" in very fine voice. The anthems were "Jubilate Deo," "This is the Day," and Christ is Risen from the Dead." At the evening service Miss Hall rendered a solo.

At the Park Street Baptist Church, the services were conducted by the Pastor, Rev. J. H. Hannah, B.A. The music was of a special nature and very appropriate to the occasion.

At the Charlotte Street Methodist Church the services and music were of special interest. The sermons were on the easter topic and were very ably given by the Pastor, Rev. D. O'Crossley.

The services in the George Street Methodist Church, were conducted by the Pastor, Rev. Mr. Wilson. The music was specially prepared for the occasion and consisted of Easter Hymns and anthems. At the morning service Mr. G.W. Mulligan took the solo in the anthem "Awake Thou that Sleepest," and in the offertory "See Now the Altar" Mr. Bert Tarter took the solo. At the evening service Mr. Mulligan rendered a solo "Song of the Lillies" in very fine voice. In the chorus "Hosanna" the solo was taken by Mr. F. Fenn.

LIBERALS ORGANIZE

Chairmen for the Different Wards in Town Appointed

An organization meeting in connection with Hon. J. R. Stratton's campaign in the West Riding was held in his committee rooms, Labor Hall, on Saturday evening, and the large attendance and the enthusiasm shown was of such a nature that Mr. Stratton and his supporters should feel quite satisfied as to the result of his candidature. All of the old ward committee-men, who have assisted in the organization for his former successful campaigns, were in attendance, and during the evening a number of them spoke, presaging an even more sweeping victory for the candidate than was accorded him in 1897. The Ross Government was also strongly endorsed by the various speakers, and in a brief address, Mr. Stratton reported the progress already made in the various constituencies, pointing out that the Liberal party in Ontario was never more in accord than at the present time and that this fact in connection with the strong men who had been selected to run in the different constituencies would result in the Ross Government being returned with a larger majority than ever. What he had personally observed of the splendid organization in the ridings he had visited precluded any idea of defeat.

Mr. Adam Hall was chosen as chairman of the central committee, and the different ward chairmanships were arranged as follows.

Ward No. 1.—Wm. H. White.
Ward No. 2.—Robt. Kerr.
Ward No. 3.—Andrew Macfarlane.
Ward No. 4.—J. J. Hartley.

Messrs. A. J. McClellan and James McCabe were chosen as general secretaries

Amongst the speakers during the evening were Hon. J. R. Stratton, and Messrs. Adam Hall, J. H. McClellan, D. O'Connell, Martin McNamara J. J. Hartley, W. H. Meldrum, M. H. Quinlan, Wm. Ayres, Dr. Billegbrun, H. Dart, Andrew Macfarlane, A. C. McCallum, E. B. Stone, F. D. Kerr, G. K. Martin, G. W. Roger, J. K. Stabler, and R. R. Hall.

OBITUARY

Death of Miss Josephine Hallihan, of Peterborough

The death occurred on Good Friday of Miss Josephine Hallihan, daughter of Mr. James Hallihan, of town, formerly of Otonabee, at the early age of twenty-four years. Deceased had been ailing for about five months. Two sisters, Miss Maude Hallihan, of town, and Mrs. Frank LePlante, of Rochester, N.Y., are left to mourn the death of a loving sister.

The funeral took place yesterday afternoon, and proceeded to St. Peter's Cathedral, thence to the Roman Catholic cemetery for interment. The remains were followed to their last resting place by a large number of sorrowing friends.

DEATH OF MRS. MACDONALD

An Old and Highly Respected Citizen of Peterborough

The death occurred on Saturday at noon at the residence of her son Mr. H. S. Macdonald, No. 225, Rubidge street, of Mrs. James Macdonald, after an illness of some time. The grief stricken family will have the deepest sympathy of the community in their hour of trouble.

The funeral will take place this afternoon at three o'clock, from the residence of Mr. H. S. Macdonald, No. 225 Rubidge street, and proceed to the Little Lake Cemetery for interment.

A RANCH IN HALIBURTON

Mr. T. W. Lumley, a Wealthy Englishman will Engage in the Business

Mr. T. W. Lumley, a wealthy Englishman coming from Montreal, passed through town a few days ago with a car load of fancy fowls, hunting dogs etc. on his way to Haliburton when he has purchased the Emmerson-Austin farm on Eagle Lake, where he will engage extensively in ranching. He intends to raise horses and cattle for shipment to the old country.

GAME TO THE LAST

If He Was Bluffing He Stayed by His Hand as Long as He Had a Say

"In days gone by," said the man with the horseshoe pin, who was staying at the Snowden House. "I never travelled by boat or rail without hunting for a follow-passenger to play poker. I was gone on the game. I'd go without food and sleep for it. I'd play for peanuts, dollars or brick houses. One night, as I left New York for Chicago I fell in with a chap who thought well of himself, and we had a stiff game. I had had luck for an hour and lost a hundred dollars, but then the cards began to come my way again. I'd got back half of my losses, when a hand was dealt in which we both held up four cards and I opened the pot on two pairs. The other man might have had the same or be drawing for a flush or straight. I drew my one card and didn't help my hand, but by the grin on his face as he drew his, I judged he had something good.

"Well, we began seeing and raising, and in ten minutes there was $100 in the pot. I had just opened my mouth to raise him $20 when the train struck a curve and went rolling down an embankment fifteen feet high. It was four days later when I came to my senses and discovered that I was in a hospital. On the next cot to my right was my opponent at poker. We had both been badly smashed up. We lay looking at each other for awhile, and then he feebly said:

"'I see you $20 and raise you $10.'

"'And I raise you $10 more,' I said.

"'And $10 more.'

"'And $10 more.'

"He closed his eyes and appeared to think for awhile, and as he opened them again I knew that he was game.

"'I'll see your $10, and raise you $40.'

"He was either a good bluffer or he had a good hand, but I was bound to see it through, and again raised him $10. After two or three minutes the nurse came over and asked what was the matter.

"'I raised him $10 and haven't heard from him,' I explained.

"'And you won't, either,' she replied. 'You have raised him out of the game.'

"The poor chap had gone dead," said the man of the horseshoe, "and the pot, wherever it was, was mine. As to whether he was bluffing or had a good hand I can only guess, but as they carried him out I turned over to the wall and made up my mind to go hence to deadheads and stick there."

DAIRYING

Editor Morning Times

Sir,—The widespread interest created at the annual convention of the Eastern Ontario Dairymen's Association at Whitby, has never abated, and the demand for local dairy meetings was never so great, showing that dairymen are becoming aroused, and our governments are following right up. The Dominion Department of Agriculture are building four consolidated curing stations—two in Ontario and two in Quebec. The one for Eastern Ontario is being established at Brockville to demonstrate to our dairymen the great advantage of curing cheese at about sixty and not over sixty-five degrees. We all appreciate this. We feel satisfied this will greatly improve the quality and save over one pound per box in shrinkage. They have also promised to fit up a large number of steamships with cold air compartments, so that our cheese can be properly delivered to the British market. And further, our Provincial Department of Agriculture have given our eastern section two additional instructors, one of these to be the superintendent of our Dairy School. This has encouraged us greatly. So now all we have to do is to co-operate, make one supreme effort, and we will step right out of the way of all of our competitors. Personally, I have attended more meetings than in any single year, and I feel sure all our dairymen will work together more unitedly during the coming season. But the weakest point in the manufacture of fancy cheese, as far as I can see, is the tendency to run everything cheap. If we would pay one cent and one-quarter per lb. for manufacturing our cheese in Eastern Ontario, and demand value, we could go right to the front. We must have better factories, better equipment, proper drainage, better makers in nearly half the factories, better boxes, everything better, and have the patrons unite in getting a better quality of milk to all our factories. See that it is drawn to the factories in proper condition, having the cans properly covered with canvas and when cheese are being taken to the station for shipment, every wagon should have a cover. Milk at the same hour night and morning, and each cow have always the same milker. Salt every morning a little. Have all the good pure water the cows want, easy of access. Encourage the makers by having everything possible done to make their work easy and we can easily go right to the front. Another encouraging feature is the very large attendance at our dairy schools, but I notice only our best men are going, and some makers I know who never made a fine cheese persist in staying away. With Mr. Publow in charge of all our instructors in the east, we expect to weed out the ordinary men, and only the best will continue to make cheese. Mr. Hart, superintendent of Kingston dairy school, will have charge of our utter interests, so we expect great advancement in quality this season. The dairy institute meetings held were well attended, considering the state of the roads, and I am sure will be of great service in bringing about permanent improvement in connection with our dairy work.

Mr. Glendenning talked the dairy cow and how to feed her, showing the value of different foods and how to make a balanced ration, on the growing of corn and clover hay, building silos, and having a small one for summer use in the dry season. He also pointed out the great value of the bacon pig in connection with the dairy and the wonderful advancement that is being made by keeping a dairy cow in comfortable quarters, seeing that she has the right kind of food in abundance and proper attention.

Mr. Zufelt talked on the care of milk and urged having the milk stand in the pure air and away from the pig pen and stables, using only tin utensils and having them scrupulously clean. He told how to manufacture fancy butter and cheese. Both of these gentlemen are good speakers and carried their audiences with them. I only wish they could speak to the patrons of all our factories.

Once more, let me urge all dairymen in Eastern Ontario to unite in having large, well equipped factories, of the best character, all co-operating with one object in view, the making and placing on the market a finer quality of goods than ever in our history.

Yours respectfully,
D. DERBYSHIRE,
President E. O. D. A.

THOS. FOX KILLED

Was Struck by a Broken Post While at Work in Toronto

Mr. Henry Fox, who lives on the Norwood Road, near the high level bridge, received the shocking intelligence on Friday of the sudden death of his son, Thomas, in Toronto. Deceased was employed in the Don Valley Brick yards, and while at work on Friday afternoon, he was standing on an elevated track or tramway along which cars of clay were run from the pits to the brick machines. A post on one side of the track gave way which caused the track to swing and almost simultaneously a post on the other side broke under the heavy strain. A portion of it struck Fox a severe blow on the head which hurled him a distance of about twenty feet to the ground.

Medical aid was promptly summoned, but death had been almost instantaneous. On examination, it was found that the skull was fractured.

Deceased was about 25 years of age, and was well known in town. The funeral will take place this morning from the family residence, Norwood road, and proceed to St. Peter's Cathedral, thence to the Roman Catholic cemetery for interment.

The Cause of Nervous Headache

This most distressing and common malady doubtless has its origin in some unbalanced condition of the nervous system. Probably the simplest, safest and most efficient remedy is Polson's Nerviline. Twenty drops in sweetened water gives immediate relief, and this treatment should be supplemented by bathing the region of pain with Nerviline. To say it acts quickly fails to express the result. THE BOER PEACEMAKERS NOW WITH MR. STEYN

One of the Party Sent Blindfolded Through British Lines to See Ex-President Steyn

IS LORD SALISBURY SEEKING TO END THE WAR

Liberal Leaders in Paris are Thought to be About to Have Conference With Leyds—The Latest News from the Seat of War

Kroonstad, Orange River Colony, March 31—The members of the Transvaal Government, headed by Acting President Schalkburgher, arrived here Sunday. On Monday morning one of the party was escorted through the British lines blindfolded, on horseback and under a white flag, to meet President Steyn. He has not yet returned. The others of the party are quartered in a private house, where they are allowed considerable liberty. They probably will remain here several days.

LORD ROSEBERY IN PARIS

Paris, April 1 — The Figaro says it has strong reason to believe that an interview is about to take place between Lord Rosebery, Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman, the Duke of Devonshire and other Liberal leaders who are now in Paris, and Dr. Leyds, the European representative of the Transvaal.

The Figaro says Dr. Leyds reached Paris from Brussels last night.

CONAN DOYLE'S PLAN

London, April 1 — Dr. Conan Doyle's suggestion for settlement is to form a Boer reservation in the northern part of the Transvaal, like the Indian reservation in America. "Guarantee them, as long as they remain peaceable under the British flag, complete protection from the invasion of the miner or the prospector. Let them live their own lives in their own way with some simple form of home rule of their own. The irreconcilable men who could never rub shoulders with the British could find a home there, and the British colonies would be all the stronger for the placing in quarantine of those who might infect their neighbors with their own bitterness. * * * Without some such plan the empire will have no safety-valve in South Africa.

The work is at once a defence and an explanation — a defence of British policy, British soldiers, and the British treatment of the Boers; an explanation of the charges which have been circulated in foreign countries by emissaries of the late Boer Government. Dr. Doyle has prepared this pamphlet as a gift to the people of the empire and is receiving no profit from its publication. It has been translated into all the European languages, and is being widely circulated in every civilized country. The publishers are open to receive funds to promote its publication. It may be had of all booksellers at the cost of production, which is ten cents.

BRITAINS AROUSING

London, April 1 — "While we are wasting our wealth, energies and manhood in the South African desert, the Americans are steadily securing control of our industries," says the Daily News this morning in an editorial on "The American Invasion."

"It is time the nation aroused itself to a sense of the gravity of its position."

THE GREEKS BETRAY PLOT TO TURKEY.

Overtures of the Macedonians for Revolt Against the Sultan Not Well Received at Athens and Belgrade

London, April 1.— The Times' correspondent at Athens says: The grave situation in Macedonia and Albania causes considerable uneasiness. It is thought the propaganda of the Macedonian committee in Bulgaria is somewhat discredited among the wealthier classes, owing to crimes and extortion connected with it. Still the Physical Force party, which may be compared to the Fenian section of the Irish Nationalists, continues to follow the lead of ex-President Sarafof, who has planned a general rising of Christians in the spring.

Overtures made in Athens and Belgrade have not been found tempting, and Greeks has disclosed the scheme to Turkey. This, in connection with the strong military precautions being taken, will probably prevent the threatened outbreak.

LURED TO WOODS AND SHOT

Youth Revenges Himself on Companion With Whom He Had Quarrelled

New York, March 31 — Chas. Claus, 18 years old, of 65 Manger street, Brooklyn, lured Andrew Buttenmiller, 21 years old, of 68 Miller street, East Williamsburg, to North Beach yesterday and upon reaching a lonely spot opened fire on him with a revolver. Five shots were fired. One bullet cut through the right side of Buttenmiller's neck and brought him down. The other four shots cut through his clothing.

Claus threw his revolver into a creek and went home. Buttenmiller summoned help and was removed to St. John's hospital. Detective Peter Kelley arrested Claus at his home early yesterday morning. Buttenmiller will probably recover. Claus was arraigned before Magistrate Connorton in Flushing yesterday morning and held without bail.

The two young men quarrelled some time ago and Claus told the police that he renewed the friendship in order to get a chance to shoot Buttenmiller.

THINK IT OVER

IT IS WORTH SOME THOUGHT

Sir William Roberts, M.D., F.R.S., says: "Man has departed widely, and is departing, more and more, in regard to his food, from the simplicity and uniformity of his primitive nature."

To-day, thousands commence the morning meal with heavy, rich meats, together with foods of a starchy nature, the digestion of which requires all the existing energy of the body.

The demands of the wise, as far as breakfast is concerned, is for a health cereal such as Malt Breakfast Food, light and soothing to the stomach, a nourisher of body and brain, a bestower of energy, a regulator of digestion and a flesh and bone builder.

If people would fortify themselves for the work and duties of each day, they should become users of delicious Malt Breakfast Food, which yields abundant strength and vitality. No other grain food so quickly enriches the blood and builds up the nerve centres and tissues of the brain. See your grocer.

DID MURDERER PLAN SCENE?

Buffalo Robe was Placed Over Window of Harness Room in Brantford Stable

Brantford, March 31.—It is now believed that the murderer of Quirk carefully prepared his scene beforehand. In the harness room where Quirk was killed, is a glass door opening on to the yard. Across this window was placed a lap robe, which would conceal the affair. All those who went into the harness room after the crime testify to this. He also probably turned on the electric light beforehand. This may in fact have played a part in the plan to lure Quirk out there. The murderer, whoever he was, was in all probability known to Quirk, and was quite unsuspected. He must have summoned Quirk from the bar, and perhaps pointed out the gleams of light which would show faintly from the window, in the manner in which the robe was hung, as evidence that someone was out there.

Mr. Teale says they frequently had to put loafers out of the barn on nights when the gates were left open, and it may be that Quirk was induced to go with the murderer in the belief either that some tramp was out there asleep, or someone was trying to steal his game cocks. As Quirk entered the harness room it is quite evident that he was struck three times in quick succession, either with a hatchet, or an iron bar, and the body placed in the position, as found, by the murderer.

Saturday evening's Courier published another anonymous letter, with the Buffalo postmark on the envelope, and reading as follows:

Buffalo, N.Y.

"To The Brantford Courier, Brantford, Ont.:

"Sir,—I wish to repeat my former statement, although not in the same writing, to the effect that that consummate cad, Billy Boyd, will surely meet with what he deserved, even as sure as Quirk is now dead. The worst of the two is yet living, yet in constant dread. He dare not stay around Detroit, Mich., and makes Chatham his home. But there are those who keep a constant lookout for the villian, and they will surely get him. Very Truly yours.

A REVOLUTIONARY ORDER

A New Regulation Issued By the British War Office

London, March 31 — The following order, nothing short of revolutionary, has just been issued by the British War Office: "Officers and soldiers of the regulars are allowed to wear spectacles, on or off duty."

Hitherto it has been a rule of the British army that no officer below the rank of major could wear glasses; this, of course, prevented all line officers, as well as all enlisted men, from wearing them. Officers of the Guards and other regiments, some of whom needed the aid of glasses, got around the rule by inventing the monocle, sometimes irreverently called the "eyepopper," and a decision of the War Office made years ago solemnly held that an officer might wear a monocle, because it had only one glass, and so did not fall under the order prohibiting glasses. The new regulation apparently is the result of the war in South Africa, which has developed that spectacled Boers can shoot, and in some respects at least will serve to bring the British army up to the standard of the German and French armies, the officers and men of which wear spectacles or not, according as they need them.

THE SUNKEN MAINE

Wreck an Obstruction to Navigation in Havana Harbor

Washington, March 31 — General Wood has brought to the attention of the War Department, through the medium of a formal letter, the propriety of making some arrangement for raising the wreck of the Maine from the ooze and mud in which she lies embedded in Havanna harbor. It is stated by him that not only are there sentimental reasons for this, owing to the fact that, according to common belief, the remains of forty or fifty American sailors lie within the sunken hulk, but this heavy steel structure is also a menace and obstruction to navigation in the harbor of Havana, and it is our duty to the Cubans to remove it. The expense attached to the undertaking is very heavy, the bids ranging anywhere from $400,000 to $700,000. Several tentative arrangements were made with enterprising contractors who wished to use the material of the wrecked ship to make souvenirs, but they have all failed, and Secretary Root, upon securing a more detailed statement of the facts from General Wood, will submit the question to Congress, probably without recommendation, as to whether the Maine shall be raised.

CHINAMEN SMUGGLED DISGUISED AS NUNS.

Interesting Details of Recent Important Captures in the State of Vermont.

CONVEYED ACROSS THE CANADIAN BORDER.

New Chinese Laundries are Being Established at Various Places in the U. S. and There is a Demand for Labor

Hull, Canada, April 1.—"Say, Dave, did you notice anything strange about that party of nuns? They seem to me to be a most peculiar lot."

"No, I didn't notice them particularly, why?"

"Oh, nothing much. Only their queer yellow faces struck me as they came aboard in Montreal, and they were too meditative or too holy to say one blessed word, far as I could hear, all the way out."

That was all. A careless remark and a laugh between a couple of drummers, till it led an acute Yankee Customs officer to make an important discovery, which has already had an effect upon the national treasury.

This officer quietly arose from his corner of the smoking compartment wherein the short conversation had occurred, and just as the Canada Pacific Railroad train was approaching Sutton, the last but one of the Canadian stations before entering United States territory at Richford, Vt., approached the conductor with the query:—"Do you remember where the six nuns in the car ahead are booked for?"

"For St. Johnsbury, if I recall it rightly," was the reply. "The old priest who sits on the other side of the car has their tickets."

THE OFFICE SUSPICIONS.

The officer turned and walked slowly along the aisle, turning his eyes upon the priest and well shrouded nuns as he did so. Choosing a seat as close as he could to the sombre party, he spent the next few minutes in a vain attempt to catch some word or action which should confirm his suspicions. At Richford, Vt., he went his rounds among the passengers as usual, and the little reticules of the nuns and his own bag were handed to him by the priest. These contained nothing out of the ordinary, though the Book of Hours in each one was evidently quite new and unused as yet. The clergyman was in his bland French way most affable to the officer.

As he bent over in conversation with this courteous gentleman, he caught sight for the first time of the faces of two of the nuns who, from under their voluminous head coverings, were intently watching his movements. Of their Mongolian extraction there could be no doubt, and the officer probably showed the effect upon his mind of this discovery by his too expressive countenance, for when the train next stopped, having doubled back again into Canadian territory, the priest raising in his place made a signal to his friends and with them left the car.

THE PARTY ARRESTED.

A few hours later the whole party was arrested while tramping along near Troy, Vt., by officers of the United States customs. A short search revealed a natty queue neatly coiled away under each wimple and veil of the nuns, and also the fact that four of the six were males. The supposed priest, whose language was rather unclerical under the provocation, most unwillingly doled out the fines and the amount of the duties upon such commodities as Chinese men and women, and returned to Montreal by the next train.

It was pretty evident that he was a professional "Chinese steerer" who had guaranteed—for no doubt a good large consideration—to conduct the party safely into the land of the free.

The capture had been kept as quiet as possible, in the hope that the illicit percolation of Chinese into the United States from Canada might be diminished. Within the last three weeks it has happened that on two other routes the same ruse has been discovered, and in consequence the religious disguise appears now to have been discarded.

It is noticeable at the present moment that Chinese laundries are being established in several of the villages within ten or fifteen miles and on either side of the Maine and Vermont boundaries. Already in one Canadian village some of the boys, who, as is usual in small places, take a keen interest in the doings of strangers, have remarked that when one of the Celestials visits Montreal, two return, and at the Post Office and at the hotel here all kinds of theories are advanced as to what becomes of the visitors.

DEPOTS FOR CHINESE.

In all probability these laundries are merely depots for the use of smugglers of Chinese, the surprising resemblance between these foreigners making it exceedingly difficult to keep tally on those arriving and departing. But given dark nights and bad weather and it is not difficult for the Chinese contraband to smuggle themselves across the imaginary line between the two countries.

If the roads are watched there are the fields, and the whole boundary cannot be watched. And when once in the United States and domiciled with some compatriot washerman — who would pass for his own twin brother—no matter how suspicious he may be, it is about as easy for a wide-awake customs official to catch a Chinaman as it is to find the proverbial needle in a bottle of hay.

A farmer near Pigeon Hill lately heard his mastiff having an argument with some one in one of his fields at night. Next day he found a loose coat made of dark glazed material lying at the door of the dog's kennel. What had become of the Chinaman to whom it had belonged has not transpired. But the farmer's next-door neighbor farms United States soil, so that it may be taken for granted that Uncle Sam received an immigrant that night who lacked the upper portion of his attire.

DIAMOND DYES

For the Home in Spring Time

In thousands of homes throughout this vast Dominion, mothers and daughters are working merrily and happily with Diamond Dyes.

Last year's faded and dingy dresses, skirts, blouses, capes, jackets, as well as children's and men's suits, are being transformed into new and handsome garments for spring wear. This home dyeing work saves scores of dollars annually in economizing families.

Success in home dyeing is only assured and guaranteed when the Diamond Dyes are used. The use of crude, common and imitation package dyes is a danger and a source of loss to all who unfortunately use them.

Send a post card with your address if you desire to secure the full range of Diamond Dye Mat and Rug Patterns. The Wells & Richardson Co., Limited, 200 Mountain street, Montreal, P.Q., will mail these novel designs free of cost.

Elegant New Sleeping Cars Between Toronto and Montreal

The Grand Trunk have recently arranged with the Pullman Company to place in service on their express trains running between Montreal and Toronto, three elegant new sleeping cars. Each of these cars contain twelve sections and drawing room. The interior decorations are considered by experienced travellers the most artistic in use. The cars have to be seen in order to realise the high perfection the art of car building has attained.

Slowly Dying From Catarrh

Thousands are in this terrible condition but don't realise their danger. If you have the slightest taint of catarrh, would it not be wise to commence Catarrhozone treatment now and be perfectly cured in a short time? This pleasant remedy cures without the use of drugs, atomizers or snuffs. You inhale the medicated vapor which spreads to all parts of the breathing organs, kills the germs and heals the inflamed surfaces. Catarrhozone clears the throat and nose instantly, and never fails to clear the most obstinate catarrhal, lung and throat troubles. A trial will demonstrate the value of Catarrhozone, which sells for $1, small size 25c., at druggists or Polson & Co., Kingston, Ont.

SECRET CABLE FROM MILNER.

British Feeling Optimistic Regarding Peace in South Africa

London, April 1. — The general feeling here regarding prospects of peace in South Africa in the near future is very optimistic. A long cable despatch [redacted] er of the House of Commons; Sir Michael Hicks-Beach, Chancellor of the Exchequer; the Marquis of Lansdowne, Foreign Secretary; and the Marquis of Salisbury, Prime Minister. A copy was also sent to the Duke of Devonshire, the Liberal-Unionist leader in the Ministry, who is in Paris. These members of the Government form with Mr. Chamberlain the Executive section of the Cabinet.

It is pointed out that Lord Milner could not have been acquainted with the attitude of former President Steyn and Christian De Wet when he cabled. All the information available here agrees that if Christian De Wet and Mr. Steyn remain irreconcilable the Transvaalers will refuse to continue the fight, which would mean surrender on the terms of Louis Botha, Delarey and two-thirds of the Boers now in the field.

The British people are anxious for peace and any honorable terms short of Boer independence will satisfy even Imperialists and expansionists. Peace cannot be negotiated without much delay and argument, but there is little doubt that the victors will be magnanimous if the Boers abandon the demand for nationality and allow the blood-stained map of South Africa to be painted all British red, as Cecil Rhodes would have said.

WESSELS ON PEACE.

Paris, April 1.—During an interview with a representative of The Journal, Boer Delegate Wessels recently returned from the United States, expressed the belief that "a satisfactory, if not an ideal peace, is drawing near." Independence must be expected, however, he said. Mr. Kruger would approve of an honorable peace, arranged by Mr. Schalkburger. Referring to the recent death of Cecil Rhodes, Mr. Wessels said that while he considered Rhodes as the evil genius of the Transvaal, the war would undoubtedly have come just the same.

INFORMATION WANTED.

Melbourne, April 1. Premier Barton has telegraphed Lord Kitchener asking for particulars of the execution of Australian officers for having shot unarmed Boer prisoners. Official details are anxiously awaited here.

RHODES OR THOMPSON.

[redacted] r published on Saturday, signed "One Who Knows," claims that A. R. Thompson, millionaire member for Wynberg, Cape Colony, and [redacted] from the natives the concessions which made the Lobengula treaty a possibility, and secured the country now known as Rhodesia to the British Crown.

RHODES' FUNERAL.

Cape Town, March 31. — For several hours yesterday the people filed past the bier of Cecil Rhodes, lying in state at his Cape Town residence. It is estimated that fifteen thousand persons viewed the remains. A large number of floral tributes were deposited about the coffin.

DANGEROUSLY ILL.

Ottawa, March 31.— Lord Minto has been notified that Trooper William Ludlaw Wright, S. A. C., was dangerously ill at Vet River on March 26th. His father is J. L. Wright, 54 Guilford street, St. John West, N. B.

Items of Interest

London, March 31.—Parliament has dispersed for the Easter holiday with plenty of food for reflection in connection with the Education and Irish Land Bills. Most significant as regards the former is the fact that the Church party is jubilant that the Church at last has been relieved from the burden of the elementary church schools, without the latter passing under the direct control of the ratepayers. The Church will, through the nominated members of each local educational body, retain a large and probably predominant say, while teachers and training colleges are left untouched; that is to say, are left almost entirely in the hands of the Church.

Before this bill emerges from Parliament it probably will be made compulsory instead of optional that municipal bodies shall take over board schools and Church schools alike, thus creating one central educational authority in each district. That will be a great gain for English education.

The Irish Land Bill pleases the Nationalists far more than the Tories. It marks a certain step towards the extermination of Irish landlordism of the old style, and promises greatly to facilitate the transfer of land to the tenants by making the Government itself a general intermediary with the landlord, while even the Nationalists welcome the clause enabling the present landlord to buy back his actual home demesne, leaving the rest of the estate for sale. "We want," they say, "to get rid of landlordism, not the landlord." The Tory reception of the bill will depend largely upon Mr. Wyndham's acceptance of coercion against boycotting and intimidation, but he still believes in the efficacy of the ordinary law. T. W. Russel and his Ulster tenant supporters accept the bill without believing that any remedy will be effectual short of the compulsory buying out of the landlords.

DEATHS FROM CHOLERA

Jedda, Arabia, April 1.—During the past week there were 228 deaths from cholera at Mecca, and 61 at Jedda.

RUSSIANS LANDED RIFLES

Bombay, April 1.—It is asserted here that the Russian subsidized steamer Korniloff, on her last visit to the Persian Gulf, landed 60,000 rifles at Bender Abbas, a seaport of Persia, on the Persian Gulf, at the most northerly part of the Strait of Ormus.

FRENCH GENERAL ELECTIONS

New York, April 1. — Private advices from members of Tolstoi's immediate family say that the philosopher seems to be too much weakened by his late illness to ever regain even a shadow of his former health and strength. For three months or longer, his pulse has been irregular, and of late became weaker and weaker. Insomnia is adding to his other sufferings.

WAILS FROM THE GREEN ISLE OVER THE SEAS

Government Charged with War of Corruption and Debauchery

CAPTURE OF GENERAL METHUEN SAVED IRELAND.

John Dillon Congratulated on His Recent Action in the Commons in Regard to Mr. Chamberland

London, April, 1. — The Times' Dublin correspondent says that at a meeting of the Dublin Harbor Divisional Executive of the United Irish League it was resolved to congratulate John Dillon on his recent action in the Commons. Alderman Farrell, in proposing the resolution, said nothing less strong than Dillon's words would describe the opinion of the Irish in regard to "Mr. Judas Chamberlain." Dillon's language expressed the contempt with which the Irish treated Chamberlain and a Government which was carrying on a war of corruption and debauchery.

The Castlereagh (County Roscommon) Board of Guardians on Saturday passed a resolution condemning the Roscommon grand jury for calling attention to the dangerous state of the country. The chairman said they might thank the gallant Boers that coercion was not now in force. The capture of Methuen had averted coercion from Ireland.

KING EDWARD'S DIFFICULTIES AND CORONATION

Fancies of the King and Queen of and the Delay They Have Caused in the Preparation of Arrangements

London, March 31,—King Edward has had great difficulty to induce the Archbishop of Canterbury to shorten and simplify the ritual of coronation, says a special despatch to the New York World.

In the first place, the King wished the ceremony to occupy not more than forty-five minutes. But the Most Rev. Dr. Temple, supported by other ecclesiastical authorities, has insisted on retaining several ancient customs, so the ceremony will take ninety minutes.

On one point the King is adamantine — he absolutely refuses to take communion. This has caused the Primate deep chagrin, and it is likely to provoke unfavorable comment, because it is common report that the King never has partaken of the communion according to the Anglican rite. The Bishops of Bath and Durham have insisted upon their rights to support the crown on the King's head after coronation, an assistance the king wanted to dispense with.

After a prolonged protest from the King the Primate has decided that the King must submit to being anointed on the breast as well as on the forehead and the chin, with holy oils, and is having a slit made in the coronation robes to permit this to be done.

As Queen Alexandra positively refuses to have her face anointed, the holy oils are being prepared in the form of solid chrism, like wax, for the Primate refused to forego that part of the rite.

COLOUR OF QUEEN'S ROBES.

Further trouble and delay have been caused by the Queen's fancies in regard to the colour of her coronation robes and the set of her crown. Thirty crowns of the Gothic pattern prescribed by the King were submitted to her but she left for Denmark without having picked one out.

Being a Consort, Queen Alexandra will not wear any regal robes in the technical sense of the term. That is to say, though her gown will be of royal purple, there will be no badge on it.

Underneath the robe she will wear a white silk dress embroidered with white lace, while the Garter ribbon will be conspicuous.

The Queen does not consider the colour of her robe the most becoming that could have been chosen for her. Her own wish was for white or red.

But purple is the prescribed colour and only one shade of that is permissible, despite the wide range of tints which the colour offers.

For instance, there is the Tyrian dye, which is as rosy in effect as the "purple" of a cardinal, as the "red" is often called. Her Majesty, however, is not to be allowed this laxity, for the purple in which she is to appear will be of a decided violet tint.

White coronation robes, which the Queen is known to prefer, have been worn on three notable occasions, and, curiously enough each royal wearer has come to a violent end.

EARLY CORONATIONS.

Richard II. was crowned in white satin, while the unfortunate Henry VI. also wore a white coronation robe. When Charles I. came to be crowned, and his intention to wear a white coronation robe became known, the Earl of Pembroke strove strongly to dissuade him from his purpose, but to no effect.

Queen Alexandra, besides having the Order of the Garter, is Grand Mistress of the Order of the Crown of India, and also of the Order of Victoria and Albert.

The removal of the royal valuables from Marlborough House to Buckingham Palace, where the King and Queen will go into residence after Easter, is being carried out with extraordinary precautions. They will fill 60 large furniture vans. Each van will be sealed before leaving Marlborough House on its 400-yard journey to the palace, and will be accompanied by the Master of the King's Household, Lord Farquhar, in whose presence the seal will be broken at the palace and the contents carried to the royal apartments.

The King has issued a peremptory order that all officials and servants employed in royal residence shall be vaccinated, because a coachman of his cousin, Prince Edward of Saxe-Weimar, contracted smallpox after refusing to be vaccinated.

Simultaneously an order was made that every one employed in or frequenting the House of Parliament shall be re-vaccinated, except members, who are not subject to compulsion. This order affects 1,200 persons of all grades.

Kingston, Jamaica, April 1.—Large numbers of Haytian refugees are arriving here, in consequence of the political upheaval in Hayti. They say the situation is serious, and that trouble is certain to occur soon.

ATLANTIC PASSENGER ARRESTED

Queenstown, April 1. — On the arrival here this morning of the Dominion Line steamer Merion, which sailed from Boston March 22 for Liverpool, a saloon passenger named Karl Robstead, alias Edward Meyer, was arrested. He is wanted in New York on a charge of theft. The magistrate before whom the prisoner was brought remitted the case to the Bow Street Police Court London.

IRVING REACHES PLYMOUTH.

London, April 1. — The Atlantic [redacted] er Minneapolis, [redacted] New York March [redacted] ar rived at Plymouth [redacted] Irving and Ellen Terry, who are passengers on the vessel, remained on board of her, and will land at London to-day.

London, April 1.—Fogs on the coast to-day have resulted in a number of minor mishaps to shipping. The French brig Rosela, bound for Newfoundland, and having on board a crew of 31 men, was wrecked on the rocks west of St. Catharines, Isle of Wight. The crew were safely landed.

El Paso, Texas, April 1.—The usual Sunday bull fight at Juarez, Mexico, was accompanied by a somewhat unusual feature the goaded animals turning the tables on the matador. Several bulls had been brought into the arena, but the amusement they furnished was rather tame from a Mexican standpoint. There were many Americans among the spectators, who were somewhat disgusted with the brutal show as horse after horse was gored by the tormented bulls, while the picadors and matadors escaped scathless.

This was all changed, however, when Jarilgo, the premier matador, was preparing to thrust his long, double-edged sword into the heart of the fifth bull which had faced him. It stood in the centre of the arena, bleeding from many wounds. Suddenly the bull made a quick lunge forward. So unexpected was the attack that the fighter was unable to make the customary side-step. He was caught on the bull's horns in the middle of the body and tossed about like a toy balloon. Before he could be rescued Jarilgo's clothing was literally stripped from his body and his right leg and hip was severely lacerated. It probably will prove his last bull fight as it is not thought that he will be able to step into the arena again as a matador.

As the bull tossed the man high in the air, receiving his body on its horns only to again toss it up, the Americans among the spectators cheered the animal loudly, which called forth a storm of hisses from the Mexicans present, and for a time it looked as though there would be a collision between the two races.

BASKETBALL.

The junior Y.M.C.A. basketball team played the West End Y.M.C.A. team of Toronto in that city yesterday afternoon. During their tour, the local team has had the best of luck until the game yesterday when they were defeated by a score of 46—5.

The Ottawa basketball team play the local senior team in the Y.M.C.A. hall here to-night. As this will be the last game of the season, the attendance should be large. On account of the heavy expense in bringing the team here an admission fee will be charged. The local team are in good shape, but they will have a hard proposition before them to-night.

The teams will line up as follows:

Peterborough—Defence, Ross, Dobbie Will Campbell; Centre, Fred Smith; Forwards, Sandford Hall and George Robertson.

Ottawa—Defence, Lamb, Musgrove; centre, J. Watt; forwards Merritt and Hill.

Referee—Horace Ayers.

CRICKET

The annual meeting of the Peterborough Colts Cricket Club will be held in the Y.M.C.A. on Friday evening next at 8 o'clock. A large attendance of the members of the club is requested.

The Cause of Dyspeptic Pains

They arise from the formation of gas owing to improper digestion. A very prompt and efficient remedy is Polson's Nerviline. It relieves the distention instantly, and by its stimulating action on the stomach aids digestion. Nerviline cures dyspeptic pains by removing the cause. Nerviline is also highly recommended for cramps, colic, summer complaint and inflammation. Sold in large 25c. bottles everywhere.

RUSSIA AND JAPAN

Affairs look equally in the Farthest East. The cable has been warm with reports of Russian activity in the direction of Corea and Japan. Troops are being hurried forward to reinforce the Russian ships in Port Arthur and Vladivostock, which together, it is said, could not cope with the Japanese fleet. If war is to come, it is Japan's interest to strike soon. And she has the motive ready, in the repeated violation by Russia of the protocol of 1898, pledging her to abstain from all interference in the internal affairs of Corea. The Japs assert that under Russian influence the so-called Emperor of Corea forbade the Japanese to land cables on his territory, and ordered his port to be closed against shipments of rice to meet the scarcity in Japan. It should be understood that almost all Corean exports go to Japan, and that of these, about 70 per cent. of foodstuffs for man or beast. As their principal purveyor of food products, as an outlet for their surplus population and as the occupant of a strategic position commanding their inland sea, Corea is indispensable to the Japanese, and the attempt of its ruler, acting under Russian advice, to wall them out of his country could not be safely tolerated. Moreover, the Russian Minister of Seoul is known to have been for some time endeavoring to secure the session of a harbor at the south-eastern angle of the Corean peninsula, and although his negotiations have been ostensibly disavowed by his Government, it is believed that they are secretly continued. So much for the pretext. It would suffice, in the eyes of the Mikado Ministers, to justify them in claiming that the protocol of 1898 has been broken, and in proceeding to occupy the Corean peninsula. If a move in that direction were now made, Russia would, of course, try to thwart it, and the question to consider is whether she could succeed in doing so. The conclusion arrived at by close observers is, that were England to hold France from lending aid to Russia, the Japanese would be strong enough to defeat Russia, and take possession of Corea. In that case the value of Port Arthur, in the Pe-chi-li Gulf, and the new Russian port of Dalny, a city which has been built to order, would be very much diminished.

CANADA AS A WAR POWER

One of the results of the South African war will be a large increase in the Canadian military establishment, if the project of War Secretary Brodrick for the training of armies in India, Australia and Canada for the defence of the realm at all points be carried out. The Colonies have contributed importantly to the British strength in South Africa. The military value of the possessions has been revealed, and before their militant spirit cools, measures will be taken to enlarge materially their military establishments for self-defence, or if need be, to aid the mother country in foreign wars. The organization of the military resources of the colonies as proposed will require the consent of the colonies that enjoy home rule. War Secretary Brodrick's programme provides that Canada shall raise four army corps, or 150,000 men. The present military establishment of Canada consists of 40,000 men, all told. There is an active militia of volunteers numbering 38,000, and a little standing army of 1021 officers and men and 226 horses. The standing army is scattered over a vast territory.

The four army corps would probably appear, and that the Brodrick proposition will be approved by the Canadian people, with the possible exception of the Province of Quebec. As to this province, a writer remarks:

"Since the French-Canadians became British subjects they have not been backward in bearing arms in defence of their own land * * * but they are not British imperialists, and naturally they care little about the defences of the outposts of the Empire as long as they themselves are left in peace. The sending of the Canadian contingents to South Africa was not popular in Quebec."

The relation of Quebec to the other provinces is not harmonious. She desires the control of public utilities, [illegible] and forests, and to enact [illegible] vital proposition has been submitted to the Quebec Legislature declaring that the right to veto the acts of the Provincial Legislature shall be given to the Imperial Government of Great Britain. The final effect of the proposed legislation might be to dismember Canada, certainly to curtail greatly the powers of the Dominion Parliament. Whether the proposition to increase the military establishment of the Dominion vastly will add to the unrest in Quebec remains to be seen.

Humor of the Hour.

Now, Mr. Rivers loved Miss Brooks, and she returned his passion;
So they were wed, and it was not a marriage just for fashion.
For, strange as it may seem to be (as seldom thus it goes),
Their married life most peacefully with-

"Robson, do you know why you are like a donkey?"

"Like a donkey?" echoed Robson, opening his eyes wide. "I don't."

"Because your better half is stubbornness itself."

The jest pleased Robson immensely, for he at once saw the opportunity of a glorious dig at his wife. So when he got home he said:—

"Mrs. Robson, do you know why I am like a donkey?"

He waited a moment, expecting his wife to give it up. But she didn't. She looked at him somewhat pityingly as she answered, "I suppose it's because you were born so."—Chicago Journal.

"Working for a bank," replied Willie. "Got a good job."

"Watcher got in the satchel?" asked the messenger boy, scrutinizing a little handbag that Willie carried.

"Hist, don't say a word. I'm scared to death."

"What is it, dynamite?" asked the messenger boy in alarm.

"Naw, it's money."

"Gee, money! How much?"

"Two thou'. I'm carrying it down to another bank, and I'm scared."

"Scared," whispered the bank messenger, and he continued on his way.—New York Tribune.

"The gravity which is supposed to attend all court proceedings was seriously disturbed in a New York court room one day last week," said a young lawyer who had just returned from a business trip to that city. "I was present at the trial of a case before one of the municipal Judges—a case in which I was interested because it had to do with automobiles. One of the witnesses was a German, and gave his testimony through an interpreter. In the course of the examination he said he had driven an automobile to Cedarhurst.

Current History.

Current History for February presents a record of the world's events during December last and closes the eleventh volume of this valuable chronicle. A striking portrait of Secretary Hay is the frontispiece of this number, to accompany an opening article by Joseph Fitzgerald, entitled "The New Treaty and Secretary Hay." The contents in general deal with Congress and the President's message, the South African war, the United States in China's crisis, the Supreme Court decisions respecting the Philippines, the Pan-American Congress, South American matters, Lord Rosebery's Chesterfield speech, Marconi's triumph, etc. Price $1.50 a year. Beginning with the March number a new department entitled "Literary Chronicle," conducted by Nathan Haskell Dole, will be added to the magazine, considerably increasing its value. Other important additions to the corps of writers are being made. Sample copy free on application. Address Current History Co., Boston, Mass.

A remedy suggested for scours in lambs or sheep is to give them two fresh raw eggs. Repeat in twelve hours if relief does not come. This is worth cutting out and pasting in your scrapbook. Insect powder dusted into the wool is recommended for sheep ticks. A pound will dust from ten to fifteen sheep effectively. Avoid buying large, coarse boned rams to mate with small ewes. Size should be attained gradually and in accordance with the correct principles of breeding. A sheep will stand severe cold so long as kept dry and out of draughts. A wet fleece becomes a good heat conductor and absorbs bodily heat until [illegible] thoroughly chilled.—Shepherd.

Remarkable Surgery.

One of the most astonishing feats of surgery to date, though we are getting accustomed to these marvels, was exhibited at the recent surgical conference at Lyons, France. The subject was a young man whose larynx had been removed and replaced by an artificial one of hard rubber. "The natural glottis and vocal cords," says a French journal from which the Literary Digest translates, "are replaced by a thin rubber diaphragm with a slit in it. As the size and tension of this diaphragm are always the same, it can vibrate in only one way and produce but a single note. The man's voice, therefore, never varies in pitch, and is much like the voice of Mr. Punch; but as the modifications of the voice which produce vowels and consonants are due to motions of the palate, tongue and teeth, which parts remain intact, the subject can speak distinctly, though always in the same tone. Above the rubber larynx is a metal sieve, which prevents the entrance of solid food into the larynx and breathing-tubes. Liquids which trickle in are led away by a tube connecting the rubber larynx with the esophagus or gullet. There is still another tube which comes out in the front of the neck. This enables the subject to breathe more freely than he could do through his artificial glottis and gives this a rest. When he wishes to speak, he stops the hole in his neck with his finger."

Sandwichmen's Banquet.

There is an annual gathering at the Lambeth Baths, London, Eng., during the Christmas holiday week which is well on its way towards becoming one of the historic celebrations of the great British capital. Certainly it is of a kind that would be possible nowhere else. It is the annual banquet to the London sandwichmen. Organized originally by the proprietors of Reynolds' newspaper, it is, perhaps, one of the most grateful of festivals in Yuletide benevolence the world over, largely because its recipients are the human flotsam and jetsam of the greatest mass of humanity congregated in one spot on the earth. Reynolds has the first right to describe it, and the report of the proceedings in that newspaper has a flavor of Dickens' London that makes it good reading:—

An air of expectation hung over and possessed the crowd which thronged around the doors of the Lambeth Baths at about six o'clock on Monday night. This expectation was the child of knowledge. These men, or at least many of them, knew what awaited them. Their nostrils had been already invaded by savory odors and they were glad in the belief that huge joints of beef, legs of mutton, loins and legs and briskets of pork, with vegetables galore, with hot steaming Christmas pudding and delicately-flavored mince pies awaited them. They knew that they would be able to wash this goodly fare down with honest ale, or that, if they preferred, they would be permitted to quaff the innocuous ginger beer. They knew, too, that they would afterwards be invited to smoke sound tobacco—for the great tobacconists who contribute to this feast never send aught but the good leaf—out of a homely pipe. They knew, moreover, that while they did this they would be listening to good music and merry humor and witnessing clever art. They were finally ecstasied in their anticipation by the sure and certain hope that when they quitted the hall they would carry with them a gift of clothing, including a warm, cosy, cardigan jacket, a packet of tea, a briar-wood pipe, and—laugh not, ye Philistines; it meant Christmas comfort to these men—a florin coined in his Majesty's own mint. Was it any wonder that these poor fellows, possessed by the sure and certain knowledge of sure and certain good cheer, counted, as the poet says, "the weary beatings of the clock?"

They did not allow their anxiety to hurry them into indecorum. When at last the doors were thrown open they marched to their seats as quietly and with as excellent an obedience to the usages of courtesy as even the estimable Jeames Yellowplush would desire. There was no scurrying, no scuffling. It was a procession of well-contained men. A genial, good-tempered officer stood at the inner door, with one or two other men in uniform beside him; but their services were never required. A cheery "Pass on, my lads," from the sergeant was sufficient to quicken the procession, and a good-natured warning was sufficient to check it. The savory smell which had defied bricks and mortar and flavored the very atmosphere of the street had now become a comforting, assured fact. The great doors of the kitchen were open; and the guests caught glimpses of white-aproned and becapped cooks hoisting up from cavernous saucepans veritable mountains of well-cooked, honest English meat. The sight was the hors d'oeuvre of the feast. These men wanted afterwards no stimulant to a jaded appetite. They revealed—most of them—a fine Falstaffian capacity.

Skimmilk as Food for Hogs.

I regard skimmilk as a valuable part of the hog ration, worth at least 20 cents a hundred pounds, when mixed with grain, either whole or ground. That is, if a dollar's worth of feed be used for hogs, 20 cents' worth, or one hundred pounds, of skimmilk would make the ration more valuable than if the whole dollar was used for grain, with only water instead of skimmilk.

This skimmilk keeps the hog healthy, and therefore thrifty, preventing constipation and its attending evils, especially swine plague or hog cholera, the dread of all farmers raising hogs. In fact, I cannot recall a case of hog cholera or other disease among hogs where skimmilk formed a good part of the hog ration. I have in mind notably the case of one of our station patrons who recently sold a nice, thrifty hog in this market, weighing some four hundred pounds, fed and raised wholly on skimmilk from this station, which shows that we can make porkers equal to the best grain fed, and more healthy than those fed on grain alone. If this result of feeding skimmilk can be obtained in one instance, why can it not be obtained in many and by any farmer?—J. M. Crowley, in Kansas Farmer.

"Johnnie," said his mother to the incorrigible, "I am going to have your father whip you when he comes home tonight!"

Mrs. Query—Isn't she a member of your club?

Mrs. Gadabout—Not any more. We had to get rid of her or she would have disorganized us.

Mrs. Query—You don't say?

Mrs. Gadabout—Yes; at one of our sessions we were discussing the servant girl question, and she said the best way to solve the problem was for all of us to stay at home and do our own work.—Philadelphia Press.

The last child, who presently finds his way home in the policeman's protecting arms, is hugged to his mother's heart with a new joy. But the mother's heart is empty as her arms when her children are lost for life. How many a woman goes through such an experience, appealing in vain for help to local doctors, who confess that they are "puzzled" to understand the cause of the trouble.

In similar cases Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription has been used with such success that its record commends it to every woman whose children fail of vitality. "Favorite Prescription" gives the mother strength to give her child. It strengthens the female organism, giving great elasticity to the organs of maternity, and making the baby's advent practically painless. It is the true woman's medicine, establishing regularity, drying weakening drains, and healing inflammation.

"I can cheerfully recommend Doctor Pierce's Favorite Prescription as the best medicine for women," writes Mrs. Mary Murdoch, of 302 Taylor St., Topeka, Kansas. "I am the mother of ten children and only one living—the tenth one. She is one year old and is as well and hearty as can be. She is a beauty. Of my other babies, some were born at right time, but died; others were premature births; one lived to be one year old, but she was always feeble. I tried different doctors, but none of them could tell what my trouble was. They said I was well and strong. I was examined by surgeons, but they found nothing wrong, and they were puzzled to know what my trouble was. I did not know what to do, so I thought this last time I would try Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. I took it the entire nine months and now I have a fine baby girl, and I cannot praise your medicine enough for the good it did me."

Coats of mail are now being manufactured from papier-mache that cannot be distinguished from real antique armor. According to the wishes of the customer, the armor can be turned out bright steel, silver and gold inlay, hammered brass, rusty iron or malachite. As described by the New York "Evening Post," the new goods are calculated to deceive the best critics, and to give all the satisfaction of the genuine coat of mail. They are warranted not to break easily or to cut any unfortunate guest upon whom they may happen to fall. All descriptions of armor can be had. The new invention has aroused the anger of the dealers in antique armor, who declare that it is intended to ruin their trade.

A well-known English firm of tobacconists are giving away in their packets of cigarettes a small map of the Klondike district. It is colored red, and the words "British Territory" are printed upon it in large letters. On the back is found the following little history of the gold fields: "There is no doubt that the Klondike district is the richest gold field yet discovered. It comprises some 192,000 square miles, mostly in British territory, and although mining has been going on steadily for the past ten years, it was only in August, 1896, that the extraordinary richness of the diggings was discovered." We have been accustomed to portraits of fat women and popular heroes for so long that the novelty is as pleasant as it is instructive.

Where He Failed.

The young man drew himself up to his full height.

"I have," he cried, "an unsullied character, an ardent heart, a versatile mind and strenuous biceps."

The young girl yawned and seemed interested. He was quick to push his advantage.

"I am the possessor of a town and country house, a yacht, a stable of thoroughbreds and a box at the opera."

She hesitated, and a slight flush betrayed that she was listening.

"I have got," he continued with a certain fierceness, "thirty servants, forty pairs of trousers, fifty ancestors, three automobiles, six prize bull pups and an army commission."

Ah! she had found her tongue at last.

"And how many golf medals?" she lisped.

The young man shuddered.

He felt that he had lost. He had played nervily and high, but she was above his limit.—"Waverley Magazine."

Mrs. Fitz-Candle—Ah, me! There was a time when you always called me "Daisy;" now it's "Mrs. Fitz-Candle," as if I were the merest stranger to you. Fitz-Candle—Found out my mistake, my dear. Daisies shut up at night. You don't.—"Pick-Me-Up."

Stuck to It.

In a school for colored children there was a little boy who would persist in saying "have went." The teacher kept him in one night and said: "Now, while I am out of the room you may write 'have gone' fifty times." When the teacher came back he looked at the boy's paper, and there was "have gone" fifty times. On the other side was written: "I have went home."

A Day's Fishing.

THE fishing season having now positively begun, I think I will go down to the deep waters and try my luck. The great mistake made by so many fishermen is that they are lacking in the necessary patience for success in their hobby. Very often, after a man has sat for two or three days waiting in vain for a bite, he begins to feel the monotony a little tiring, and wants to throw up the whole enterprise. The enthusiastic angler, however, never allows himself to grow weary. He will wait three weeks for a bite, and when the exciting moment comes, he wrenches his prize out of the water and feels that he has not lived in vain. When you have once cast your bread (or whatever you are using for bait) upon the waters, you should be prepared to stand by and see the thing through if it takes all summer.

No angler expects to be landing fish all the time. As a matter of fact, the biggest fish are never completely landed at all. If you have ordinary luck you will land a few average-sized wrigglers, but you can't very well make them any bigger than they are, and your friends can size up their dimensions at a glance; whereas the fish that you hooked out of the water, but couldn't manage to finally land, grows every time you talk about it. This fish is well known to expert anglers. Its dimensions are only limited by the powers of imagination possessed by the operator. Most anglers will let it go with a weight of about twenty to thirty pounds avoirdupois; and the man who insists upon anything bigger than that must choose his audience very carefully in these knowing times. I have no sympathy with the man who hooks a fish that tries to wrestle him on to his back as it flies out of the water, or that aims crushing blows at his head with its off-side fin. And when that kind of man tells you that he fought three rounds with his prize in the endeavor to down it so that he could bring it away with him, you should not trust yourself to a comment on the narrative. That kind of man is wasting his talents on a modest job like angling. He ought to have been a political journalist.

When you have cast your line, you should sit by quietly and wait for the results. That delightful old prig, Izaak Walton, laid it down as a rule that anglers should avoid swearing, lest they be heard and catch no fish. It is not very clear to me why a man who has settled down by the water's edge for a day's fishing should want to swear. I don't see, in any of the hand-books on the craft, any hints that swearing has ever been considered half as useful as a wriggling worm for fishing purposes. As far as I can see, a man might stand by a stream and profane steadily for several hours without getting any more bites in consequence. If a fish will not bite at a tempting hook, I should doubt very much whether it will do so because somebody on the bank is referring to its ancestry in disrespectful terms, and is casting rather red aspersions on its moral character. The injunction as to swearing appears quite unnecessary, but dear old Izaak couldn't help preaching a little in between the bites.

After waiting a little while and looking at your float, you will probably see it begin to bob up and down. This either means that something is biting at the hook, or else that an empty sardine tin has got mixed up with your line. You must let the bobbing go on till the float is dragged under water, and then you pull in with both hands, and land the upper portion of a dilapidated boot which someone has left in the stream by an oversight. Fishing is called "the contemplative man's recreation," chiefly, I believe, on account of the very weird things that the average angler is called upon to contemplate in the course of a day's skirmish with the wonders of the deep.

Many anglers, however, do not recommend the practice of sitting down and fixing the eye on the bobbing float. After you have thrown out your line, you open the lunch basket and take out the first bottle. Then you light a pipe and take a glance or so at your float to make sure that it isn't bobbing. By that time you will be ready for the second bottle. When the second bottle has been properly and truly dealt with, the float will bob a good deal oftener than might be expected; but you don't need to take notice of low conduct like that. If a gentleman can't sit down by the water's edge and take a little light refreshment without being guyed by a mere decorative quill, it's hard luck, that's all.

By the time you have got on to the fourth bottle, you will begin to realise what a thoroughly enjoyable sport this angling business is. You will begin to wonder at first what bounder has been and thrown his line alongside yours, as there are two floats to be distinctly seen. You need not, however, bother about that. After all, you didn't come down to the water for what you could catch; but for the jolly sport of thing. Well, there's the fifth bottle ready anyway, and it's thirsty work looking on and waiting for a bite.

Of course, there are anglers who can be carried away by the sport so much as to follow a float with their eyes for a whole day, with scarcely a drop in between. These men will wade through two feet of water, and carry the spare worms in their mouths on the chance of hooking a wriggler that has been hovering about playfully for an hour or two. But this is not the weather for enthusiasm of any kind; and the only thing that you will find to admire in these rabid anglers is that their perspiring activity makes you feel so thirsty that the rest of the bottles can be opened in their right order without waiting. Some anglers reel up their line at the close of the day's sport and take it back home. But after a dozen bottles or so of the best, you won't want to be bothered with any dim nonsense of that kind. Just kick the whole kit into the water, and call for help to enable you to get home again without any bruises. Angling is a grand sport if you know how to take it.—"Pick-Me-Up."

Ivan Turgenev.

In the course of a very charming study of Ivan Turgenev, which is published in the February number of The North American Review, Mr. Charles Whibley strongly deprecates the tendency of some critics to regard the novels of that great literary artist as being political pamphlets. According to that school, Turgenev kept a constant hand upon the public pulse, and symbolized social or political movements in the characters he created. That is the spirit in which one of Turgenev's best known works has been characterized as "a poem of the youth of the Russian democracy," and one of his most attractive heroines as "foreshadowing and standing for the rise of young Russia in the sixties." Mr. Whibley insists that Turgenev preached neither for nor against the new ideas, and was in no way responsible for the political condition of his country. Russia was the material of his art, which he treated with a loftiness of purpose and a sincere impartiality which forbade him ever to play the part of advocate. Referring to the diverse pictures of contemporary Russia presented in the works of Tolstoi, Dostoievsky and Turgenev, Mr. Whibley says:—

"In the generation which is dying today, three masters have lived and worked, who belong not only to their own time and country, but to the literature of all countries and of all times. Turgenev, Dostoievsky, Tolstoi—all three have painted the Russia of their faith and enthusiasm, but in colors so diverse, with a sentiment so contradictory, that when we have read their books we are left with a tangle of hostile impressions. To find a formula which shall express the vision of the three is impossible. Their books are all strange to us—strange pictures of a strange land; the elemental man reveals himself at every turn under the polish of western refinement; but he reveals himself in so dissimilar an aspect that we can do no more than put him in the common class of humanity. If Raskolnikov be a distant cousin of Bazarov, can we regard him even as a vague kinsman to Litvinov, Lepine or Prince Andry? Impossible though it seems, we must accept in a single act of faith the high authority of Turgenev, Dostoievsky and Tolstoi; we must believe that their pictures are the truth seen through the eyes of a various temperament, remembering that in fifty years, when the unessential differences of politics are forgotten, the work of all three may appear harmonious even to the stranger."

Is it a New Dynasty.

IF the authorities in England are unable to determine whether or not a new dynasty has been started with the advent to the throne of King Edward VII., it is hardly to be expected that we should speak with authority on the subject in Canada. But if we can throw light on the question, it is our duty to speak out. The London Daily Chronicle is quite unable to come to any conclusion in the matter. That journal, in its interesting daily causerie, says:—

"It would be interesting to know what warrant the new editions of Peerages and other books of reference have for the statement that a change of dynasty has taken place. Debrett says: 'Upon the death of her Majesty Queen Victoria, which terminated the Hanoverian dynasty, a new one, that of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha (or perhaps better, of Saxony), commenced.' His Majesty sits on the throne not by any right derived from Saxe-Coburg-Gotha or Saxony, but as the direct representative of the House of Hanover, which has reigned over us since 1714. Where, then, the ordinary man asks, is the change of dynasty? Perhaps the learned ones will say."

On this very topic a letter reaches me from a correspondent in Belleville, Mr. W. R. Bigg, who has gone to some trouble to show why the Debrett view of the question is the correct one. It may be added that Debrett's view is also that of that very reliable publication, Whitaker's Almanack in its 1902 issue, and that The Globe recently expressed a doubt whether the King's title did not as a matter of fact derive from his mother, and not from his father, causing him to rank in the House of Brunswick. It is in reply to this point that Mr. Bigg writes. He says:—

"It is through the very fact you mention, 'that the title comes through the female side,' that constitutes the name of the House on the father's side, and each and every precedent in English history confirms it, as the following synopsis will show:—House of Normandy, William the Conqueror, claimed by conquest—House named from the male line. House of Blois, Stephen, claimed through Adela, daughter of William I.—House named from the male line. House of Plantagenet, Henry II., claimed through the mother, Matilda, daughter of Henry I.—House named from the male line. House of Lancaster, Henry IV., claimed through Edward III.—House named from the male side, 'time-honored Lancaster.' House of York, Edward IV., claimed through his great-grandmother, Ann, great-great-granddaughter of Edward III.—House named from the male line. House of Tudor, Henry VII., claimed through Margaret, great-great-granddaughter of Edward III.—House named from the male line, 'Owen Tudor.' House of Stuart, James I., claimed through Margaret, great-granddaughter of Henry VII.—House named from Henry Stuart, third husband of Margaret Tudor. House of Orange, William III., claimed through his mother, Mary, granddaughter of James I.—House named from male line. House of Brunswick, George I., claimed through the mother, Sophia, granddaughter of James I.—House named from male line, Duke of Brunswick and Elector of Hanover. House of Saxe-Coburg and Gotha, Edward VII., claimed through the mother, Victoria, granddaughter of George III.—House named from the male side. The English are great sticklers for 'from precedent to precedent,' on Tennyson's authority, hence to rank Edward VII. as of the House of Brunswick would violate every precedent in English history."

Mr. Bigg's reasoning appears unanswerable to me, and I hope our London contemporary will have its doubts on this question removed as effectually.

The question should be disposed of finally before coronation, as it would never do to have a Sovereign whose second name we are not sure of.

Interesting to Smokers.

A New York Sun editorial the other day was of interest to smokers—even, possibly, to reformers who include in their list the "holy herb nicotian":—

A sacrificial fire has been burning in Clayton, N.J., and the savor of it still tickles Gloucester County nostrils. The Anti-Nicotine Club brought to its rooms all its idols, cigars, cigarettes, pipes, tobacco, and burned them up in the stove. So fierce for the moment is the rage in Clayton against the holy herb nicotian. The case of the Vice-President of the club, Mr. Samuel Turner, is especially glorious or sad, according to the taste and fancy of him who considers it. He is 75; he has smoked for 63 years; with reasonable prudence and longevity he might hope to hold the smokers' record, for this county at least, and puff away in peace and comfort for a whole green century. He throws away the laurel in his grasp. He makes fuel of the comrades of two generations. In the heat and fury of the Clayton anti-nicotine movement he gives up the charmer of pain, the consoler of sadness, the blameless companion of reverie, the silent partner of books, the lubricator of digestion, the fountain of philosophy, the mother of good temper, the nurse of sound old age, the old, faithful, harmless, constant friend.

A boy may toss away his cigarette and a youth his cigar or briarwood, worn for show and ornament rather than for use, and feel no loss. But wait till you come to forty year. Nobody really takes his degree in the first and greatest University of Virginia before that age. His bacon isn't really cured till then. Then he becomes entitled to the freedom of the city of Nicotia. Then, if he has eyes to pierce through the smoke, he begins to see how the world goes round. For instance, what made the Elizabethans great? Tobacco. What made Bismarck great? Tobacco. Take such a philosopher and let him come to sixty year, as he cannot fail to do unless you crush him with automobiles or dynamite. For twenty years more he has worshipped at the fragrant altar. Surely he will not be turned away from it now. Surely he will obey the voice at eve obeyed at prime.

The case of Samuel Turner of Clayton shows what capacity of self-renunciation exists in the bosom of the veteran smoker. But why do people leave off smoking? Well, one reason is that there is a lot of confounded doctors who make it their pleasure to knock youre in the head. They tell you point-blank: "You positively must stop smoking;" and all the time the rascals have cigar cases in their pockets. That's the worst pang of the condemned smoker.

The Guards' New Uniform.

The thirteen hundred Guards who left the other day for South Africa were accoutred in the new uniform which has displaced the khaki, which was the all-prevailing hue at the beginning of the war. Popular interest," said The Times in describing their inspection by the King, "in these ceremonies is as keen to-day as it was when the first contingent departed for the war. Long before noon the approaches to the barracks were crowded with spectators who had not the privilege of admission to the parade ground, and were content to look on from Birdcagewalk and the railings of St. James' Park. It was not an unfavorable morning for such a display. A sharp frost nipped the air and a light mist hung over the park. Within the enclosure was a scene of picturesque activity. Guardsmen, in long grey overcoats and busbies, moved about among the ever-increasing crowd of civilians; bands mustered, and men in the new campaigning uniform paraded for a preliminary inspection by their officers. Smart and serviceable is the judgment that will be passed on the new kit. The color is a blend of khaki and drab—drab tunic, drab breeches, drab putties, and drab hat. The hat is a novelty in shape, being broader and more substantial in appearance than the ordinary soft felt with which we have become familiar. Rakishly looped up at the side—on the right for Grenadiers and Goldstreams, who wear the white and the red hackle; on the left for the Scots, who, instead of hackle, have the tartan badge of white and red—it is not merely a comfortable, but an effective and even picturesque head-dress. And it has this further advantage, that it is not uniform, and, therefore makes men less conspicuous objects for the enemy's rifles. In the early days of the war our soldiers were easily distinguished, even when lying scattered on the drab veldt, because of the uniformity of the helmet, though covered with khaki, whereas the Colonial troops in their soft felt hats were invisible from even a short distance. The accoutrements, however, have little of the quality of invisibility. The bandoliers are of light grey canvas, the belts are white, the haversack is white, the blanket is rolled in a white cover. Only the water-bottle and the cover of the "billy" or canteen which hangs from the shoulder over the blanket are of khaki color. The buttons, too, are of shining brass—buttons that are rarely seen after men have been once under the close fire of Boers. Yet there is this to be said—a few days on the African veldt will tone down the glaring whites to a neutral tint."

His Aplication for Cash.

One of the recent incidents in the invasion of England by the United States has to do with an American boy of the "smart" order. Arising out of an application in court to presume the death of one Alfred Richardson, who had been manager of some cycle works at Middlesbrough, and who had mysteriously disappeared, it was elicited that he had been advertised for in some American papers, and that one reply was received from H. C. Starnes of Virginia, U.S., a boy purporting to be nine years of age, who alleged that the deceased had married his mother in 1888. There were also two enclosures from a man represented to be a County Court Judge. Asked by the solicitors for particulars, the boy further wrote: "If there is a Estate ever thear coming to Alfred Richardson, y of corse that is a coming to me, and I want to get just as I can." Another document came, said to be from a County Court Judge, which began: "This certifies that Mr. H. C. Starnes has brought before me 20 good old citizens of [illegible] country—and proved that his father was Mr. Alfred Richardson." It was signed "[illegible]." The English Judge said it seemed impossible that a County Court Judge anywhere could have written this, and he refused leave to presume the death.

DAISY GORDON'S FOLLY
—OR—
The World Lost for Love's Sake

By Laura Jean Libbey

Author of The Crime of Hallow-E'en, The Flirtations of a Beauty, Willful Gaynell, Little Leafy, Only a Mechanic's Daughter beautiful Lillian Ruthven was openly declared to be the noted criminal's bride, despite her protestations to the contrary; and guilty Daisy trembled in terror as she read. How was this terrible complication of affairs to end?

She never forgot the day she went with her sister Olive to Briarvale to bid Miss Ruthven good-bye.

How she shrank back as she looked at the lovely, pale, proud face, and felt the touch of that slender, jeweled hand.

"I hope you will not believe, Olive, that I am that man's wife, despite the network of circumstances which would make me seem so," said the heiress, weeping. "Oh, Olive! it has blighted my whole life most cruelly. I cannot understand why heaven is punishing me in this unmerited way.

"Is your sister ill?" she added, turning to Olive; "she is as pale as a snowdrop. I will ring for a glass of water."

Her words were affecting poor Daisy beyond endurance.

Should she fall at her feet and cry out that her life should not be blasted, that her own life instead should bear the brunt of the folly of that mad, reckless marriage?

But in the very instant of its conception, the good impulse died out of Daisy's heart. No, no! Matters might go as they were until she could think herself out of the tangled web that had closed in around her.

Faint and dizzy with such a sin on her conscience as to see an innocent girl suffer for what she herself had done, Daisy turned away.

"How foolish of Lillian Ruthven to still persist in denying that marriage," laughed Olive, as the two girls rode home. "Now that the young husband has turned out so bad, no wonder she regrets it. Still, such a piece of audacity in boldly denying it is really outrageous. When the fellow gets out of Sing Sing, he will claim her at once. She ought to know that."

"It will be ten long years before—before he gets out," murmured Daisy, "She—she might die before that time."

"It will be less than eight," declared Olive, "they always take off some for good behavior."

"Would the law compel her to live with him?" asked Daisy, piteously, "even though she hated him, Olive—hated him so bitterly that death would be preferable to her to going with him?"

"She ought to have thought of all that before she married him," replied Olive, shrugging her shoulders. "Of course she will have to go with him."

Olive heard a little, sharp cry, and turning quickly about she saw Daisy lying back on the seat, white as marble.

"What is the matter with you since recently, Daisy?" cried Olive, in amazement. "There's something the matter with you of late; you're swooning all the time."

"It was a pain at my heart, Olive—a sudden, awful pain. I thought it would break in my bosom," moaned Daisy, with a terrible shudder, her teeth chattering and her little hands clutched tightly over her heart.

"If there's any one who seems to need change of scene it's you," frowned Olive. "Why, you act like a person going into quick consumption."

No person ever had more cause, thought Daisy, bitterly.

It was decided that the girls must have a chaperon, and Mrs. Barnett, Mr. Gordon's married sister, was written to and invited to accompany the girls to Cape May; she was only too delighted to accept the invitation.

When Mrs. Barnett reached the farmhouse, she was shocked at the great change in little Daisy, her favorite. Calling her brother aside, she anxiously inquired into the cause of it.

"Why, there's nothing the matter with little Daisy," laughed the farmer, good-naturedly—"nothing in the world."

"She looks to me like one who is nursing a secret grievance," declared his sister, solemnly. "Has she ever had a lover, John?"

The idea seemed so preposterous to Farmer Gordon that he laughed aloud.

"A lover—of course not—the idea of any one speaking of love or lovers in connection with a child of sixteen," he replied.

"But you married her mother when she was only sixteen," persisted his sister. "Daisy is just that age when young girls are apt to be a little romantically inclined—are you sure she cares for no one?"

"As sure as I am of my life!" declared Farmer Gordon. "Why, the child has never been five miles away from the farm in her life—she has seen no one."

"She is greatly changed," commented Mrs. Barnett.

The season was at its height when Mrs. Barnett and her three charges reached Cape May, and, crowded though it was with beauty and fashion, the arrival of three such pretty young girls created quite a flutter of excitement.

"The tallest and darkest one is a beauty," declared a young gentleman to himself who was searching the hotel register, just as soon as they had written their names, to see who they were and where they were from; "and the second one is almost as pretty—but, by Jove! the youngest one, with the big blue eyes—cheeks like dimpled roseleaves, and hair like spun gold, is the most beautiful little creature that I ever beheld, I will try to win her if I can. I have always laughed at the idea of love at first sight; but now I shall believe in it, it is no delusion."

Harry Jocelyn, the son of a millionaire banker, of Boston, paced the porch expectantly all the afternoon, to catch another glimpse of his affinity, as he called Daisy; but much to his disappointment she did not put in an appearance, though her two sisters had come out on the beach.

Nor did he see her at the six o'clock dinner.

"Now that's exceedingly strange," he muttered, impatiently. "I wonder what has become of the pretty little mystery. Why, there is my old college chum, Aleck Hamilton; I wonder what brings him to Cape May after declaring so vehemently that he would not come here with me. By George! he is stopping and shaking hands with the two beauties. He must be well acquainted, judging from his beaming face; and of course he must know the youngest one too; I'll get him to introduce me."

He little dreamed how his path and Aleck Hamilton's were to cross in the near future—and the bitter feud

The Shortcomings of Breadth.

WHEN I was a schoolgirl, with many definite opinions, I remember having a talk with a man of thirty, who happened to advance a theory—I forget about what—which aroused in me ardent dissent. I eagerly presented my view, which was the exact reverse of his, and paused for him to defend himself. He gave me a friendly look; then leaned back and gazed out of the window, with the remark, "Well, there's something in that, too."

I felt as if the bottom had dropped out of the room. For, I thought, if one really hold an opinion, how can he say there is "something in" the contrary view? But since then I have not only had many such experiences; I have myself become an offender. And I wonder if it is altogether a gain. It may be sheer contrariness, but I do get a little tired, sometimes, of broad-mindedness and tolerance, and long for good, bigoted narrowness that can be counted on. I should really like to be told: "No, you're totally wrong; what you have just said is false absolutely. The facts of the case are these, and if you don't believe it, so much the worse for you." How I should enjoy that! But I have not had the experience since my brothers grew up. Occasionally, in desperation, I have assumed the part myself, and taken my stand on positive assertion of a single half truth; but it does no good. I simply live over that early experience; again I am told, "There's something in that, too," and it gives me the feeling, to quote a figure used by a friend in another connection, of having come up against a soft curtain where I expected a wall.

"A plain categorical proposition," says Mr. Morley, "is becoming less and less credible to average minds. Or at least the slovenly willingness to hold two directly contradictory propositions at one and the same time is becoming more and more common." I do not think it is quite this. Men surely used to hold two directly contradictory propositions at one and the same time with the utmost ease. The point is that they did not know they were contradictory, whereas we do; and still we hold them—or rather, entertain them, as one would interesting guests. Our attitude toward every opinion we meet might be expressed thus: "Well, there's something in that, too. Come right in!" And the new opinion comes in, and draws a chair up to the hospitable fire, and finds a friendly circle of other opinions there; they shake hands all round, and each tells the others what good fellows they are.

This is amiable, but, in honesty, I don't like it. It is like the congress of religions, which I have never been able to understand, save on the assumption that each secretly hopes to convert the others by taking them off their guard, or that no one is in earnest about his religion except as regards its common moral basis. The old attitude used to be, "You think differently from me: therefore you're wrong, therefore you're bad, therefore I'll kill you." One by one these clauses have been dropped, beginning with the last one; thus reversing the system of "the House that Jack Built." First we stopped killing the other man, then we stopped thinking he was bad, and now we have nearly stopped thinking he is wrong. May this not be carried too far?—From the "Contributors' Club."

Defeated the Bicyclist.

"GO and hitch up the ostrich," is not at all an absurd command on an ostrich farm. There these great birds are often harnessed to a carriage, and make fairly good substitutes for horses. Although they cannot draw a heavy load, their speed is a recommendation.

At Jacksonville, Florida, there is a bird named Oliver W. that can run a mile in two minutes and twenty-two seconds. His owners claim that he is more satisfactory than a horse because he eats less, never shies at anything, never runs away, and goes steadily at a good pace without lameness or fatigue.

This particular ostrich appears to like his work. When the little carriage is brought out he comes running toward it at full speed, with both wings spread out, ready to have the harness put on.

On one occasion a cyclist tried to pass Oliver W. on a long, smooth stretch of road. He came up behind the carriage, thinking to get ahead and escape the dust. Oliver W. thought differently. He threw his head high in the air, gave a flap with his wings, and went forward with a speed that astonished the cyclist. Putting forth more effort, the latter made another attempt to pass the ostrich, but the faster the pedals of the bicycle moved the faster sped the long legs of the bird.

It so happened that the cyclist had a record as a fast rider, and to be distanced by an ostrich was not to his liking. For two miles he tried to pass his feathered rival, but was then obliged to give up the race, defeated.

Some fast horses have tried conclusions with Oliver W., who seems to like nothing better than testing their speed, starting slowly to make them think it easy to distance him, and then gradually increasing his pace.

Modest Fees.

LAWYERS do not usually get the small end of a bargain with their clients, but the "Green Bag" recalls two incidents where the clients had rather the best of it.

Sir Walter Scott's first client was a burglar. He got the fellow off, but the man declared that he hadn't a penny to give him for his services. Two bits of useful information he offered, however, and with these the young lawyer had to be content. The first was that a yelping terrier inside the house was a better protection against thieves than a big dog outside; and the second, that no sort of lock bothered his craft so much as an old rusty one.

Small compensation as this was, the first brief of the noted French lawyer, Monsieur Rouher, yielded still less. The peasant for whom Monsieur Rouher won the case asked how much he owed him.

"Oh, any two francs," said the modest young advocate.

"Two francs!" exclaimed the peasant. "That is very high. Won't you let me off with a franc and a half?"

"No," said the counsel; "two francs or nothing."

"Well, then," said his client, "I'd rather pay nothing."

And with a bow he left.

A Bad Guess.

A MARVELLOUS MEDICINE

"No Cure, No Pay," is the latest Proposal of the Proprietors of Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills

Editor Morning Times

Sir,—We make the following proposal to the readers of the Times: To any one who is a subject of rheumatism (no matter how long standing), or any blood disease, as enumerated below, and will give Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills a fair trial, and do not find a perfect cure, we will refund the money paid for the pills. If no substantial improvement is observed, we will in addition, pay $10 in cash on satisfactory evidence being supplied as to this effect.

We have yet to know of a single case where these wonderful pills have not been almost entirely successful in effecting a cure. CANADA CHEMICAL CO.

Ex-Ald. Bailey, St. John's, writes: I cannot speak too highly of Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills. They worked a miracle in my case, and cured me after many years of suffering. I do not think their equal is to be obtained.

Dr. Clarke's Little Red Pills are a positive and certain cure for la grippe, rheumatism, asthma, paralysis, catarrh, eczema, coughs, backache, indigestion, all stomach and liver troubles, female complaints, even when the disease have been standing for many years, the most stubborn cases will yield. Price 50 cents per box. For sale by Ormond & Walsh. The Canada Chemical Company will forfeit $10 for any case that these pills do not help.

Dr. Clarke's Sure Cure for Catarrh, and Dr Clarke's Sure Cure for Eczema, same price. $10 will be paid for any case they will not permanently cure.

Don't Allow Operation for Cancer

There is a simpler, safer and more effective Method of Treatment.

Dr. J. C. Oliver, of Cincinnati, Ohio, U. S.A., in a paper he read before the Ohio State Medical Society, May 1896, said: "I have operated in a considerable number of cases of Cancer recently, and with one exception all have died within fourteen months after the operation."

This statement of a prominent Surgeon, should make any one suffering from cancer, hesitate before submitting to operation and consider carefully the evidence offered on behalf of the new Constitutional remedy, which cures Cancers, Tumors and all malignant growths, without the necessity of operation. It is a simple vegetable medicine that searches out and destroys the cancer growths, completely eradicates the disease, and at the same time, builds up and invigorates the system.

Stott & Jury, Bowmanville, Ont., will be pleased to send full particulars of this treatment, in a plain, sealed wrapper.

TOWN AND COUNTY NEWS

Local Happenings Picked Up Here and There by the Times.

NOTE—The Times requests its readers to contribute items of news to its columns. Anything that is phoned or sent in writing to the office, of a nature suitable for publication, will be received and published.—Ed. Times.]

—There was no police court yesterday.

—The Chief has a pocketbook for which he would like an owner.

—A leather school bag awaits an owner at police headquarters.

—The streets are very muddy and are much in need of a good scraping.

—The Girls' Guild of St. John's will meet this evening.

—The regular meeting of the Board of Education will be held this evening.

—The town officers should make some move, and have the fence in front of the Crystal Block removed. The sidewalk is too narrow for two persons walk on.

—The chief of police received an anonymous letter yesterday. He says he cannot and will not act on information given in such a way. The writer of a letter must sign his name and the information will be dealt with in a confidential manner.

—A man who claims he was enticed across the Hunter street bridge, and then compelled to give up his rain coat, has laid information against the young men he accuses of the act. The case will be ventilated in the police court this morning.

—On Sunday afternoon, a young lady was crossing the Hunter-st. bridge, when her new Easter hat was ruthlessly torn from her head by the high wind, which carried the frail article some distance, and then dropped it in the water. Two young men attempted to make a rescue, but failed.

—Margaret L. Shepherd, who visited Peterborough some years ago, was arrested in Columbus, Ohio, a few days ago on two warrants, one charging disorderly conduct and the other the selling and distributing of obscene literature.

—A local exchange chronicles this tragedy of an otherwise joyous season: A young lady walked into a coal hole in a Third street sidewalk this morning. It is not definitely known but it is believed she thought it was an Easter opening.

—The Grey County Council has passed a by-law requiring that an auctioneer before conducting a sale shall show his license and announce the date of its issue; also that hawkers, pedlars and chapmen be required to carry a license card where it can be seen by the public. A reward of $10 is offered by the law for every person securing a conviction for this or other by-laws in this behalf.

All Fool's Day

The first of April has been called "April Fool's Day" from time immemorial, and every one must be prepared to be made a fool of in some way or other by their friends. Take care that you are not made a fool of before the day is out. Very few people know the origin of all fools' day; some say it originated from the Druids; others that it started away back to the time of Solomon's Temple. But if any of our readers will take the trouble to turn to the 1st chapter of Isaiah and the 23rd verse, the whole thing is explained in a very few words.

Funeral of Thos. Fox

The funeral of the late Thomas Fox who met death in an accident in Toronto, took place yesterday morning at 9 o'clock from the family residence, Norwood road, and proceeded to St Peter's Cathedral, thence to the Roman Catholic Cemetery for interment. The funeral cortege was unusually large. Large numbers of the friends of the sorrowing family were in attendance.

Nervous Dyspepsia

How it shakes one up, invades sleep, destroys strength, adds a real misery to life. Not the stomach but the nerves are affected. Starved nerves make the whole trouble. You need Ferrozone because it's a nerve food. It supplies the elements that are needed to make rich, red blood. This is the savings bank of health. The richer the blood in red cells, the richer you're sure to be in health. Ferrozone quickly makes blood, strengthens the nervous system, strengthens the digestive organs and, presto! the nervous disturbance disappears. Sold by Ormond & Walsh.

YESTERDAY'S RUNAWAY

An Exciting Time on Charlotte Street Yesterday Afternoon

A team of horses attached to a farmers wagon made things lively on Charlotte Street yesterday afternoon for some time. The driver showed his plucky nature to good advantage, and headed the horses for the market square, where they were brought to a stand still. For a few moments it looked as though the market building would be a wreck as the wild beasts were heading in that direction.

No damage was done, however, and the driver says he will feed less oats in future.

ILLEGAL FISHING

Five "Jack Lights" Seen on Rice Lake on Saturday Night

That the wholesale destruction of fish is still going on in our inland lakes and rivers, is evident from the fact that five jack lights were seen on Rice Lake on Saturday night. These lights are used in spearing maskilonge.

The enormous illegal slaughter of fish that is carried on every spring, is apparently not decreasing. The inspectors should be stirred up a little, and a stop put to this destruction of fish.

FOOD AND NEURALGIA

The Right Food Will Drive it away

Good food cures neuralgia and many other diseases if it is the right kind of food and taken regularly, for the proper food will surely rebuild the cellular tissues and build the right kind of cells instead of diseased cells. When the rebuilding is under way the disease leaves.

That is the fact and the base of the food cure. There are hundreds of thousands of cases to prove the truth of this assertion.

A man in Delaware, Ia., Mr. Thomas Craven, says: "My wife has been greatly afflicted with neuralgia and has never found any medicine that would cure her.

I was told that if she could be fed on Grape-Nuts Breakfast Food for a time she would probably get well, so we started on Grape-Nuts. Within a very short time wife became entirely free from pain, and is now, to all appearances, entirely cured of her trouble.

We cannot find words to express our appreciation of the beneficial results from the greatest food in existence, Grape-Nuts.

A HEAVY PENALTY

Imposed on Some Young Men in Lindsay Who were Caught Gambling

On Friday last, the Chief of the Lindsay Police force, raided a confectionary story and found three young men gambling in the kitchen. A sum of money amounting to $3.05 was lying on the table so the chief locked the young men up.

At the Police Court two of the party were fined $20 and costs, each, amounting to $33.66. The third party had to pay $20 and costs.

The police laid a charge against the proprietor of the store for keeping a common gambling house and had him arrested. At the Police Court he elected to be tried by a jury and was committed to gaol to await his trial at the next sitting of the County Court. Some of his friends are making a strong effort to have him released on bail.

OUR HORSELESS CARRIAGE

Another Great Stride Taken by This G. F. J. A New and Unique Turnout

This g.f.j. has had great difficulty for some months past in endeavoring to solve a problem by which our numerous and heavy mail bags can be handled with ease in taking them to the Post Office, yesterday we received, direct from the factory a very handsome horseless carriage, which will certainly be the first of its kind in town. The carriage will be on exhibition at The Times Bookstore to-day where our many friends can have an opportunity of carefully examining the up-to-date and nobby rig. Everybody come do not miss it.

AN ALLOWANCE GRANTED

Mrs. Edwin Jory to Get $2.00 a Week from Her Husband

On Saturday last, County Magistrate Edmison handed out judgement in the case, Jory vs Jory, the complaint being laid by Mrs. Jory against her husband under the Wife's Maintenance Act, with a view to obtaining an order requiring her husband to pay her a sum not exceeding $5 per week.

After hearing the evidence, the Magistrate found the husband's charges not proven, and while those of his wife were not altogether proven, the admissions of the husband pointed to their correctness. He allowed Mrs. Jory $2 per week and costs.

Mr. O. A. Langley, Lakefield, has served complainant with a notice of appeal since the judgement was handed out. Mr R. R. Hall for the complainant.

WHILE PARLIAMENT Is in Session, Ottawa People Hear of a Marvellous Cure

It is a Rescue From Suffering and Death Effected by Paine's Celery Compound

THE GREAT SPRING MEDICINE

MR. BROWN, SAYS:

"After the Use of Paine's Celery Compound I am Now in the Best of Health"

The greatest of modern physicians, Prof. Edward E. Phelps, M.D., LL.D., after years of long practice and close scientific study, gave to suffering and diseased men and women his marvellous life-giving prescription, with the conviction and positive knowledge that it had peculiar virtues and ample powers to cure, after the terrible verdict "incurable" was uttered by the medical practitioner.

Thousands of the strongest testimonials from the best known and most reliable men and women of our country fully sustain the claims made by Dr. Phelps regarding his incomparable Paine's Celery Compound.

One of the most convincing proofs furnished, comes recently from a gentleman widely known in the Capital City, we refer to Mr. Alfred Brown, 91 O'Connor Street, Ottawa, Ont. Mr. Brown's letter fully demonstrates the fact that the greatest sufferer may cast off his or her burden of disease and become well, strong and happy. It proves too that the great medicine maintains more firmly than ever before its unrivalled place in the estimation of the people of wealth and social standing as well as with the masses. Mr. Brown says:

"I acknowledge with thankfulness and pleasure the fact that I have been cured of a very painful illness of eight years' standing by use of Paine's Celery Compound. I had, during the years of my illness, tried almost all the advertised medicines without deriving any good results. I was also treated by several of the best doctors of this city, hoping to find that one of them at least would understand my case.

"I was getting worse, and was told I was incurable. I was indeed in a critical condition. I could not go from the house alone, as I was liable to sudden collapse. I tried hospital treatment, but no relief for good results came to me. I could not sleep; anything that I ate increased my agonies; I was extremely weak, restless, tired and despondent; was obliged to walk about with my hands pressed firmly into my left side to ease my pains; my feet and hands were cold continually; had inclination to vomit, had profuse, cold sweats, quick breathing and would be racked with pain for hours at a time.

"After the regular use of Paine's Celery Compound for a time, I am now in the best of health, have good appetite and can use any kind of food. Thank God I am my own self once more, all through the use of Paine's Celery Compound."

S. O. E. CONCERT

A Very Enjoyable Affair Last Night — A Crowded House

The members of the Sons of England gave a very pleasing and interesting entertainment in their hall, on Hunter street, last night. The spacious hall was packed to the doors by a very attentive and appreciative audience.

The chair was ably filled by Mr. Wareham, who introduced the different numbers on the program, which consisted of vocal and instrumental music, readings and recitations, in a few well chosen words. During the evening, refreshments were served by the ladies, which added greatly to the pleasures of the evening. The concert was one of the most successful given by the order.

DIED IN KINGSTON

Mrs. J. T. White, Formerly of Town, Died Suddenly at That Place

Word was received in town yesterday morning of the death of Christy Kidd, wife of Alderman J. T. White, of Kingston. Deceased was a daughter of the late Wm. Kidd, of Dummer, and was a sister to Mr. R. J. and Mr. A. R. Kidd, of town. Mrs. White visited in town last summer and at that time complained of heart trouble, which was in all probability the cause of her sudden demise. Deceased lady was sixty years of age and had lived in Kingston for many years.

She leaves her husband, Mr. White, and two sons to mourn her demise. The deceased lady was well known in Kingston and also in town where she was very highly esteemed and her death will be deeply regretted.

The funeral will take place in Kingston on Wednesday.

An Easter Number

A handsome cover by a Canadian artist encloses the Easter issue of the Canadian Magazine. Aside from the Easter features of the number there are several valuable articles. John K. Munro writes of Curling in Canada in a way to interest both curlers and general readers. Arthur H. U. Colquhoun gives many interesting reminiscences of Lord Dufferin. Albert R. Carman relates some political experiences in England under the title, "John Bull in Politics." The protective value of vaccination is told by John Ferguson, M.D. The career of Henry Hudson, the discoverer of Hudson Bay, is described in a delightful way by George Johnson, the Dominion statistician. All lovers of nature will be pleased with Fritz Hope's profusely illustrated article on the Bank Swallow. No fastidious reader of current literature could demand more than is contained in this excellent Easter number.

Beware of Ointments for Catarrh That Contain Mercury

as mercury will surely destroy the sense of smell and completely derange the whole system when entering it through the mucous surfaces. Such articles should never be used except on prescriptions from reputable physicians, as the damage they will do is ten fold to the good you can possibly derive from them. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, O., contains no mercury, and is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. In buying Hall's Catarrh Cure be sure you get the genuine. It is taken internally and made in Toledo, Ohio, by F. J. Cheney & Co. Testimonials free.

Sold by druggists, price 75c. per bottle.

THE DUAL ALLIANCES MAY MEAN TROUBLE

The Political Outlook in the far East is Anything But Reassuring

THE TWO GREAT COMBINATIONS OF POWERS

The Joint Declaration of France and Russia May Mean That These Two Powers Will Fight Rather Than Give Way to Britain and Japan

Berlin, April 1 — The Volksbladtt, government organ, says: "Notwithstanding the plans for universal peace laid down by The Hague tribunal, convened at the invitation of the Czar of all the Russias, the political outlook abroad is not as reassuring as the lovers of international harmony and good will would wish for. The recent Joint Declaration of the Dual Alliance (France and Russia), which is, practically, a defiance of that other Dual Alliance (Great Britain and Japan), indicating as it does an intention to maintain Russia's grip on the great Manchurian province in China, may prove another step in the direction of grave international complications that would not, probably, go much further without producing a crisis; if, indeed, a crisis has not already been reached over the conflicting interests of some of the great nations in the Far East.

The fact that the Joint Declaration of France and Russia has been extended to the Orient, following so quickly upon the alliance of Japan and England, prompts the suggestion that if any attempt be made by the Anglo-Japanese forces to expel Russia from Manchuria it will be met by force of arms, and yet one cannot doubt that such was the primary object of the pact between the Island Kingdom and Great Britain. The Anglo-Russian issues have long been a menace to peace, and with the occupation of Port Arthur by the Czar, a few years ago, became so acute as almost to precipitate a conflict. It will also be recalled that during the Boxer outbreak in China a dispute arose over the rival claims to a railroad siding at Tien Tsin between the Russian and British forces there, that the spark, that might have produced a great conflagration, was almost fired. Only the interposition of the German commander prevented a clashing of the rival forces. The interests of Japan in Korea also help to accentuate the situation. It should not be forgotten, however, that the news of the Anglo-Japanese alliance was received at St. Petersburg with "equanimity," as a cablegram stated, and that the Russian government has declared that it (the alliance) is in line with the Russian policy in the Orient of preserving the status quo and the open trade door; but when stripped of the diplomatic phrases, the conditions of the Anglo-Japanese pact, and the Joint urope, show that two mighty forcesDeclaration of the Dual Alliance in E are arrayed against each other over a conflict of vast interests.

Russia's promises of withdrawal from Manchuria are of a decidedly vague character, and pending any move in that direction, the Czar is maintaining there an army of more than 60,000 soldiers, with almost numberless thousands on the Siberian border, whence they can be moved into the province. And as indicating the aggressiveness of the Russian Government, it is of interest to note the news that the cable brings from London that a concession of vast importance has just been obtained by the Czar from Persia in exchange for a considerable Russian loan.

The public has long watched with keen interest and anxiety the shifting scenes on the political chess board in Europe and Asia, and the future moves of the diplomatic players will be followed closely by all who appreciate the importance of the conflicting interests that influence the great Powers of the world.

Tired Feelings, Weariness, Lack of Energy, Despondency and Moroseness in Spring, are Signs of Ill Health

Paine's Celery Compound

Rejuvenates the Fagged-Out System and Restores Perfect Health

To thousands of people out-of-sorts, weary, despondent, morose, irritable, with weak, faltering step, pale faces and dull and sunken eyes, not sick enough to be confined to bed, this is a critical and dangerous season — a time that urgently calls for prompt action, if recuperation and cure are the prime objects

The past experience of hundreds of thousands, including able medical men, clergymen, judges, lawyers, literary men and women, the rich and those in high social position, points unhesitatingly to Paine's Celery Compound, the great medical prescription of modern times, that gives to the ailing, sick and diseased the true condition of health that insures happiness and true pleasure from day to day.

The virtues peculiar to Paine's Celery Compound quickly manifest their power in the correction of unhealthy nerve action, and supplying the veins with pure, more abundant, more vigorous and life-giving blood.

Paine's Celery Compound is pre-eminently the best spring medicine known to medical practitioners for thoroughly cleansing and purifying the blood and banishing the varied ills that result from a poisoned and impure condition of the life stream.

If you have any of the varied symptoms of rheumatism, neuralgia, dyspepsia, liver complaint, kidney disease, eczema or Salt Rheum, a few bottles of Paine's Celery Compound used at this time will rapidly dispel all trouble and danger. We urge every weak, ailing and sick person to fairly test the medicine that is doing more for suffering humanity than all other combined remedies.

JUBILEE POINT HOTEL

Mr. Dan Foley will be in Charge of the Popular Resort This Summer

The people of Peterborough who visit Jubilee Point every summer will be pleased to hear that Mr. Dan Foley, for many years the popular wine clerk at the Jubilee Hotel bar, has rented the hotel and bar and will personally conduct both during the coming season. He will go down to the point in a short time to have everything put in first class order. Judging from Mr. Foley's experience in the past, and his popularity, there is every reason to believe that Jubilee Point will be more popular than ever with tourists this summer.

PRO-BOER MEETING

Kruger's Former Pastor One of the Speakers —Chamberlain's Name Hissed

New York, March 31 — A meeting in sympathy with the Boer cause was held last night in Columbus Hall, 124 West Sixtieth street, under the auspices of the American Society of Freedom. Edward Van Ness, who hoisted the Boer flag at Bar Harbor as the British squadron was entering the harbor, a year ago last summer, presided. American, Boer and Irish flags decorated the hall. Col. Abe Gruber and Edward Lauterbach were among those on the platform.

Western Starr was the first speaker and he twisted the British lion's tail in a way to tickle the audience, which hissed every mention of Chamberlain's name. He said that the people of Chicago were in favor of helping the Boers by compelling this nation to stop selling mules and horses to the British for use in South Africa. He expressed the opinion that the fluctuations of stocks in consequence of the war had much to do with restraining the people of this country from protesting against the methods of the British in destroying republican institutions in South Africa.

The Rev. H. D. Von Brockhuisen, who was President Kruger's pastor in Pretoria, said:

If the British would fight us like men the Boers would not complain, but when you touch the women or children the Boer becomes a demon and they will fight as long as they have a drop of blood. For the sake of your own dear ones we ask you to raise your voice in protest.

The Farmer's Good Luck

(By Our Junior Reporter)

The man who wrestles with the cow and learns the calves to suck, who casts the corn before the swine is now in greatest luck, for butter's on the upper grade, veal's higher than a kite, pork is climbing up the scale, and beef is out of sight, the eggs he gathers every day from his Poland chicken coop are almost worth their weight in gold, and we are in the soup. His corn brings a fancy price, it's rising every day, and he rakes all kinds of money for half a ton of hay. The farmer is in the saddle, and when he comes to town the rest of us by right should go way back and then sit down.

Twenty Years of Bronchitis

Captain Dunlop, of Kingston, Commander of the steamer "Bohemian," of the R & O fleet, suffered unceasingly for twenty years, and although he took treatment all that time permanent relief was not obtained until he used "Catarrhozone," which cured him quickly and permanently. The Captain says, "Catarrhozone is the best cure for bronchitis on the face of the globe, pleasant to use, quick to relieve and sure to cure." Catarrhozone is a wonderful treatment for all diseases of the throat, lungs and Bronchial tubes. Two months' treatment, price $1, small size 25c. Druggists or Polson & Co., Kingston, Ont.

A GENERAL IN NEW ORLERNS

Sir Richard W. Stewart Looking Into the Mule Transport Service

New Orleans, April 1 — Lieut.-Gen. Sir Richard W. Stewart, K. C. M. G., and K. C. B., accompanied by his aide-de-camp, Col. Holland of the Royal Artillery, has arrived here. The General is here to make inspection of the various departments of the remount service of the British military establishment in this country.

Gen. Stewart is not on the active army list of the British military department, having been retired some time before the Boer war began. Gen. Stewart and Col. Holland expect to remain in New Orleans a week, and in that time they will examine into the stock transport service.

The scandals which developed in the British War Office some time ago in connection with the shipment of mules are responsible for the General's visit. He will examine into the situation from this end and report in full to the home office. Gen. Pearson, the Boer agent here, charges that Gen. Stewart's visit is to enlarge the British military station at New Orleans and that the British henceforward will enlist men for their army under the name of muleteers.

BRITISH SHIP SUNK OFF BRITISH COAST

Channel Steamer Alma Collides with Her and Goes Down

ELEVEN OF THE CREW PERISHED.

Sank in Four Minutes—The Collision Occurred During Fog—The Alma Returned to Southampton Badly Damaged.

London, April 2. — Eleven men were drowned as the result of a collision this morning near the Nab Lightship, between the Channel passenger steamer Alma and the British ship Cambrian Princess, Captain Roberts, from Peru for Antwerp. The latter sank immediately, and eleven of her crew perished. The Alma returned to Southampton badly damaged.

The collision occurred at 3.30 a.m., during foggy weather. The Alma struck the Cambrian Princess on the starboard quarter, ripping her side wide open. The ship heeled over and sank in four minutes The eleven survivors were hauled on board the Alma by means of ropes. The steamer's bows were badly stove in.

The Cambrian Princess was built at Southampton. She was of 1,275 tons net register, and was owned in Liverpool.

PLAGUE SITUATION WORSE

Simla, India, March 31.—The plague situation is growing worse in the Punjab, where 70,000 deaths are reported monthly.

CONGRATULATE KRUGER

Irish Nationalists Send a Congratulatory Address to Kruger

Dublin, April 1 — The feeling in Ireland is well illustrated by a resolution now on its way to Mr. Kruger, "care of Queen Wilhelmina," adopted by the Edenderry guardians, an elective body, as follows:

"We desire to record our admiration of the magnificent stand the brave South African Republics have made against the colossal might of the British Empire, and to congratulate the humane Boer leader, Delarey, on his recent great victory, which not only covers England with disgrace and ridicule, a result eminently gratifying to the rest of the civilized world, but which must have a chastening effect on the jingoes of the greatest helot empire the world has ever seen."

THIRTY NINE MEN KILLED

And Forty Five Were Injured—War Office Reports That the Affair was Purely Accidental.

Pretoria, April 2.— Thirty-nine British soldiers were killed and forty-five were injured in a railroad wreck March 30, near Barberton, Transvaal Colony.

London, April 2.—The War Office in reporting the railroad wreck at Barberton, Transvaal Colony, merely says that it was accidental. The victims nearly all belonged to the Hampshire Regiment.

BOERS SHOW DISPOSITION TO GIVE UP TO BRITISH--ASK FOR TERMS

Pretoria, April 2.—Ex-President Steyn and General Delarey have been located, and a meeting between them and Acting President Schalkburger is expected to be arranged without further delay. It is reported that General Botha will attend the conference. Commandant Meara has sent word that his command will abide by the decision of the Boer Government. Commandant De Villiers, who has been operating in the Kimberley district, has sent in a flag of truce asking for terms.

The peace movement, however, has in no way interfered with the military operations. The British are again sweeping the northwest districts of the Orange River Colony, where it is believed they have about a thousand of General De Wet's men within the cordon.

READY TO SURRENDER.

Heidelberg, Transvaal, April 1.—Commandant Alberts has called a meeting of the Boers in his district to take place 25 miles east of The Springs station, in order to discuss the proposal for a general surrender. It is said that General Hans Botha has summoned a similar meeting at Amsterdam. A party of Constabulary and native scouts was ambushed near here March 30 Six of the party were killed. The Boers eluded pursuit. Surrenders are occurring daily in the Standerton district.

COLONIAL MUST BE CONSULTED.

London, April 2.—The London Times, in an article on the peace negotiations says it is admitted that colonial opinion must be considered in the matter. Canada, Australia and New Zealand have earned the right to be consulted. While a generous policy in granting terms would be the wisest, the claims of the Cape Loyalists, the Uitlanders and the Colonists must be first considered. "Leave any district under purely Boer rule," says the article, "and a new arsenal will arise to astonish the British Empire.

CHINESE AND THE ACTION OF CHRISTIANS.

London, April 2.—A despatch from Shanghai to The Times says the most important impression fixed in the Chinese mind as the result of the campaign in the north in 1900 is a new conception of Christianity and its results, an impression conveyed by the troops of the Christian nations which compared very unfavorably in the matter of common humanity with those of heathen Japan. The correspondent says it is reasonable to expect that the cause of Christianity will suffer further in the near future. The nations chiefly interested in the labor of missionaries have come to terms with the Chinese Government, leaving the murders of the Christians unpunished. The native converts in many places are deliberately held up to the odium of their fellow-countrymen by the imposition on their community of taxes required to meet the indemnities levied for missionary claims.

Items of Interest

Washington, April 2.—The State Department, having been advised by cable of the revolutionary movement in Santo Domingo, has requested the Navy Department to send a warship there, and the Marchias, now at San Juan Porto Rico, probably will start across to-day. The trouble is not believed to be serious, but it is deemed well to have a ship there as a matter of precaution.

Paris, April 2.—For the time being Maude Gonne has abandoned the Irish cause to take up that of the Boers. She is now giving a series of lectures here on the fighting burghers, and has made a sensation by the spirit of eloquence and audacity in which she proclaims a crusade for independence of the South African Republics.

CANADIANS TURNED BACK.

Buffalo, April 1.—Seven Canadian mechanics were stopped by customs officials at Black Rock last night. From letters which were found in their possession, it was apparent that they had come here to take jobs for which they had been previously engaged, and they were told that they were violating the provisions of the alien labor law. They were sent back to Canada.

Ottawa, April 2.—A cable to Lord Minto from Cape Town says that Roland Agassiz, of the Canadian Mounted Rifles, is dangerous ill at Charlestown. George Pyle, of St John, N.B., reported missing near Klerksdorp, is slightly wounded in the right foot, and is in the hospital at Klerksdorp. Captain Harold Austin Nealan is reported dangerously ill of enteric at Sydenham. The cable asks that Archdeacon Casey, of St. Peter's Palace, Peterborough, be informed of this.

St. Petersburg, April 2.—The Police Prefect of Moscow, M. Trepoff, had a narrow escape from assassination yesterday. While receiving visitors, a governess named Allart suddenly drew a revolver, placed its muzzle at the official's breast, and pulled the trigger. The weapon, however, missed fire. In the subsequent excitement the woman tried to escape, but was arrested. It is believed that the attempt was connected with the recent student troubles.

MURDERED ON PARADE.

St. Petersburg, April 2.—While the Mirgored Regiment was parading on the barrack square at Kieff yesterday Captain Sofronoff shot and killed Lieutenant Grodski for maligning the former's family.

LOOK AFTER THE HORSES.

London, April 2.—Lord Roberts visited the Curragh yesterday and inspected the Irish Horse under the command of Lord Longford, who are shortly to proceed to South Africa.

"One great thing which you must learn," said his lordship, "is to look after the horses, for if the horses of a mounted regiment are inefficient that regiment itself is practically of no use."

"Lord Kitchener writes to me: "I have the greatest difficulty in the world in mounting men I have got," and he says: Don't you send out any more mounted men unless they know how to look after their horses, for I cannot go on mounting men time after time and week after week with horses that are not taken care of."

London, April 2.—The Mysore Gold Mining Company has achieved a dividend that is rare even in the annals of the goldfields. At the annual meeting of the company yesterday Sir Charles Tennant stated that the net profit for the year was $1,371,830, allowing a dividend at the rate of 120 per cent. The quartz milled during the year amounted to 127,070 tons, yielding 164,531 oz.

LIVED ON 15 CENTS A DAY.

London, April 2.—At the inquest on a widow eighty-three years of age, who died in the Industrial Buildings, Bishopsgate, E.C., it was stated that for twenty years her income had been $1.25 a week from the City of London Guardians, and 75c a week from a Moorfields Catholic society, the latter sum being paid for her rent.

A juror: That means she practically lived on 15 cents a day. A marvellous performance, which shows the endurance of the woman.

London, April 1.— Lord Roberts, in a letter to the Mayor of Birkenhead on the subject of military training in schools, says that his personal opinion is that "if military drill is to be taught to school boys it should be made part of the school curriculum and be under the supervision of the Education Department in exactly the same way as the other subjects included in the Educational Code."

The Commander-in-Chief adds that there is no disposition on the part of the Education Office to assume responsibility in the matter. The War Department, however, allows of the formation of cadet battalions and corps, of which there are nine and 107 respectively. The work they perform is excellent.

Under the instructions of Lord Roberts a circular has been issued giving secondary schools facilities for teaching boys military drill, and this has affected about 700 schools.

BETTER SABBATH OBSERVANCE.

London, April 2.—In a letter asking clergymen and ministers to preach sermons on Sabbath Observance on Sunday, April 6th, the Committee of the working Men's Lord's Day Rest Association state that "From every part of the United Kingdom reports and facts show that a great change is rapidly coming over our country, that the observance of the Sabbath day as a day for rest and worship is being set aside, and that Sunday amusements, Sunday excursions, Sunday sports, Sunday labor, and Sunday trading are doing much to injure the quiet, religious, restful character of our hitherto peaceful day of holy rest.

MODERN MAN'S CHIEF CONCERN.

London, April 2.—"Ian Maclaren" (the Rev. Dr. John Watson) yesterday afternoon, in Wesley's Chapel, Cityroad, showed that the modern man, unlike his father, is less concerned about his own after life, and more anxious what will happen to wife and child when he dies. Philanthropic enterprise attracted help ten times more readily than the building of churches. All this seemed to point to a certain coarsening and materializing of ideas. On the other hand might it not show how God would have them work in the twentieth century? More necessary than building more churches was it that they should see that people had better homes; more desirable than spending more money on choirs and music was it to relieve effectually the poor and destitute. And thus the alienation between the proletariat and the church would come to an end.

FIGHT WITH SLAVE DEALERS.

Mozambique, Africa, April 2.—The crews of some Portuguese gun-boats, which were landed on the coast, have had a severe but successful encounter with an expedition of slave dealers from Muscat. Of the latter one hundred and sixty-two were captured, together with twelve dhows, and fifty were killed. Upwards of seven hundred slaves who were found chained in the dhows were released. The Portuguese explorer, Paez Almeida especially distinguished himself in this affair.

CONEY ISLAND IN GLOOM.

New York, March 31.—Coney Island has been plunged in gloom by the announcement that a wave of reform will sweep over the resort. Police Commissioner Partridge has decided to abridge the privileges of the islanders during the summer, and a circular letter bearing his signature has been read to members of the police force calling for volunteers to assist in the work.

In calling for volunteers Commissioner Partridge says applications will be received from patrolmen of undoubted sobriety. Only "fearless and willing men," are wanted, who will do "real police duty," and not consider the seaside assignment as in the nature of a summer junket.

PASSENGERS LANDED

Montreal March 31.—The passengers of the Elder-Dempster Beaver Liner Lake Superior, from Liverpool, were landed at St. John, N.B., this morning.

ACCIDENTALLY SHOT

Chatham, April 1.—A. S. Thornton, accountant in the bank of Commerce here, was accidentally shot yesterday by A. Larmour, teller. Mr. Thornton was assisting the teller in removing his cash and books to the vault after the day's work. Mr. Larmour picked up the revolver to carry it to the vault, when it slipped from his hand. As the weapon struck the floor it exploded. The bullet grazed the thigh of Mr. Larmour, and pierced the left hand of Mr. Thornton, inflicting a nasty wound.

SHOT BY NEGROES.

Oklahoma City, I. T. April 1.—Subcontractor Dunn, who was in charge of the Rock Island camp near Bridgeport, Oklahoma, was shot and killed at that place by two negroes yesterday. The negroes escaped and are being pursued by a posse. There is talk of lynching.

Chattanooga, Tenn., April 1.—Up to midnight eleven bodies have been taken from the Nelson mine, the scene of yesterday's explosion. Officials of the company claim there are but eight more in the mine. Miners claim there

EASIER TERMS SECURED FOR THE FIGHTING BOERS

Lord Kitchener and Lord Milner Said to be Urging More Leniency

HOPE OF PEACE STRONG IN GREAT BRITAIN

Know to Be Making Every Effort to End the War Before His Coronation—Effect of the Death of Cecil Rhodes

London, April 2—There has grown up during the week a vague but unmistakable optimism regarding the prospects of peace in South Africa. It is based not only on the present action of the Transvaal officials but on a striking feature on the latest drive against Delarey.

It is at last discovered that British troops, stripped of artillery guns and all impediments, can move as fast as the Boers. Lord Kitchener records that his columns covered eighty miles in twenty-four hours. Everybody wonders why this was not done many months ago, but hopes are entertained that this improvement alone may end the war in the near future. Great encouragement, however, is derived from the conduct of direct peace negotiations. A long cable despatch from Lord Milner reached Mr. Chamberlain at the Colonial Office yesterday. It was evidently of the first importance, for copies were made by confidential clerks and sent by special messengers to Mr. Arthur Balfour, Government leader of the House of Commons; Sir Michael Hicks-Beach, Chancellor of the Exchequer; the Marquis of Lansdowne, Foreign Secretary, and the Marquis of Salisbury, Prime Minister. A copy was also sent to the Duke of Devonshire, the Liberal Unionist leader in the Ministry, who is in Paris. These members of the Government form with Mr. Chamberlain the executive section of the Cabinet.

Presumably Lord Kitchener and Lord Milner have been made acquainted with the terms on which the Boer leaders are prepared to make peace. These terms are believed to contain something that was previously rejected; and Lord Kitchener and Lord Milner are understood to have cabled in detail their reasons for thinking that concessions should now be made. Lord Milner, if converted to moderate counsels, may convert Mr. Chamberlain, and as these two men have long been the chief obstacles to peace, optimism may be justified.

It is certain that three-fourths of the Cabinet yearn to bring this inglorious struggle to an end, and the king is almost fiercely resolved that the war shall be brought to a conclusion before his coronation.

It is understood that the Boer leaders now demand some sort of assurance in regard to the duration of the transition period preceding the establishment of autonomous government in the late republics. They are also believed to have insisted on a modification of the ridiculous banishment decree of last autumn and also that permission be given to rebels to leave South Africa should they so desire. Other stipulations are for the rebuilding of burned homesteads and advances from the Imperial Exchequer on easy terms to enable burghers who have suffered by the war to restart in life.

There is really not one of these demands which could not be conceded by England without loss of dignity, and there is a strong impression that all of them will be granted.

Lord Milner could not have known the attitude of Mr. Steyn and Christian De Wet when he cabled; but apparently these intransigeants had been in communication with the Transvaal envoys before the latter made overtures. All the information available here agrees that if Christian De Wet and Mr. Steyn remain irreconcilable the Transvaalers will refuse to continue the fight, which would mean surrender on the terms of Louis Botha, Delarey and two-thirds of the Boers now in the field. Military experts from South Africa now here confidently declare that, relieved of the pressure of the Transvaalers, Lord Kitchener could and would dispose of De Wet and his men in six weeks.

Public opinion among all classes in England is so strongly in favor of peace upon any honorable terms short of Boer independence that even the Chamberlain element in the Government would scarcely dare to assume the responsibility of prolonging the war if the Boers should offer the necessary concessions.

There is a curious mixture of opinion as to the effect that Cecil Rhodes's death will have upon the peace prospects. The Transvaalers of the last-ditch type may be somewhat less irreconcilable now that the organizer of the Jameson raid is unable to see the realization of any of his ambitions. On the other hand such an extreme pro-Boer as W. T. Stead declares that Rhodes's death is a serious blow to peace and pacification because he understood the Dutch character of South Africa better than any other Englishman.

2,000 MORE MEN TO GO TO SOUTH AFRICA

Militia Department May Issue the Necessary Orders for the Contracts for Clothing, Stores, Etc.

Ottawa, April 1. — His Excellency, the Governor-General, had a conference with the Premier this morning, presumably with respect to the mobilization of the coronation contingent for Great Britain and the contingent of 2,000 men for South Africa. The communications between the two Governments, it is understood, have reached a stage that will justify the Militia Department issuing the necessary orders for the contracts for clothing, stores, etc., at once, and complete arrangements for recruiting and mobilization for South Africa. The Order-in-Council and formal documents are in a forward state of preparation and can be completed in a few hours.

RECRUITING ARRANGEMENTS.

The recruiting arrangements will be similar to those of the 2nd Canadian Mounted Rifles, with changes as regards the quotas from the respective districts, necessitated by the fact that in some cases the offers were largely exceeded and in others the full number required was not secured. Dr. Borden, Minister of Militia, Col. Pinault, Deputy Minister, and Col. Lord Aylmer, Adjutant General, are back from New York, and engaged in pushing preparatory arrangements.

BRITAIN MUST RULE

No Settlement That is Possible Will Give Boers Power

New York, April 2.—The Sun says:—There really seems to be more in the present than in previous negotiations between Great Britain and the Boers. If it be possible for the two to agree on terms, it will be better for both. There is no doubt that if peace comes to the Transvaal after an honorable adjustment, the Briton of the future will have more respect for the Boer than if peace came with absolute conquest. Certain things Great Britain must demand for the future, no matter how gallant the Boers may be or how much of the world's admiration they have. England must rule in the Transvaal, and to that end she must retain power. What minor concessions she can make is a question for statesmanship. It is to be hoped that the Boers are as good statesmen as they are fighters, and will be willing to concede the things necessary for supremacy in return for assured peace and liberty and protection.

Advice to Mothers

If your little boy or girl comes home with a sore throat, the first thing to do is to rub the throat and chest with Polson's Nerviline. Don't be afraid to use Nerviline freely—a whole bottle full wouldn't burn or blister the tenderest skin. Rub in until all taken up by the pores, and just before the child goes to sleep give him a glass of hot water into which 20 drops of Nerviline has previously been stirred. This is a sure, pleasant and speedy cure. Large bottles 25c.

THE LATE MRS. WHITE

Particulars of the Death of a Former Resident of This County

Kingston News: Death came suddenly to Mrs. J. T. White, wife of Ald. White, 148 University ave. Sunday night she attended Sydenham street Methodist church, returning home at 8.30 and was dead at 9.15. The family happened to be all at home when the summons came to the deceased lady. Dr. Mundell was called in and arrived before Mrs. White expired, but she was beyond human aid. The deceased lady's maiden name was Miss C. A. Kidd. She was born in Peterborough fifty-nine years ago and was married forty years ago last Christmas. In the year 1881 the family came to Kingston and have resided here ever since. She leaves a husband, two sons, Dr. A. N. White, Denver, Col.; W. J. B. White, of this city, and one daughter, Lillie E., nurse-in-training in a hospital in Lowell, Mass. The deceased was a member of Sydenham street Methodist church. She was a woman of charitable disposition and was beloved by all who knew her. Ald. White and family have the sincere sympathy of a large number of friends. The funeral, which will be private, will occur on Wednesday at 10 a.m.

EDITORIAL NOTES

Germany favors the "open door" policy in China but would not "in a final instance oppose something that Russia really desired." With this enigmatic reply to their latest inquiry as to the position the Kaiser would take under certain eventualities in the Far East the officials of the State Department must needs be content. The most likely inference from the statement of German policy would seem to be that the Government at Berlin not object very strongly against Russian exploitation of the mines and transportation facilities of Manchuria. If the Russians should go about the matter in a proper manner they could secure what they really desire without leaving room for objection from any other power. Instead of demanding exclusive privileges let them survey all feasible railway routes and promising mining lands, and secure a concession to work and operate the lot without putting words of exclusion in the grant. That is what the Germans did in the case of Shantung and the British Pekin Syndicate did with the mines of Shansi and Shensi.

The Boer "government" is carrying the archives around tied in a red handkerchief on the furthest end of a stick.

The most daring burglary on record is one recently reported from California, where the operator, after robbing a house he had burgled, "took the elevator and left the building." Leaving the building seems like the wanton waste of the out-of-season angler who rips his fish open and throws them away, unless the burglar had another building somewhere that his second-hand elevator would just fit.

A Defect of Reformers.

THE newspaper despatch from Topeka, Kansas, about Mrs. Charles M. Sheldon's hired girl has been very popular, and acres of comment have appeared about it. The story is that the hired girl, who was new, had read in one of Mr. Sheldon's the-world-made-over stories that it was a good plan for the servants of a household to take their meals with the rest of the family, so she expressed to Mrs. Sheldon her willingness to follow that course, but Mrs. Sheldon dissented, and the girl left. This is thought to be a joke on Mr. Sheldon, but, remarks New York "Life," really it makes him appear in a good light as a reformer who respects the rights of others, and does not try to compel even his immediate family to share his social experiments. That is the way it is in the family of Tolstoi. He lives the ideal life, and goes barefoot, and cobbles shoes for recreation, but his wife and most of his children respect conventional customs, and live a life modified, but not stunted by his ideals.

A great and common defect about ordinary reformers is that they are not content to let their light so shine, but insist that every one whom they can control shall emulate their good works. Says the Women's Christian Temperance Union to the army, "We think it's wicked to drink beer, and you shan't have any." Says Mrs. Carrie Nation to Apollo Belvidere, "It is an outrage that you have no trousers on. Let me smash you!" Mr. Sheldon's way is better. He goes in for precept, and, maybe, example, but not for constraint. If the Women's Christian Temperance Union followed his example it might still distribute tracts to the army, but it would not legislate away the canteen, and Mrs. Nation, acting Sheldon-wise, would be content to say to Apollo Belvidere, "Wear trousers, like me."

Good Hearts and Bad Manners.

An exchange tells about a judge more noted for his bad manners than his knowledge of law. He continually insults lawyers, litigants and witnesses—especially women—in the most outrageous way, and spares no one except certain members of the bar whose political influence he fears. Recently a young lawyer, having more backbone than discretion, perhaps, was bullied by His Honor beyond the limit of endurance, and began to talk back. With the aid of a cool head and a polite but sarcastic tongue the young practitioner soon had the bencher apoplectic and nigh to frenzy and yet lacking ground for holding the lawyer guilty of contempt.

When the case had been decided against the young man an older member of the bar said:

"You did not take the judge in the right way. He is cranky, but you should have humored him. At heart he is a pretty good man."

"His heart may be good," said the young man, "but his manners are bad; and I'm tired of humoring people whose hearts are so good that they feel privileged to be bullies and curmudgeons."

"Castles of Sand."

(Written after seeing the picture called "Castles of Sand.")

I.

Castles of Youth and Hope, and Joy,
Castles of Love without alloy,
Built in the heart of a woman; there
They were fashioned with tender care.

Built to withstand the blows of Fate,
Built to rebuff the hand of Hate,
With towers of silver, and turrets of gold,
And all the Love that the walls could hold.

'Twas a woman's hand that built them there,
And a woman's thought that made them fair;
For a woman's Faith had strengthened their walls
And a woman's beauty would grace their halls.

But Youth is gone, and Faith is betray'd,
And Joy in its lonely grave is laid,
And Love has come, and laughed, and flown,
And a woman's life is lived out alone.

For a heart grew cold, and slain was Trust,
And the silver and gold all crumbled to dust;
And these castles built by a woman's hand
Are only some mounds of shifting sand.

Castles of sand on a sunny shore
Of golden grains like a hoarded store,
Mounds of shining, glistening sand
That built up the Castles of Day Dream Land.

Main Way For the Ladies.

In Michigan there is an Indian school where the children of the more or less noble redman are instructed in Anglo-Saxon graces and civilization. One of the teachers says:

It is very interesting to study these children, especially as we have them from four different tribes.

The boys have a sense of humor. In my flag-drill last Friday the partners were a boy and a girl, and where the lines intersect to form a cross I taught the boys to let their partners go first; and much trouble I had to do it.

After the exercises Isaac Crane came up to me, and in his solemn way said:

"Miss B., in letting the girls pass in front of the boys you have struck at the root of an Indian national custom."

"How so, Isaac?"

"It is the custom for the man to go first, carrying his dignity, and for the woman to follow, carrying everything else."

Expensive Revenge.

Mankind is so constituted that it is sometimes not able to forget readily any slights or rebuffs endured, and the disposition to seek revenge is frequently uppermost in the thoughts. In Sheffield, England, it is said, there is a manufacturer who became furious with the local post-office people because of certain regulations they insisted he should follow in the matter of registered mail. After calming down, the manufacturer concluded he would have to toe the mark if he wanted his mail forwarded, but his revenge he would have, too. So every day for a month or more he sent each of his two hundred employees to the post-office to buy a single penny stamp. The employees were decorated with red tape, and seemed to enjoy hugely the making of their daily purchases.

The Revolution in English Character.

IT is the opinion of Mr. Bernard Shaw, as expressed in a characteristic preface to a late volume of his plays, that the nature of the English people has, within the past ten years, undergone certain conspicuous modifications. Excitability—"theatricality" is his own word for it—Mr. Shaw believes to have been steadily mounting in force among the English, usually so solid and stolid; and this he ascribes to the pronounced romanticism of taste developed among them by the literature, the books and plays, of the past five years; a taste which has caused them to lose their true sense of the realities, with all the steadying effects thereof.

It will not be disputed that the special style of literature in vogue during a period leaves its impress upon it, nor will it be gainsaid that the demands and tastes of the period in turn determine the essential nature of its literary supply. We are hearing it said on all sides now that popular education accounts for the love of the novel of adventure. Popular education creates an enlarged reading public, but one which does not wish to have the realities of life laid before it; which, indeed, in many cases, reads, or goes to the play, just to escape reality. If one accept this explanation of certain present phenomena it is only going a step farther to find in all democratically organized, popularly educated societies an inherent inclination toward romanticism. As no countries have carried the modern experiment so far as the English-speaking countries, we ought not to be surprised to see a strong bent toward the romantic attitude showing itself, in many directions, in an English or American public; the romantic attitude here meaning any attitude betraying absence of a full perception of the realities, or disinclination to look at them.

Out of all this we seem to draw three propositions: that democracy appears to presuppose a certain sort of popular education, that without that education there would be no democracy, and yet that that education is calculated to destroy the sense of the realities. Now how is this? The very plea made for the education which, more and more, is prevailing against the classical education, is just this—that it cultivates the true perception of real things. It is a "practical" education for that precise reason, say its advocates. Why, then, asks the writer of "The Point of View" in "Scribner's Magazine," should this same generation manifest so much liking for the romantic fiction, the romantic plays, which are a means of getting away from the real conditions of existence? He proceeds to answer this question as follows: "It may very probably be that this liking is a taste of the moment, without ulterior connections or deeper significances. And, indeed, it seems to have been too much overlooked by some writers who have no love for the novel of adventure, that it is by no means the first time in the world that romance has been in high favor. It is none the less true that this subject does suggest another of far greater moment, which is the question what the "popular" education ought to be, and whether the democratic state of modern man really needs exactly that form of it which is now so insisted upon as essential to its maintenance and well-being. To perceive the realities in the high sense, and in that sense be willing to abide by them, is never, at any time, the portion of more than the few. But general education goes forward, very properly, on the assumption that all may be made in some degree to know the life to which they belong, to realize it. Realization comes, however, only in part through the development of practical efficiency. It comes also through the unfolding of the spiritual nature, the growth of moral vision, the dreams of the imagination—to none of which is the 'classical' education a stranger."

Pleasing Kind of Mal de Mer.

News comes from Honolulu that the transport "Thomas," which reached there on August 1, having on board three hundred male and one hundred female teachers, en route for the Philippines to engage in educational service under the Taft Commission, developed a veritable matrimonial epidemic. The young men and women on board represented almost every State of the Union. After the transport left San Francisco friendships were formed which soon ripened into love, and the day prior to the arrival at Honolulu Captain Buford found that thirty couples desired the nuptial knot tied. He refused to permit the ceremony on board the vessel, and the next day a clergyman at Honolulu made the thirty pairs happy by uniting them in matrimony. Prior to the sailing of the transport from Honolulu several other cases were reported. The departure from New York last week of the fifty-four Cuban girls and twenty-four men, who have been students at the summer school of Harvard University, developed the fact that they, too, had been victims of Cupid's darts, although their courtships have only reached the engagement stage. Most of the Cuban men are returning engaged and several Harvard students and professors are said to have lost their hearts to the girls from the South. Five of the ladies took home with them diamond engagement rings.

A Humane Pater.

One reads so frequently of the paternal boot as applied to the undesirable [illegible] suitor that it is a pleasure to [illegible] the more humane method adopted by a wealthy Glasgow merchant for choking off a "follower" of his daughter. The girl was very young, so was the follower, but nevertheless he called formally on the object of his affections. The merchant and his wife entered the room, the latter bearing a glass of milk and a huge slice of bread spread with butter and jam. "Now, dear, run away to bed," said the kindly mother to her daughter; "it's time that all good girls should be in bed." Then the Glasgow merchant addressed the astonished young man: "Now, youngster, you drink that glass of milk, and take that slice of bread and jam to eat on the road home—and hurry, for your mother must be anxious about your being out so late by yourself." The young man did not call again.

Tommy—Pop, a husband and a wife are one, aren't they?

Tommy's Pop—So we are told, my son.

Tommy—Then it doesn't always take two to make a quarrel, does it?—Philadelphia Record.

Mrs. Martern—I must say, Jane, that I am not altogether pleased with your cooking.

The Cook—It isn't to be expected you should be at first, ma'am; but you'll get educated up to it in time.—Boston Transcript.

Read the two sides of this story and then give a verdict on the evidence as to the merits of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery.

WHAT MRS. MAYTER SUFFERED.

"I had been sick for more than a year with kidney trouble," writes Mrs. Lucy Mayter, of Jacksboro, Jack Co., Texas. "Several different doctors treated me, but none did me any good. One doctor said that I never could be cured, that I had Bright's Disease. I suffered nearly death at times; had spells the doctors called spasms. Was bed-fast most of the time for six months. My mother begged me to try Doctor Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery."

WHAT DR. PIERCE SAID.

"With but little hope I wrote to Dr. Pierce, and he said 'he could cure me.' I began to take the 'Golden Medical Discovery,' and although I had given up to die, I began to improve from the start, and by the time I had taken twenty-two bottles I was entirely cured. I weigh more than ever before in my life and am entirely well."

Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery cures diseases of the stomach and other organs of digestion and nutrition. It cures through the stomach diseases of heart, liver, lungs, kidneys, etc., which have their origin in disease of the stomach and its associate organs.

Sick persons are invited to consult Dr. Pierce, by letter, free. All correspondence private. Address Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y.

TOBACCO, LIQUOR AND DRUGS

Dr. McTaggart's tobacco remedy removes all desire for the weed in a few weeks. A vegetable medicine, and only requires touching the tongue with it occasionally. Price $2.

Simply marvelous are the results from taking his remedy for the liquor, morphine and other drug habits. Is a safe and inexpensive home treatment; no hypodermic injections; no publicity; no loss of time from business, and a certainty of cure.

Address or consult Dr. McTaggart, 75 Yonge street, Toronto.

Anecdotal.

George Ade, the Chicago man who writes the "Fables in Slang," hails from Indiana, which he has said is a State which a man "should never go back on—or to." The other night he met an Indiana woman who asked him if he had ever noticed how many bright people came from Indiana. "Yes," he replied, "and the brighter they are the quicker they come."

The Playgoer's Dinners.

A correspondent who signs himself "Serious Playgoer" writes to the "Illustrated London News": "Is it not possible to induce the public to moderate its eating and drinking before going to the play? If you have eaten a very large meal, how can you be in the mood for real drama? Nowadays the playwright has to provide, not drama, but an aid to digestion, a kind of dramatic equivalent to the cigarette and liqueur. He may count himself happy if rows of gentlemen in white waistcoats are gently stimulated by a theatrical anecdote, set to music if possible, and enlivened by charming costumes. If his characters have any troubles, these must be comic embarrassments, not the sordid cares that crease even a white waistcoat in actual life." I see the necessity for this entertainment so long as the playgoer has no scruple about his dining. Max Beerbohm, who treats this subject with admirable philosophy, proposes that the theater shall open in the early morning. Let us take our drama, he says, after breakfast, when the mind has a dewy freshness. Let commerce and its toils be put off until the evening. This, I fear, is a poetic ideal, like asking the moon to shine in the morning and the sun to oblige about nine p.m. It is upon the playgoer's dinner that reformers must concentrate their energies."

Far Reaching Influence.

"OLD-FASHIONED Indian stories, the dime novels of years back, which were within the reach of all the boys, were an important factor in building up the great West," said a typical Westerner. "These novels used to circulate in a neighborhood till they had been read by every boy and had fallen to pieces through handling. They fired the ambition of the youngsters, set them to practising shooting and riding, and sent many of them to the West in search of adventures. Some soon returned to their homes, others became bad men and were killed in time, but the great mass of them, too proud to return home, created the vigorous, wideawake population of our Western States. I have talked to hundreds of our Western pioneers about the causes which brought them west, and a majority of them admit that dime novels had more to do with it than anything else."

A Heretic.

"The man is a driveling idiot," said the trust magnate.

"A plumb fool," agreed the coal baron.

"An unmitigated lunatic," asserted the steel king.

"Crazy as a March hare," asseverated the great financier.

"A hopeless imbecile," asserted the power in Wall street.

"Absolutely and utterly devoid of sense," chimed in the senator.

"As brainless as a barrel," added the corporation lawyer.

"But what has he done?" asked the ordinary citizen.

The crowd was convulsed with laughter.

"Why, he says," they replied, choking and gurgling, "he actually says that money isn't everything!"—Smart Set.

A story of a "joke" played in Vienna on Mascagni, the composer, who is soon to visit the United States, is going the round of the newspapers in Italy, where it has created an extremely bad impression. The distinguished Italian was the guest of honor at a soiree given by the theatrical artists of the Austrian capital, and expressed regret that he was unable either to speak or understand German, whereupon an actor of comic parts arose and addressed him very solemnly, saying: "Most illustrious maestro, you have given to the world 'Cavalleria Rusticana,' which is a musical freak." At this point Mascagni also rose, and warmly shook the orator's hand. "You have no other talent than that of self-advertisement." Another effusion on the part of the composer. "In a word, you are merely a genial savage." Prolonged applause, at which Mascagni could scarcely master his emotion.

Adelina Patti is, as all the world knows, one of the most charitable women in the world, and nothing pleases her more than to do a good turn "on the quiet," as she herself laughingly puts it. Last winter she was staying for a few days in an isolated village at the extreme end of Yorkshire. To kill the monotony of the place, the great singer went one night to a concert got up in aid of a certain village institution. Not half the performers turned up. Seeing the difficulty in which the chairman and committee were placed, Madame Patti (incognito, of course) offered to oblige them with a song or two if they cared about it. After she had rendered, in her own glorious way, three of her sweetest ballads, the chairman approached her, and, in solemn tones, thanked her: "Well, Miss, you've done uncommon well; and, although 'Arry 'Ock, the juggler, who thinks nowt of takin' 'old of 'ot pokers and a-swallowin' needles, couldn't turn up, yet you've pleased us very considerable, Miss!"

Colonel Osio was the present King of Italy's "governor" for very many years, when, as Prince of Naples, his charge was a delicate lad. Colonel Osio's strict regime has been very severely criticised, but that the King remembers him with respect, if not with affection, is proved by his having conferred the hereditary title of count upon him on the occasion of the birth of the Princess Yolanda. One day a request came from a well-known personage for the young prince's autograph, to be added to a collection containing that of his grandfather and his father. The prince was about to comply, when the colonel said, sharply: "Certainly not; what value has the signature of an insignificant boy who does not even know how to write properly?" For some act of disobedience a little later the prince was brought before his "governor," who exclaimed: "If I were the King I would cut off your head." "And I will cut off yours when I am king," defiantly replied the lad. His punishment is unrecorded, but, instead of cutting off his tyrant's head when that day came, he has ennobled him.

During the famous Douglas and Lincoln debate and subsequent campaigns the point was frequently brought out by the supporters of "the Little Giant" that Mr. Lincoln had served only a single term in Congress, but that Senator Douglas had enjoyed for years a national reputation. This point, says a writer in "Lippincott's," was urged in a heated discussion between an ardent supporter of Douglas and a German voter who favored Lincoln. Finally the former, thinking to overwhelm his opponent, said: "Who is this Lincoln, anyhow? Nobody ever heard of him until Senator Douglas brought him into notice by holding a joint debate with him. Senator Douglas, on the other hand, is a great statesman. Why, he has had his eye on the Presidential chair for the last ten years!" "Vot is dot you say?" was the reply. "You say Meester Douglas have hat his eye on der Bresident chair for ten years?" "Yes, that is just what I said." "Vell, you shoost tell Meester Douglas if he vill keep his eye on dot chair shoost a leedle vile longer he vill see old Abe Lincoln sitting down in it." This closed the debate, amid a roar of laughter from the bystanders.

His Impression.

"Do you believe that college-bred women make good wives?"

"I don't think going to college makes the slightest difference," answered Mr. Meekton. "You couldn't keep a woman from assuming a position of superior knowledge by merely not sending her to school."—Washington "Star."

The Definition.

Teacher—Johnny, can you tell me what is meant by "steward?" Johnny—A steward is a man who doesn't mind his own business. Teacher—Where did you get that idea? Johnny—Well, I looked it up in the dictionary, and it said, "A man who attends to the affairs of others."—Cape "Register."

PROBABLY no human invention has aided the course of justice to a greater extent, says London "Tit-Bits," than the snapshot camera. It has been instrumental in condemning criminals, and has also been the means before now of saving innocent lives.

A case in point is that of Alfred Grayson, an Englishman who was living a few years ago at Rio de Janeiro. He was accused of the murder of a Brazilian named Linares, a clerk in the same office with himself. The two were known to have quarreled some days previous to the Sunday on which Linares met his death. Apparently, however, they had made up their difference, for they went out sailing that day on a small yacht which Grayson had hired.

In the evening Grayson brought the dead body of Linares home. His story was that the latter had fallen from the mast and fractured his skull. But medical evidence was of opinion the wound on the head had been made with a stick or oar. An oar was missing from the yacht's dingey. The mast-climbing story, too, sounded improbable, for the rigging was all worked from deck. Taking the recent quarrel into consideration, and Grayson's well-known violent temper, the case was black, indeed, against the Englishman. The coroner's jury had already found him guilty of murder, when a passenger on a Marseilles steamer, which had arrived in Rio on the Sunday afternoon, came forward with a new piece of evidence.

This was a snap-shot photograph taken as the vessel entered the harbor. Far away, under the cliffs, a tiny vessel was sailing, and against the white sail was a dark mark, which a powerful magnifier proved to be a falling man. By an almost miraculous coincidence the camera had been snapped just as Linares fell. The photograph turned the scale in Grayson's favor.

Almost equally curious is the way in which a photograph aided justice in the Cooper murder case. Cooper was assistant to a young blacksmith named McKenna in a Lanarkshire village. Both men were known to be fond of the same girl. One day Cooper was found dead on the floor of the smithy. He had been poisoned with carbolic acid. McKenna was suspected, but there was no proof whatever of his having ever bought or owned any carbolic acid, while Cooper was known to have purchased, as a toothache remedy, the phial found beside his dead body. "Death from misadventure" was the verdict.

Shortly afterwards McKenna was arrested. It appeared that an English tourist provided with a kodak had passed through the village on the very morning of the murder. Attracted by the quaintness of the old forge, he had taken several snap-shots of it. The photographer went on to stay in an out-of-the-way part of the Highlands, and did not hear of Cooper's death for some days. Then he hastened to develop his plates. Plain in one of the pictures were three bottles on a shelf. Two were beer bottles, the third was unmistakably one of those fluted blue glass bottles in which poisons are sold. It had also a label on it, and though the wording on this could not be read, yet on the strength of this evidence the police made a thorough search of McKenna's premises. They found the remains of the bottle in question in an old well, and proved that it had contained carbolic acid. Then McKenna confessed his guilt.

The more recent developments of scientific photography must make the criminal feel less secure than he used to. One of those thieves who make a living by van-robbing got an unpleasant shock one day in March last. He had safely got off with a tub of butter which he had stolen from the tail of a wagon as it was crossing a bridge in Rochester, N.Y. The deadly witness against him was a photograph taken by telephotography from the top of a neighboring high building.

A biograph picture of the Grand Trunk Railway bridge over the Niagara Gorge was recently taken, and, when developed, thrown upon the canvas at a music hall at Toronto. It was then noticed for the first time by the audience that a human body was tossing and spinning in the whirling waters. Search was at once made, and the body of a missing and much-advertised suicide was discovered, still caught in the furious suction of the whirlpool.

Hindu criminals succeed by long practice in forming a little bag in their throats into which they can guide jewels when they steal them. Last September a native was arrested for stealing a diamond worth 10,000 rupees from a jeweler's window in Calcutta. But as the evidence was only circumstantial, and possession unproved, he would have been liberated had it not occurred to the police to have an X-ray photograph taken of his throat. That showed the gem safely hidden in the little sac. The thief was sentenced to two years' imprisonment, but he still refuses to give up the diamond.

The Roentgen-ray photography has also been instrumental in adding several thousand pounds to the Customs revenue of Buenos Ayres within the last year. Valuable jewelry on which no duty was being paid was known to be coming into the country in letters. It is, however, illegal to open letters or stamped packages, so the law-breakers went unchecked. At last, in June, 1900, several registered letters and packages were examined under X-rays in the presence of the Argentine Postmaster-General. Sixty-six suspected packages contained $4400 worth of jewelry, and were, of course, all confiscated.

What She Said.

It wasn't a smoking compartment, but they were using it for that purpose all the same, and she was too modest to object. By and by the two men got into a discussion over the woman question, and at last one of them, an unregenerate bachelor, appealed to the lady thus:

"Do you think there will be men in heaven, miss?"

She blushed.

"No!" she said. "They will want to go somewhere where they can smoke."

The discussion stopped; so did the smoking.

To be acceptable to the aristocracy one must be an ass or a millionaire.

BREAKFAST—SUPPER

A Four Leaved Clover.

I WAS hard at work drawing a bird, which might eventually draw a cheque, when the doorbell sounded. I didn't want to be interrupted, for my editor, as a few editors are, was a soulless brute where promptitude was concerned, and my drawing had to be completed.

In a moment the servant brought in a card. It was the proper size and all that, and the name upon it was "Mr. Edward Ross."

Now, there are peculiarities about cards, and somehow this one rather impressed me. I knew no one of that name, yet the neat, white thing was unmistakable; so, laying down my brush, I sought the reception-room.

A big, trim-looking young fellow faced me, a wonderfully musical voice bade me good-morning with a certain cheery smoothness which was very pleasing, and a pair of particularly keen eyes took me in from head to foot, then apparently fixed themselves upon my left ear.

"I'm afraid you are busy?" he remarked, as his eyes shifted from my ear.

At that instant I remembered a second brush, for the moment forgotten in its usual place.

"Not too busy for business," I replied, at the same time saying inwardly, "You've got a quick eye and wit."

"Good—it's business," he commented. "The fact is, a friend of mine wants a story of the Speedway according to this memo. He asked me to get it; I made a few enquiries; Mr. —— advised seeing you." As he concluded he handed me the slip of paper, upon which was scribbled. "Conception, prime movers, construction, cost, prominent patrons, value to public, undesirable features, if any; interesting as possible; not to exceed five thousand words."

"That's all easy enough, if the price be right," I said.

"I am at liberty to offer you $——, providing the story reaches him by the fifteenth," he continued.

There was ample time, so I closed with the offer, and the business end of the interview was reached.

"How far is this Speedway from here? I've never seen it," he said, as he prepared to leave.

"Only a few blocks," I replied; then, urged by a sudden impulse, I added: "If you don't mind waiting twenty minutes in my shop while I finish a small matter, I'll take you up there."

"Good," he replied. "I shall be only too happy, if you are sure I'm not too much trouble."

"This way," I replied. "Smoke up and talk as much as you want to—doesn't bother me in the least."

His eyes lighted with pleasure as they fell upon the almost completed drawing, and his remarks presently proved that he knew the bird well. In a few moments I was busy with finishing touches; and, while he said little, his keen eyes noted every move with absorbed interest. After a bit I laid aside brushes, picked up the glass, verified the work and rose.

"Take a look through the glass," I said. "It'll show you what the result will be."

He looked long and smiled approval.

"It's wonderful," he said, "what knowledge and skill can do. That bird is all right. I can't do such things, but I have a rare good eye. That little drawing carries me back to a place far away, where that bird made its home in a certain tree. I know him well and—would—would you sell me that? I mean after you are through with it," he hastily added.

"No, but I'll give it to you three weeks hence. I can't sell it twice, you know," I retorted, laughing.

"I'll take you at your word, and I'll get hunk," he retorted, meaningly.

In a few moments the drawing was ready for mailing, and we started. The first mail-box trapped the bird; then we swung away for our destination. From the bridge we looked down upon athletic field and ball-grounds, and here my companion's personal knowledge of Upper Manhattan ended. Once upon the Speedway he became as animated as an eager boy, but the shrewd comments he made upon every important feature proved him to be rarely well informed concerning the cost of and work and the requirements of a fast, safe course. Before we had passed beneath the mighty arches which eloquently declare man's mastery over natural obstacles, he had me wondering, for those keen eyes of his saw everything and his crisp remarks proved that he had read much and had a wonderful memory.

Those who have not seen the Speedway can have no conception of its beauty. Upon the one hand the broad water, yet stirring with the pulse of the distant sea; beyond that, noble hills rolling away in tremendous, halted billows of green; beside you the low stone wall, with its guarding metal rail; then the broad-flagged walk; then the Way itself, broad and ample and carefully brushed as smooth as a yellow carpet. Across it, another broad walk, and towering far above it, tremendous cliffs of roughest rock, with grand trees clinging where they may and brush and creepers draping with lovely screen all traces of man's wondrous effort. Such is the magic roadway which the wizard money conjured from among rock-masses flung by warring forces in mystic days of old. Legends of giants' hour and crafty elves cling like lichens to these rocks, but now, at their bases, curves a modern race-course, printed by the flying feet of the swiftest light-harness horses the world contains.

As we strolled along a beautiful brown colt passed at top speed, his gait the perfection of smooth trotting, the dainty pneumatic seeming hardly to touch the ground. Soon he came jogging back, full of fire and eager for another burst. I knew the driver, and in response to my query of "Anything doing to-day?" he replied, "Sure—the match—start in 'bout an hour."

Then I remembered that a couple of rival gentlemen drivers had matched their favorite fliers weeks before, and that this was the day of the race. Furthermore, I was aware that big money had been wagered and that a [illegible] race was expected. The coming contest explained the deserted appearance of the Speedway—beyond a doubt a [illegible] gathered about the headquarters of the further [illegible] that would rise between them, and all for love of the same fair face.

CHAPTER VII.

"Tell me you love me, and will be my Bride."

The letter Farmer Gordon had written to Alexander Hamilton—telling him of his change of fortune, and that he intended sending the girls to Cape May,—alarmed the latter at once. He had come on without delay.

Olive and Hetty were delighted to see him, and they both noticed with wonder how anxiously he inquired after Daisy almost before the greetings were over.

"I thought you were to be away a year, and that we should not see you for that length of time, Aleck?" said Hetty, with an arch smile.

"It is a great loss to my business that I am here," he replied ruefully; "but I—I— could not stay away when I heard you were all here."

Both girls blushed violently, but, before either could reply, he asked hurriedly:

"Where is Daisy?"

"Moping in her room at the hotel, I suppose," laughed Olive. "Ah, here she comes now!" she added, espying the slender figure of Daisy, in white tulle and blue ribbons, hurrying over the sand toward them.

Aleck turned quickly, his heart in his eyes, as he watched Daisy.

Daisy stopped short as she saw the tall figure of a man standing beside her sisters.

"Oh, it's you, is it, Mr. Aleck?" she cried, in apparent relief; "I thought it was a stranger."

Aleck's heart gave a great throb as he held the little fluttering white hand in his.

"Are you pleased to see me, Daisy?" he asked eagerly.

"Yes," she answered, and he started back at the strangeness of her voice; and, looking anxiously into her face, he could see by the bright, white light of the moon how pale and wan it was.

Could it be that she had cared for him —that she had missed him, and was grieving over his absence?

It was sad to see how he caught and clung to the wild hope— he loved little Daisy so madly.

It was a torture to both Olive and Hetty Gordon to see Daisy monopolize handsome Aleck's society, during the hour that followed on the beach.

For the first time both the girls noticed how "taken up," to use their own phrase, he was with Daisy; he had no eyes for any one else.

That night the three sister had a violent quarrel in their room.

Both girls insisted that Daisy should be sent home, declaring she should not remain to spoil the chance of either one or the other winning Aleck Hamilton, for he had signified his intention of remaining at least a fortnight.

"If that is all, I will agree to avoid Aleck," said Daisy, wiping the tears from her lovely blue eyes; "either one of you can have him for all I care."

That was how it happened that she avoided Aleck so persistently, and caused him to be most recklessly desperate in his attempts to see her, and have a good talk with her.

He made a confidante of Mrs. Burnett at last, begging her to give him just one opportunity of seeing Daisy, when her body guards, as he designated Olive and Hetty, were not about.

Mrs. Burnett sympathised deeply with the handsome, impetuous young lover; she would have been delighted to have seen Daisy and Aleck marry, if her favorite niece had been older by a year or so; still, as it was, she was not inclined to throw a straw in the way of his wooing.

Matters might have gone on forever in this way had not a thrilling event transpired which changed the currents of two lives.

It happened that Mrs. Burnett and Daisy were walking on the beach one afternoon, when Aleck joined them, and at that very instant a small boy sporting in the waves a few feet from them gave a sharp, quick cry.

In an instant they comprehended what had happened; the lad had lost his hold of the life- rope, and the under- current had carried him out as it receded.

The lad's cry had reached the ears of a lady on the adjacent hotel veranda.

With a cry that those who heard it never forgot, she sprung down the beach, crying:

"Oh, for the love of heaven save him! He is my only son— my only child!"

She was frantic with agony and terror, and those about could hardly restrain her from flinging herself into the mad waters that engulfed her boy.

A hand, strong and gentle, drew her back; it was Aleck, his noble face all aglow.

"Courage!" he cried. "I will save the boy or perish with him."

In a flash he had torn off his coat and was breasting the mad waves, shouting lustily to the drowning lad.

It seemed to Daisy, who watched with bated breath, an age until he reached the boy.

A hoarse cry rose from the throats of the spectators on shore.

"They are both going—— Look! young Hamilton has sunk. See, there is a violent summer storm coming up. Ah, how heavy the sea is! God help the noble fellow who has periled his life, but I fear it is all useless."

These and many such were the comments Daisy heard all about her.

Then, standing there— watching in agony too pitifully agonizing for words, while he made that violent death struggle— the terrible truth rushed across her mind— she loved Aleck, the girlish heart that had been slumbering awakened now to full consciousness. Yes, she knew the truth now, she loved him, life would be all over for her if he lost his life.

What to her was the throng about her?

"Oh, God! save Aleck!" that was the cry that rose from her lips to the blue heavens.

A life- boat had been sent out, and more dead than alive Aleck was brought to shore, still clutching the lad in his arms.

Loud and mighty was the shout that greeted him, but Aleck was deaf to their cries of joy and praise; even the agonized voice of Daisy fell upon deadened senses as she knelt beside him, praying him to open his eyes and speak to her.

One of Napoleon's Boasts.

WE who know the last as well as the first of Napoleon, who have read about Moscow, Leipsic, Elba, Waterloo and St. Helena as studiously as about the campaigns in Italy, and Marengo, Jena and Austerlitz, cannot fully comprehend with what reverence some of his apophthegms were received by the French when he was still unbeaten and apparently unbeatable. One of his boasts was that he was not governed by circumstances; that he made circumstances and was superior to them. When someone hinted that destiny might compass his defeat he replied that destiny would not dare. Even Victor Hugo, half a century after Waterloo, was blinded by the light of Napoleon's genius, and treated him as a Titan, fit to contend, though vainly, with high heaven. It was not Wellington, not Blucher who defeated Napoleon, says Hugo in his beautiful rhapsody on Waterloo; it was God. Napoleon, he declares, with blasphemous brilliancy, embarrassed God. "Waterloo was a change of front on the part of the universe"—the quotation is from memory—"in the new series of facts there was no room for Napoleon. Therefore a second-class commander won a first-class battle."

A good many believe with Napoleon that genius rises above circumstances. Napoleon's boastful epigram has been declared a rule of faith by successful men, who scout the idea of village Hampdens and mute, inglorious Miltons. But the epigram is nothing but a boast. It is not true. We are held fast in the vise of circumstances and are not completely masters of our fate. Luck enters into every game, even the game of life. No man can arrange the cards in the game with destiny, for destiny always deals. It may rain some day when the best laid plans call for sunshine, and the plans may be pulverized. At Austerlitz, which was fought at dawn, Napoleon said: "We have a rendezvous with the sun and both parties are on time." The Sun of Austerlitz became a superstition in the Grand Army.

But at Waterloo there was another rendezvous with the sun and the sun was tardy. Waterloo is the convincing answer to Napoleon's boast and to the precept that great men are superior to circumstances. Hugo points out that accidents defeated Napoleon. His plan, as experts admit, was a masterpiece. But he reckoned without luck. The battle was to have commenced at dawn, but rain fell the previous night, and the ground became too muddy for the manoeuvres of artillery. Napoleon therefore delayed the assault nearly six hours, until the ground became firmer. That delay gave Blucher time to come up when he was needed and to turn the tide of the fray. The rainfall defeated Napoleon and drove him to St. Helena. A peasant guide led Blucher aright, and he chanced to debouch on the field from the point and at the moment where and when he was supremely effective. Another peasant guide led Grouchy astray and he did not arrive. Had it not rained before the battle, had Blucher had a bad guide and Grouchy a good one, history might have been different. Napoleon was conquered by circumstances.—San Francisco "Bulletin."

A Damaging Defence.

Mark Twain, says "Life" has got support from an unexpected quarter in his efforts to demonstrate the impropriety of some things done by missionaries in China. In the "Forum" a missionary named Gilbert Reid has defended looting by missionaries with so much candor and jauntiness, and has so gloried in such looting as he did himself, as not to leave the critics of the looting missionaries much to do to prove their case. "Anyone who was sorry for the American missionaries in China, because our Brother Mark found fault with some things that some of them did, will be doubly sorry for them when he reads their defence by the Rev. Gilbert Reid. They may have justly incurred Mark's strictures, but they never deserved the Rev. Reid's defence.

Annexing New Languages.

In the new editions of the dictionaries many thousands of new words are announced. The English-speaking nations are the growing nations, comments an exchange, and the English language is the expanding language; it is annexing everything useful from every other language of the world. The difference between the comparatively modest volume which Noah Webster got out and the ponderous unabridged work of to-day, representing the toil and the knowledge and the research of hundreds of the ablest scholars of the world shows the marvelous development. One interesting feature of this expansion is the gradual elimination of italicizing. Not many years ago it was the custom to put any word that had a foreign look about it in italics; now we use this as our own as coolly as we vote a naturalized immigrant in a close primary. The effect is rather curious. It has discouraged the use of foreign phrases, and the ambitious one who wants to display his smattering of French in an English article finds his importations supplanted by home products. The editor makes the change, unless there are special reasons why it should not be done. The gain to the average reader, who dislikes to stumble against such affectation without knowing what the strange words mean, is great. So marked, indeed, has been this change that the typesetting machines, by which the newspapers of the world are now set up, have no italic letters, except where they are especially required.

A cheap-Jack butcher brought his cart to a standstill in Petticoat Lane. A miserable old woman eyed closely the heap of bones and gristle which was referred to by the butcher as joints and steaks. She was evidently very poor indeed, as she hesitated to pay threepence for a scaleful of "selected bits." "'Ere, 'ave 'em for tuppence," growled the butcher. "Too much," said the woman. "'Ave 'em at a penny." Still the woman hesitated. There was a look of pity, mixed with disgust, on his face as he yelled: "Still too much? 'Ere, 'ang it! I'll turn me back while you sneak 'em!"—London "Spare Moments."

A Woman's Age.

Mr. Youngwed—Do you mean to say you are 24 years old to-day? Why, you told me six months ago, just before the wedding, that you were only 21.

Mrs. Youngwed—Yes, I know; but, my dear, I've aged so rapidly since we were married.

Miss Crawford—How did you enjoy your ocean voyage? Miss Crabshaw—It was just lovely. The state-room seemed so comfortable after living in a flat.—[illegible]

A story of a "joke" played in Vienna on Mascagni, the composer, who is soon to visit the United States, is going the round of the newspapers in Italy, where it has created an extremely bad impression. The distinguished Italian was the guest of honor at a soiree given by the theatrical artists of the Austrian capital, and expressed regret that he was unable either to speak or understand German, whereupon an actor of comic parts arose and addressed him very solemnly, saying: "Most illustrious maestro, you have given to the world 'Cavalleria Rusticana,' which is a musical freak." At this point Mascagni also rose, and warmly shook the orator's hand. "You have no other talent than that of self-advertisement." Another effusion on the part of the composer. "In a word, you are merely a genial usage." Prolonged applause, at which Mascagni could scarcely master his emotion.

Adelina Patti is, as all the world knows, one of the most charitable women in the world, and nothing pleases her more than to do a good turn "on the quiet," as she herself laughingly puts it. Last winter she was staying for a few days in an isolated village at the extreme end of Yorkshire. To kill the monotony of the place, the great singer went one night to a concert got up in aid of a certain village institution. Not half the performers turned up. Seeing the difficulty in which the chairman and committee were placed, Madame Patti (incognito, of course) offered to oblige them with a song or two if they cared about it. After she had rendered, in her own glorious way, three of her sweetest ballads, the chairman approached her, and, in solemn tones, thanked her: "Well, Miss, you've done oncommon well; and, although 'Arry 'Ock, the juggler, who thinks nowt of takin' 'old of 'ot pokers and a-swallowin' needles, couldn't turn up, yet you've pleased us very considerable, Miss!"

Colonel Osio was the present King of Italy's "governor" for very many years, when, as Prince of Naples, his charge was a delicate lad. Colonel Osio's strict regime has been very severely criticised, but that the King remembers him with respect, if not with affection, is proved by his having conferred the hereditary title of count upon him on the occasion of the birth of the Princess Yolanda. One day a request came from a well-known personage for the young prince's autograph, to be added to a collection containing that of his grandfather and his father. The prince was about to comply, when the colonel said, sharply: "Certainly not; what value has the signature of an insignificant boy who does not even know how to write properly?" For some act of disobedience a little later the prince was brought before his "governor," who exclaimed: "If I were the King I would cut off your head." "And I will cut off yours when I am king," defiantly replied the lad. His punishment is unrecorded, but, instead of cutting off his tyrant's head when that day came, he has ennobled him.

During the famous Douglas and Lincoln debate and subsequent campaigns the point was frequently brought out by the supporters of "the Little Giant" that Mr. Lincoln had served only a single term in Congress, but that Senator Douglas had enjoyed for years a national reputation. This point, says a writer in "Lippincott's," was urged in a heated discussion between an ardent supporter of Douglas and a German voter who favored Lincoln. Finally the former, thinking to overwhelm his opponent, said: "Who is this Lincoln, anyhow? Nobody ever heard of him until Senator Douglas brought him into notice by holding a joint debate with him. Senator Douglas, on the other hand, is a great statesman. Why, he has had his eye on the Presidential chair for the last ten years!" "Vot is dot you say?" was the reply. "You say Meester Douglas have hat his eye on der President chair for ten years?" "Yes, that is just what I said." "Vell, you shoost tell Meester Douglas if he vill keep his eye on dot chair shoost a leedle vile longer he vill see old Abe Lincoln sitting down in it." This closed the debate, amid a roar of laughter from the bystanders.

His Impression.

"Do you believe that college-bred women make good wives?"

"I don't think going to college makes the slightest difference," answered Mr. Meekton. "You couldn't keep a woman from assuming a position of superior knowledge by merely not sending her to school."—Washington "Star."

The Definition.

Teacher—Johnny, can you tell me what is meant by "steward?" Johnny —A steward is a man who doesn't mind his own business. Teacher—Where did you get that idea? Johnny—Well, I looked it up in the dictionary, and it said, "A man who attends to the affairs of others."—Cape "Register."

PROBABLY no human invention has aided the course of justice to a greater extent, says London "Tit-Bits," than the snapshot camera. It has been instrumental in condemning criminals, and has also been the means before now of saving innocent lives.

A case in point is that of Alfred Grayson, an Englishman who was living a few years ago at Rio de Janeiro. He was accused of the murder of a Brazilian named Linares, a clerk in the same office with himself. The two were known to have quarrelled some days previous to the Sunday on which Linares met his death. Apparently, however, they had made up their difference, for they went out sailing that day on a small yacht which Grayson had hired.

In the evening Grayson brought the dead body of Linares home. His story was that the latter had fallen from the mast and fractured his skull. But medical evidence was of opinion the wound on the head had been made with a stick or oar. An oar was missing from the yacht's dingey. The mast-climbing story, too, sounded improbable, for the rigging was all worked from deck. Taking the recent quarrel into consideration, and Grayson's well-known violent temper, the case was black, indeed, against the Englishman. The coroner's jury had already found him guilty of murder, when a passenger on a Marseilles steamer, which had arrived in Rio on the Sunday afternoon, came forward with a new piece of evidence.

This was a snap-shot photograph taken as the vessel entered the harbor. Far away, under the cliffs, a tiny vessel was sailing, and against the white sail was a dark mark, which a powerful magnifier proved to be a falling man. By an almost miraculous coincidence the camera had been snapped just as Linares fell. The photograph turned the scale in Grayson's favor.

Almost equally curious is the way in which a photograph aided justice in the Cooper murder case. Cooper was assistant to a young blacksmith named McKenna in a Lanarkshire village. Both men were known to be fond of the same girl. One day Cooper was found dead on the floor of the smithy. He had been poisoned with carbolic acid. McKenna was suspected, but there was no proof whatever of his having ever bought or owned any carbolic acid, while Cooper was known to have purchased, as a toothache remedy, the phial found beside his dead body. "Death from misadventure" was the verdict.

Shortly afterwards McKenna was arrested. It appeared that an English tourist provided with a kodak had passed through the village on the very morning of the murder. Attracted by the quaintness of the old forge, he had taken several snap-shots of it. The photographer went on to stay in an out-of-the-way part of the Highlands, and did not hear of Cooper's death for some days. Then he hastened to develop his plates. Plain in one of the pictures were three bottles on a shelf. Two were beer bottles, the third was unmistakably one of those fluted blue glass bottles in which poisons are sold. It had also a label on it, and though the wording on this could not be read, yet on the strength of this evidence the police made a thorough search of McKenna's premises. They found the remains of the bottle in question in an old well, and proved that it had contained carbolic acid. Then McKenna confessed his guilt.

The more recent developments of scientific photography must make the criminal feel less secure than he used to. One of those thieves who make a living by van-robbing got an unpleasant shock one day in March last. He had safely got off with a tub of butter which he had stolen from the tail of a wagon as it was crossing a bridge in Rochester, N.Y. The deadly witness against him was a photograph taken by telephotography from the top of a neighboring high building.

A biograph picture of the Grand Trunk Railway bridge over the Niagara Gorge was recently taken, and, when developed, thrown upon the canvas at a music hall at Toronto. It was then noticed for the first time by the audience that a human body was tossing and spinning in the whirling waters. Search was at once made, and the body of a missing and much-advertised suicide was discovered, still caught in the furious suction of the whirlpool.

Hindu criminals succeed by long practice in forming a little bag in their throats into which they can guide jewels when they steal them. Last September a native was arrested for stealing a diamond worth 10,000 rupees from a jeweler's window in Calcutta. But as the evidence was only circumstantial, and possession unproved, he would have been liberated had it not occurred to the police to have an X-ray photograph taken of his throat. That showed the gem safely hidden in the little sac. The thief was sentenced to two years' imprisonment, but he still refuses to give up the diamond.

The Roentgen-ray photography has also been instrumental in adding several thousand pounds to the Customs revenue of Buenos Ayres within the last year. Valuable jewelry on which no duty was being paid was known to be coming into the country in letters. It is, however, illegal to open letters or stamped packages, so the law-breakers were unchecked. At last, in June, 1900, several registered letters and packages were examined under X-rays in the presence of the Argentine Postmaster-General. Sixty-six suspected packages contained $4,000 worth of jewelry, and were, of course, all confiscated.

What She Said.

It wasn't a smoking compartment, but they were using it for that purpose all the same, and she was too modest to object. By and by the two men got into a discussion over the woman question, and at last one of them, an unregenerate bachelor, appealed to the lady thus:

"Do you think there will be men in heaven, miss?"

She blushed.

"No!" she said. "They will want to go somewhere where they can smoke."

The discussion stopped; so did the smoking.

A Four Leaved Clover.

I WAS hard at work drawing a bird, which might eventually draw a cheque, when the doorbell sounded. I didn't want to be interrupted, for my editor, as a few editors are, was a soulless brute where promptitude was concerned, and my drawing had to be completed.

In a moment the servant brought in a card. It was the proper size and all that, and the name upon it was "Mr. Edward Ross."

Now, there are peculiarities about cards, and somehow this one rather impressed me. I knew no one of that name, yet the neat, white thing was unmistakable; so, laying down my brush, I sought the reception-room.

A big, trim-looking young fellow faced me, a wonderfully musical voice bade me good-morning with a certain cheery smoothness which was very pleasing, and a pair of particularly keen eyes took me in from head to foot, then apparently fixed themselves upon my left ear.

"I'm afraid you are busy?" he remarked, as his eyes shifted from my ear.

At that instant I remembered a second brush, for the moment forgotten in its usual place.

"Not too busy for business," I replied, at the same time saying inwardly, "You've got a quick eye and wit."

"Good—it's business," he commented. "The fact is, a friend of mine wants a story of the Speedway according to this memo. He asked me to get it; I made a few enquiries; Mr. —— advised seeing you." As he concluded he handed me the slip of paper, upon which was scribbled, "Conception, prime movers, construction, cost, prominent patrons, value to public, undesirable features, if any; interesting as possible; not to exceed five thousand words."

"That's all easy enough, if the price be right," I said.

"I am at liberty to offer you $——, providing the story reaches him by the fifteenth," he continued.

There was ample time, so I closed with the offer, and the business end of the interview was reached.

"How far is this Speedway from here? I've never seen it," he said, as he prepared to leave.

"Only a few blocks," I replied; then, urged by a sudden impulse, I added: "If you don't mind waiting twenty minutes in my shop while I finish a small matter, I'll take you up there."

"Good," he replied. "I shall be only too happy, if you are sure I'm not too much trouble."

"This way," I replied. "Smoke up and talk as much as you want to—doesn't bother me in the least."

His eyes lighted with pleasure as they fell upon the almost completed drawing, and his remarks presently proved that he knew the bird well. In a few moments I was busy with finishing touches; and, while he said little, his keen eyes noted every move with absorbed interest. After a bit I laid aside brushes, picked up the glass, verified the work and rose.

"Take a look through the glass," I said. "It'll show you what the result will be."

He looked long and smiled approval.

"It's wonderful," he said, "what knowledge and skill can do. That bird is all right. I can't do such things, but I have a rare good eye. That little drawing carries me back to a place far away, where that bird made his home in a certain tree.—I know him well and—would—would you sell me that? I mean after you are through with it," he hastily added.

"No, but I'll give it to you three weeks hence. I can't sell it twice, you know," I retorted, laughing.

"I'll take you at your word, and I'll get hunk," he retorted, meaningly.

In a few moments the drawing was ready for mailing, and we started. The first mail-box trapped the bird; then we swung away for our destination. From the bridge we looked down upon athletic field and ball-grounds, and here my companion's personal knowledge of Upper Manhattan ended. Once upon the Speedway he became as animated as an eager boy, but the shrewd comments he made upon every important feature proved him to be rarely well informed concerning the cost of and work and the requirements of a fast, safe course. Before we had passed beneath the mighty arches which eloquently declare man's mastery over natural obstacles, he had me wondering, for those keen eyes of his saw everything and his crisp remarks proved that he had read much and had a wonderful memory.

Those who have not seen the Speedway can have no conception of its beauty. Upon the one hand the broad water, yet stirring with the pulse of the distant sea; beyond that, noble hills rolling away in tremendous, halted billows of green; beside you the low stone wall, with its guarding metal rails, then the broad-flagged walk; then the Way itself, broad and ample and carefully brushed as smooth as a yellow carpet. Across it, another broad walk, and towering far above it, tremendous cliffs of roughest rock, with grand trees clinging where they may and brush and creepers draping with leafy screen all traces of man's wondrous effort. Such is the magic roadway which the wizard money conjured from among rock-masses flung by warring forces in mystic days of old. Legends of giants' hour and crafty elves cling like lichens to these rocks, but now, at their bases, curves a modern race-course, printed by the flying feet of the swiftest light-harness horses the world contains.

As we strolled along a beautiful brown colt passed at top speed, his gait the perfection of smooth trotting, the dainty pneumatic seeming hardly to touch the ground. Soon he came jogging back, full of fire and eager for another burst. I knew the driver, and in response to my query of "Anything doing to-day?" he replied, "Sure—the match—start in 'bout an hour."

Then I remembered that a couple of rival gentlemen drivers had matched their favorite fliers weeks before, and that this was the day of the race. Furthermore, I was aware that big money had been wagered and that a cracking race was expected. The coming contest explained the deserted appearance of the Speedway—beyond a doubt a crowd of keen horsemen was gathered about the headquarters at the farther end of the course.

I explained the situation to Ross, and suggested our waiting where we were for a while, as we were near [illegible]

DAISY GORDON'S FOLLY

—OR—

The World Lost for Love's Sake

By Laura Jean Libbey

Author of The Crime of Hallow-E'en, The Flirtations of a Beauty Willful Gaynell, Little Leafy, Only a Mechanic's Daughter that would rise between them, and all for love of the same fair face.

CHAPTER VII.

"Tell me you love me, and will be my Bride."

The letter Farmer Gordon had written to Alexander Hamilton—telling him of his change of fortune, and that he intended sending the girls to Cape May, —alarmed the latter at once. He had come on without delay.

Olive and Hetty were delighted to see him, and they both noticed with wonder how anxiously he inquired after Daisy almost before the greetings were over.

"I thought you were to be away a year, and that we should not see you for that length of time, Aleck?" said Hetty, with an arch smile.

"It is a great loss to my business that I am here," he replied ruefully; "but I—I— could not stay away when I heard you were all here."

Both girls blushed violently, but, before either could reply, he asked hurriedly:

"Where is Daisy?"

"Moping in her room at the hotel, I suppose," laughed Olive. "Ah, here she comes now!" she added, espying the slender figure of Daisy, in white tulle and blue ribbons, hurrying over the sand toward them.

Aleck turned quickly; his heart in his eyes, as he watched Daisy.

Daisy stopped short as she saw the tall figure of a man standing beside her sisters.

"Oh, it's you, is it, Mr. Aleck?" she cried, in apparent relief.; "I thought it was a stranger."

Aleck's heart gave a great throb as he held the little fluttering white hand in his.

"Are you pleased to see me, Daisy?" he asked eagerly.

"Yes," she answered, and he started back at the strangeness of her voice; and, looking anxiously into her face, he could see by the bright, white light of the moon how pale and wan it was.

Could it be that she had cared for him —that she had missed him, and was grieving over his absence?

It was sad to see how he caught and clung to the wild hope— he loved little Daisy so madly.

It was a torture to both Olive and Hetty Gordon to see Daisy monopolize handsome Aleck's society, during the hour that followed on the beach.

For the first time both the girls noticed how "taken up," to use their own phrase, he was with Daisy; he had no eyes for any one else.

That night the three sister had a violent quarrel in their room.

Both girls insisted that Daisy should be sent home, declaring she should not remain to spoil the chance of either one or the other winning Aleck Hamilton, for he had signified his intention of remaining at least a fortnight.

"If that is all, I will agree to avoid Aleck," said Daisy, wiping the tears from her lovely blue eyes; "either one of you can have him for all I care."

That was how it happened that she avoided Aleck so persistently, and caused him to be most recklessly desperate in his attempts to see her, and have a good talk with her.

He made a confidante of Mrs. Burnett at last, begging her to give him just one opportunity of seeing Daisy, when her body guards, as he designated Olive and Hetty, were not about.

Mrs. Burnett sympathized deeply with the handsome, impetuous young lover; she would have been delighted to have seen Daisy and Aleck marry, if her favorite niece had been older by a year or so; still, as it was, she was not inclined to throw a straw in the way of his wooing.

Matters might have gone on forever in this way had not a thrilling event transpired which changed the currents of two lives.

It happened that Mrs. Burnett and Daisy were walking on the beach one afternoon, when Aleck joined them, and at that very instant a small boy sporting in the waves a few feet from them gave a sharp, quick cry.

In an instant they comprehended what had happened; the lad had lost his hold of the life- rope, and the under- current had carried him out as it receded.

The lad's cry had reached the ears of a lady on the adjacent hotel veranda.

With a cry that those who heard it never forgot, she sprung down the beach, crying:

"Oh, for the love of heaven save him! He is my only son— my only child!"

She was frantic with agony and terror, and those about could hardly restrain her from flinging herself into the mad waters that engulfed her boy.

A hand, strong and gentle, drew her back; it was Aleck, his noble face all aglow.

"Courage!" he cried. "I will save the boy or perish with him."

In a flash he had torn off his coat and was breasting the mad waves, shouting lustily to the drowning lad.

It seemed to Daisy, who watched with bated breath, an age until he reached the boy.

A hoarse cry rose from the throats of the spectators on shore.

"They are both going—— Look! young Hamilton has sunk. See, there is a violent summer storm coming up. Ah, how heavy the sea is! God help the noble fellow who has periled his life, but I fear it is all useless."

These and many such were the comments Daisy heard all about her.

Then, standing there— watching in agony too pitifully agonizing for words, while he made that violent death struggle— the terrible truth rushed across her mind— she loved Aleck, the girlish heart that had been slumbering awakened now to full consciousness. Yes, she knew the truth now, she loved him, life would be all over for her if he lost his life.

What to her was the throng about her?

"Oh, God! save Aleck!" that was the cry that rose from her lips to the blue heavens.

A life- boat had been sent out, and more dead than alive Aleck was brought to shore, still clutching the lad in his arms.

Loud and mighty was the shout that greeted him, but Aleck was deaf to their cries of joy and praise; even the agonized voice of Daisy fell upon deadened senses as she knelt beside him, praying him to open his eyes and speak to her.

One of Napoleon's Boasts.

WE who know the last as well as the first of Napoleon, who have read about Moscow, Leipsitz, Elba, Waterloo and St. Helena as studiously as about the campaigns in Italy, and Marengo, Jena and Austerlitz, cannot fully comprehend with what reverence some of his apophthegms were received by the French when he was still unbeaten and apparently unbeatable. One of his boasts was that he was not governed by circumstances; that he made circumstances and was superior to them. When someone hinted that destiny might compass his defeat he replied that destiny would not dare. Even Victor Hugo, half a century after Waterloo, was blinded by the light of Napoleon's genius, and treated him as a Titan, fit to contend, though vainly, with high heaven. It was not Wellington, not Blucher who defeated Napoleon, says Hugo in his beautiful rhapsody on Waterloo; it was God. Napoleon, he declares, with blasphemous brilliancy, embarrassed God. "Waterloo was a change of front on the part of the universe"—the quotation is from memory —"in the new series of facts there was no room for Napoleon. Therefore a second-class commander won a first-class battle."

A good many believe with Napoleon that genius rises above circumstances. Napoleon's boastful epigram has been declared a rule of faith by successful men, who scout the idea of village Hampdens and mute, inglorious Miltons. But the epigram is nothing but a boast. It is not true. We are held fast in the vise of circumstances and are not completely masters of our fate. Luck enters into every game, even the game of life. No man can arrange the cards in the game with destiny, for destiny always deals. It may rain some day when the best laid plans call for sunshine, and the plans may be pulverized. At Austerlitz, which was fought at dawn, Napoleon said: "We have a rendezvous with the sun and both parties are on time." The Sun of Austerlitz became a superstition in the Grand Army.

But at Waterloo there was another rendezvous with the sun and the sun was tardy. Waterloo is the convincing answer to Napoleon's boast and to the precept that great men are superior to circumstances. Hugo points out that accidents defeated Napoleon. His plan, as experts admit, was a masterpiece. But he reckoned without luck. The battle was to have commenced at dawn, but rain fell the previous night, and the ground became too muddy for the manoeuvres of artillery. Napoleon therefore delayed the assault nearly six hours, until the ground became firmer. That delay gave Blucher time to come up when he was needed and to turn the tide of the fray. The rainfall defeated Napoleon and drove him to St. Helena. A peasant guide led Blucher aright, and he chanced to debouch on the field from the point and at the moment where and when he was supremely effective. Another peasant guide led Grouchy astray and he did not arrive. Had it not rained before the battle, had Blucher had a bad guide and Grouchy a good one, history might have been different. Napoleon was conquered by circumstances.—San Francisco "Bulletin."

A Damaging Defence.

Mark Twain, says "Life," has got support from an unexpected quarter in his efforts to demonstrate the impropriety of some things done by missionaries in China. In the "Forum" a missionary named Gilbert Reid has defended looting by missionaries with so much candor and jauntiness, and has so gloried in such looting as he did himself, as not to leave the critics of the looting missionaries much to do to prove their case. "Anyone who was sorry for the American missionaries in China, because our Brother Mark found fault with some things that some of them did, will be doubly sorry for them when he reads their defence by the Rev. Gilbert Reid. They may have justly incurred Mark's strictures, but they never deserved the Rev. Reid's defence.

Amazing New Languages.

In the new editions of the dictionaries many thousands of new words are announced. The English-speaking nations are the growing nations, comments an exchange, and the English language is the expanding language; it is annexing everything useful from every other language of the world. The difference between the comparatively modest volume which Noah Webster got out and the ponderous unabridged work of to-day, representing the toil and the knowledge and the research of hundreds of the ablest scholars of the world, shows the marvelous development. One interesting feature of this expansion is the gradual elimination of italicising. Not many years ago it was the custom to put any word that had a foreign look about it in italics; now we use this as our own as coolly as we vote a naturalized immigrant in a close primary. The effect is rather curious. It has discouraged the use of foreign phrases, and the ambitious one who wants to display his smattering of French in an English article finds his importations supplanted by home products. The editor makes the change, unless there are special reasons why it should not be done. The gain to the average reader, who dislikes to stumble against such affectation without knowing what the strange words mean, is great. So marked, indeed, has been this change that the typesetting machines, by which the newspapers of the world are now set up, have no italic letters, except where they are especially required.

A cheap-Jack butcher brought his cart to a standstill in Petticoat Lane. A miserable old woman eyed closely the heap of bones and gristle which was referred to by the butcher as joints and steaks. She was evidently very poor indeed, as she hesitated to pay threepence for a scaleful of "selected bits." "'Ere, 'ave 'em for tuppence," growled the butcher. "Too much," said the woman. "'Ave 'em at a penny." Still the woman hesitated. There was a look of pity, mixed with disgust, on his face as he yelled: "Still too much? 'Ere, 'ang it! I'll turn me back while you sneak 'em!"—London "Spare Moments."

A Woman's Age.

Mr. Youngwed—Do you mean to say you are 24 years old to-day? Why, you told me six months ago, just before the wedding, that you were only 22.

Mrs. Youngwed—Yes, I know; but, my dear, I've aged so rapidly since we were married.

Miss Crawford—How did you enjoy your ocean voyage? Miss Cruikshaw—It was just lovely. The state-room seemed so comfortable after living in a flat.—[illegible]

A MARVELLOUS MEDICINE

"No Cure, No Pay," is the Newest Proposal of the Proprietors of Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills

Editor Morning Times

Sir,—We make the following proposal to the readers of the Times: To any one who is a subject of rheumatism (no matter how long standing), or any blood disease, as enumerated below, and will give Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills a fair trial, and do not find a perfect cure, we will refund the money paid for the pills. If no substantial improvement is observed, we will in addition, pay $10 in cash on satisfactory evidence being supplied us to this effect.

We have yet to know of a single case where these wonderful pills have not been almost entirely successful in effecting a cure. CANADA CHEMICAL CO.

Ex-Ald. Bailey, St. John's, writes: I cannot speak too highly of Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills. They worked a miracle in my case, and cured me after many years of suffering. I do not think their equal is to be obtained.

Dr. Clarke's Little Red Pills are a positive and certain cure for la grippe, rheumatism, asthma, paralysis, catarrh, eczema, coughs, backache, indigestion, all stomach and liver troubles, female complaints, even when the disease have been standing for many years, the most stubborn cases will yield. Price 50 cents per box. For sale by Ormond & Walsh. The Canada Chemical Company will forfeit $10 for any case that these pills do not help.

Dr. Clarke's Sure Cure for Catarrh, and Dr Clarke's Sure Cure for Eczema, same price. $10 will be paid for any case they will not permanently cure.

Don't Allow Operation for Cancer

There is a simpler, safer and more effective Method of Treatment.

Dr. J. C. Oliver, of Cincinnati, Ohio, U. S.A., in a paper he read before the Ohio State Medical Society, May 1898, said: "I have operated in a considerable number of cases of Cancer recently, and with one exception all have died within fourteen months after the operation."

This statement of a prominent Surgeon, should make any one suffering from cancer, hesitate before submitting to operation and consider carefully the evidence offered on behalf of the new Constitutional remedy, which cures Cancers, Tumors and all malignant growths, without the necessity of operation. It is a simple vegetable medicine that searches out and destroys the cancer growths, completely eradicates the disease, and at the same time, builds up and invigorates the system.

Stott & Jury, Bowmanville, Ont., will be pleased to send full particulars of this treatment, in a plain, sealed wrapper.

TOWN AND COUNTY NEWS

Local Happenings Picked Up Here and There by the Times.

NOTE—The Times requests its readers to contribute items of news to its columns. Anything that is phoned or sent in writing to the office, of a nature suitable for publication, will be received and published.—Ed. Times.)

—Mr. Warren Hall began his duties as market clerk yesterday.

—Work has been commenced on the Rubidge street sewer.

—A golf club has been organized at Havelock, and grounds have been secured close to the village.

—A large amount of hay was offered for sale on the market yesterday.

—A telephone company has been organized in the township of Luther. The rate will be $10 a year.

—The steamer Sunbeam has been sold to Lindsay men, who intend putting the boat on the Lindsay waters.

—A New York magistrate has fined thirty-two men five dollars each for spitting on the sidewalk. They will see the signs hereafter.

—Mr. Angus McIntosh will be at the skating rink this evening for the accommodation of those who desire to remove skates, curling stones, etc.

—A fine new flag pole was erected on the elevator shaft of the Cereal works on Monday afternoon. The top of the pole is about 176 feet from the ground.

—At the police court yesterday morning a young man was fined $2 for loitering on Park street on Sunday. The police intend to put a stop to the habit of loitering on the streets and obstructing traffic.

—Orillia business men will continue the Thursday half-holiday plan for the summer months. It was initiated last year and worked without a hitch, having been thoroughly advertised.

—A lady visiting here from New York had photos taken by Whiten. She thought the work was equal to the best she ever had taken. When you want the best go to Whiten and get it. Studio, 158 Hunter street, west.

At ten minutes to twelve last night an alarm for fire was turned in from the Snowden House. A chimney in the house occupied by Robt Woutenholm, on Charlotte street, was blazing. The brigade was recalled as the fire in the chimney had subsided.

—John Wanamaker, the merchant prince, says that he would no more try to conduct his business without advertising than he would try to run his store without clerks. This is talk worth listening to and worth profiting by.

—Mr. T. G. Holmes was charged before Police Magistrate Dumble yesterday with purchasing junk from a boy under age. The boy had given a note, supposedly from his mother, on several occasions. The mother, while not admitting that she signed the note acknowledged that she knew of it. The case was dismissed.

—Mrs. James Scriver, Smith street, complained that Fred and Media Goggan had threatened to kill and murder her son. Fearing that they might do him some bodily harm she decided to ask the court to have the brothers bound over to keep the peace. Magistrate Dumble decided that Fred Goggan be bound over to keep the peace himself in $200, and two sureties of $100 each.

—Robert D. Mahoney charged some of his companions on Saturday night last with assault. It appears that the party had been making a tour of the hotels in town and were on their way to Ashburnham to liquor up again. Mahoney had not "set up" the drinks during the evening and when crossing the Hunter street bridge one of his companions threatened to inflict a severe pounding on him if he did not "blow" himself. This was done while in Ashburnham, but he felt himself warranted in laying a charge of assault against the party who threatened him. After listening to the evidence the magistrate dismissed the case.

THE TORY CANDIDATE

Report That Major Miller will not Accept Nomination

It is currently reported in the inner circle that several names will be submitted to the Conservative Convention on Saturday. As Mr. J. W. With a certain wing of the party, there is a strong feeling against him.

RELEASED FROM CUSTODY

Mr. Fred Bradfield will Return from Toronto in a Few Days

The many friends of Mr. Fred Bradfield will be pleased to hear that he has been released from military confinement in Toronto, and will return to his home in a day or so. It will be remembered that Bradfield enlisted for service in South Africa with the last contingent but yielded to the pleading of his invalid mother and remained at home. A short short time ago he was arrested by the military authorities and taken to Toronto to be tried on a charge of absenting himself from his regiment. The trial was held in Toronto but we are not yet in possession of the facts brought out at that time. Bradfield's father has been in Toronto for some days in connection with the case, and returned from there yesterday.

OUR "HORSELESS" CARRIAGE

Crowds Called at The Times' Bookstore Yesterday to See It

In response to the invitation in yesterday's Times, many persons called at the Times Bookstore yesterday to see the "horseless" vehicle used for delivering our mails at the Post Office. The majority of those who came did not seem at first to take in the situation after having a prettily painted pushcart pointed out to them. After gazing at it for a few seconds they seemed to grasp the idea that it was the first of April, and hurried away. One case of an elderly gentleman, after being shown the cart, exclaimed, "Well, I'll be blowed! Should have known it was all fools' day." He made a bee-line for the door, which shut with a bang that shook the building.

DEATH OF MRS. JAS. TOWMEY

A Well Known and Esteemed Resident of Ennismore Passes Away

The death occurred yesterday morning of Mrs. James Twomey, of Ennismore, after an illness of about two weeks. La grippe was the immediate cause of her death.

Deceased was about 65 years of age, and was a daughter of the late Timothy Dorgan, of Emily. About thirty-five years ago she was married to her bereaved husband who with three daughters and three sons are left to mourn her death. The daughters are Mrs. M. Cavanagh, Mrs. P. J. Scollard and Miss Mary Twomey, all residing in Ennismore. The sons are Thomas, of Emily, Maurice and Timothy, of Ennismore.

The husband and family will have the sympathy of friends in their hour of sorrow.

The funeral will take place on Tuesday morning from the homestead, lot 3, con 7, Ennismore, and proceed to the Roman Catholic cemetery, for interment.

COFFEE TOOK IT

Robbed the Doctor of His Cunning

"I was compelled to drink some Java coffee yesterday morning and suffered so much from its effects that I feel like writing you at once.

I am 43 years old and for a great many years have been a coffee drinker. My nerves finally got into a terrible condition and for about two years I suffered with sinking spells and was so nervous that it seemed as though I could hardly live. I suffered untold agonies. My heart would stop and my kidneys gave me no end of trouble.

About six months ago I gave up coffee for good and began using Postum. I insisted on knowing that it was properly made by being sufficiently boiled, and I prefer a cup of rich Postum to Java, Mocha or any other coffee.

My sinking spells have left me, my head gives me no trouble now, the kidneys are greatly improved, and in fact, I feel a great change in my whole body. It is such a comfort to be well again.

I know a physician in San Antonio who had become so nervous from the use of coffee that his hand trembled so badly that he could not hold a lancet, or even take a splinter out, and could scarcely hold anything in his hand. Finally he quit coffee and began using Postum. Now the doctor's nervousness is all gone and he is in good health." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

COMMITTEE ON APPOINTMENTS.

The report of the Committee on Appointments was presented by Mr. W. G. Ferguson, as follows:

To the Chairman and members of the Board of Education:

Gentlemen,—The Committee on Appointments beg leave to report in reference to the matters referred to them as follows:

1. In reference to the application of Jas. Russel for an increase of salary, we recommend that no action be taken

2. We recommend that Miss Casey and Miss Packenham be appointed as teachers on the public school staff to fill the vacancies caused by the resignations of Miss Wright and Miss Meharry. Miss Packenham's appointment to date from the Easter holidays and Miss Casey's appointment to date from May 1st.

3. As instructed, we advertised for janitor for Collegiate Institute, and received a number of applications and recommend that John Menzies be appointed to the position for one month from April 1st on trial, salary to be at the rate of $325.00 per annum.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

The report was taken up clause by clause, and referring to the appointment of janitor, Mr. Wrighton moved that Mr. John Hart be given the appointment. The amendment was adopted after considerable discussion, during which some of the Board contended that the Committee had already filled the position, as was within their power. Mr. Menzies had been assisting the janitor for some days past, as he had been instructed by the Secretary of the Board.

The business being over, Mr. James Stevenson, probably the oldest trustee in Ontario, addressed a few words to the members, and presented them with two large bound volumes of Shakespeare's works for the use of the Institute library. Mr. Stevenson has been a member of the Board of Education since 1848, and served continuously for 17 years as chairman. He gave a short sketch of the growth of the schools during that period.

Mr. McBain moved, seconded by Mr. Ferguson, that the thanks of this Board be tendered Mr. Stevenson for the gift to the schools and for his very deep interest in the work carried on.—Carried.

The Board then adjourned.

BASKETBALL.

The Ottawa Y.M.C.A. Basketball team played the final game in their series of matches with western teams, with the Seniors of the local "Y" last night. As an exhibition of fast play and hard, close checking it was all that could be desired, and though the local team was not successful the honors of the game were about evenly divided.

The Ottawa quintette arrived on the 7.20 C.P.R. train and the game was called at 8.50. The teams lined as follows, and were very fairly matched as to weight:—

Ottawa,—Forwards, H. Merrill and A. Hill, Centre, J. Watt; Defence, W. Lambe and F. Musgrove.

Peterborough,—Forwards, W. Robertson and S. Hall; Centre, Smith; Defence, W. Campbell and R. Tobbin.

Umpires, P. Lee, Harold Dunsford. Referee, H. C. Ayers.

The visitors appeared to feel very much at home from the start, perhaps owing to the similarity, in shape and size of the floor here to that of their own building. The play was sharp, but very clean on both sides.

The following is the order in which the different goals were scored:

Score	Tally
Ottawa	2
Ottawa	2
Peterborough (on foul)	1
Peterborough	2
Ottawa	2
Ottawa	2
Peterborough	2
Peterborough	2
Ottawa	2

Score at half-time, 16—10 in favor of the visitors.

Peterborough (on foul)	1
Ottawa	2
Ottawa (on foul)	1
Peterborough (on foul)	1
Ottawa	2
Peterborough	2

Final score, 26—21, in favor of the visiting team.

Notwithstanding the fact that the Golf Club Ball kept many away, a good representation saw the game, at the conclusion of which the visitors were entertained by the local Association.

The Ottawa boys were strong in their encomiums of Peterborough's players, and said it was the cleanest game they have had since leaving home.

Rev. Mr. Potter and Rev. Mr. McCuaig spoke, and Rev. Mr. McCuaig rendered selections in the French habitant. The proceedings were brought to a close with the National Anthem, and the boys left for home by the 12.34 C.P.R. train.

THE GOLF CLUB BALL

One of the Most Successful Events of the Season

The opera house was the scene of one of the prettiest and most successful social events of the season last night, the occasion being the ball given under the auspices of the Colts Golf Club.

The hall was prettily decorated with flags, bunting and numerous electric lamps, which added greatly to the beauty of the scene. The evening was spent in dancing—the music being supplied by Glionna's orchestra from Toronto, and to say that the music was superb is not doing full justice to the musicians.

A number of the officers of the local regiments attended the event, wearing the uniform of the service. The dash of scarlet here and there added greatly to the pleasing effect.

Refreshments were served in the large refreshment room adjoining the ball. The tables were prettily decorated with flowers, cut glass and silver, and full justice was done to the magnificent array of good things.

The decorating of the hall was done by Messrs. J. J. Turner & Sons, and the work done certainly deserves great credit.

THE LATE COCKING MAIN

Action Being Taken by Victoria Authorities to Punish Parties

The cocking main which recently took place in Ops Township, near Lindsay, between Lindsay and Peterborough birds, is likely to get the principals into serious trouble.

Edward Stevens, a farmer residing about eight miles south of Lindsay, in Ops township, appeared before County Police Magistrate Deacon on Monday at 10 o'clock to answer to the charge of allowing a cocking main on his premises on March 20th and 21st last. Five witnesses were summoned. On account of the defendant's wife—one of the principal witnesses—being ill, the case was adjourned until Monday, April 7th. The witnesses were slow in giving their answers to the questions asked, and it was after 3 o'clock when Mrs. Stevens was called. County Crown Attorney Devlin appeared for the prosecution, and Mr. Hugh O'Leary, K. C., for the defendant.

MUD LAKE BRIDGE DAMAGED.

The New Bridge Across Mud Lake was Considerably Wrecked Yesterday

People from the vicinity of Bridgenorth and especially those from Ennismore who crossed the new floating bridge on Mud Lake, yesterday, did so with great difficulty and considerable danger to themselves. The high wind of the past few days had moved large masses of ice down against the bridge and a number of chains have consequently been broken. The drive way on the Ennismore shore has been pulled loose and was temporarily repaired with planks.

The bridge is in a bad shape at the present time and with a continued high wind the state of the bridge will certainly become much worse.

This is the bridge on which twenty-six thousand dollars was spent, and which was opened for navigation only a few months ago.

BOER "BRUTALITIES" BY A BOER PARSON

How a "Divine" Liar Gets in His Work Against the British

A SAMPLE OF BOER TACTICS

How Rev. Dr. Van Broekhuisen Violated His Parole—Is Now Lecturing in New York City

Special Telegram to The Times.

New York, April 3.— Rev. Dr. Van Broekhuisen, formerly a minister of Pretoria, has been lecturing in New York on "British brutalities" in the war with the Boers, whereupon the Times of this city writes to show that the lecturer was given his parole on condition of keeping out of politics, but afterwards preached inflammatory political sermons, and was given a free passage to Europe. He there printed an article in the Independance Belge, containing such vile calumnies against the British and their troops in South Africa that it was forwarded to Pretoria for investigation. M. Constamoon, Swiss consul in that city for eighteen years, replied, disproving his charges in detail. From this letter the correspondent quotes only a paragraph, which, however, sums up the spirit of the whole:

"The whole article from beginning to end is nothing but a pack of lies, and the writer, a minister of the Gospel, of all men ought to know better than to perjure himself and his office in the way he does."

In his New York lecture Dr. Van Broekhuisen referred repeatedly to "the horrors of the concentration camps, where the Boer women and children are kept in starvation and disease."

With regard to this, apparently, enforced "keeping," Assistant General Tobias Smuts wrote to Commandant Gen. Louis Botha, September, 1901, as follows:

"I got the order from you to send the women away against their wish, and when I asked you what to do if the English refused to take the women, your answer was that in that case I had to load them off within the lines of the enemy."

If Mr. Van Broekhuisen's statements about the camps are true, then the Boers appear to treat their women and children with "brutality" (to use the word so often applied by them to the British methods) in thus abandoning them to camp treatment; if they do not, then it seems only reasonable, indeed, unavoidable, to infer that they knew they would be well treated and well cared for.

With regard to "starvation," the correspondent of the Times quotes the daily allowance at Irene camp, showing this as it is close to Pretoria:

Meat	1-2 pound
Coffee...	2 ounces
Flour	3-4 pound
Sugar...	2 ounces
Salt	1-2 ounce

One bottle of milk to every child under six years.

This was in July, 1901. Since this the supplies have been increased as means of transporting them have increased. One other instance: At the Port Elizabeth Camp, 15d a day is allowed per head for the Boer diet, and, incredible as it may seem, only 8d for the British!

The following gentlemen all write most favorably of the way in which neither trouble nor money has been spared by the British to make the camps as sanitary and as comfortable as existing conditions of country, climate and war will permit:—Mr. Scholts, Inspector of Camps for the Transvaal; Commandant H. Alberts, Mr. Celliers, Dutch Minister from Aberdeen, South Africa; Mr. D. Keys, burgher; Committee of Dutch Reformed churches, one hundred male Boers at Kroonstad, and this list is closed with a brief testimony from a woman, Mrs. Blignant, who writes from the Port Elizabeth refugee Camp:

"If we had to complain it would be false complaint, and all the stories about ill-treatment are untrue so far as I can find out."

This is only some of the evidence to be placed against the statements of Mr. Van Broekhuisen.

Just a Cold in the Head

But if followed by another cold, or some extra exposure, is liable to result in nasal catarrh. Unless a radical cure is obtained, the throat, bronchial tubes and finally the lungs become affected. Nothing cures colds so quickly and pleasantly as Catarrhozone. The Inspector of mines for Nova Scotia, Mr. Neville, says, "Catarrhozone is the best remedy I have ever used. It cured me of catarrh of the head and throat, and I am pleased to recommend such a satisfactory remedy." Catarrhozone is a safeguard against colds, coughs and catarrh. It can be used while at work, in the church, theatre or street cars. Simply inhale Catarrhozone and it cures. Price $1.00. Small size 25c. Druggists or Polson & Co., Kingston, Ont.

THE CANADIAN MOUNTED RIFLES HAVE SEEN FIGHT

Cable from Cape Town Reports One of the Troopers Wounded

Special Telegram to The Times.

Ottawa, April 3.—The Second Canadian Mounted Rifles have apparently had their baptism of fire. A cablegram from the casualty department, Cape Town, dated March 31st, reports that Trooper Geo. Pyle, of the regiment in question, who was reported missing near Klerksdorp, March 25, was slightly wounded in the right foot, and is now in the hospital at Klerksdorp.

Trooper Roland Agassiz, Second Canadian Rifles, is reported to have been dangerously ill with dysentery at Charlestown, on March 30.

A second cablegram to the Governor-General reads,—"Dangerously ill, enteric, Sydenham, March 28th, S. A. C. Corp. Harold Austin Neales Please inform Archdeacon Casey, St. Peter's Palace, Peterborough, Ont (Signed) Casualty Department."

LOST TEN MILLIONS

How a Stranger Dropped His "Wad" Over a Game of Paper

Mr. Dickson Jewett, the popular assistant manager of the Snowden House, tells The Times the following story: A tall, middle-aged, military looking man entered the Snowden House the other evening. He evidently came off the Grand Trunk nine o'clock from the west, and was stopping over to take the C.P.R. midnight for the east. He drank a glass of beer and began dealing imaginary cards from an imaginary pack. He picked up his imaginary hand, studied it carefully, looked around and said: "Who's in?" Those about him in fan picked up imaginary hands. One made an imaginary ante. Others stayed and the stranger opened an imaginary jackpot for $1,000,000. Everybody stayed. The man bet $2,000,000. He was called, threw down an imaginary full hand and tore his hair in dismay at being beaten by four nine-spots. The spectral game went on until the stranger announced that he had lost $10,000,000. He wanted to give his notes for it, and talked so wildly that the proprietor had to interfere. Several travellers who were staying at the hotel arrived, and he challenged them to play, and dealt more imaginary hands from his mythical pack. The knights of the grip played with him until he had lost several more millions. Then he arose, cursed his luck and asked the way to the C.P.R. station. One of the travellers accompanied him to the station and helped him on a train. He was seen sitting in the smoking car, where he continued to open imaginary jackpots with imaginary players. When the train left he was still betting millions on imaginary straights and flushes, always losing imaginary fortunes.

A Tragedy of One Season Sent to The Times for Publication

The following was handed The Times yesterday, for publication in this great family journal:

"Clarence, dearest, you will forgive me for what I am about to tell you, I am sure."

Clarence held his breath with both hands, swallowed his heart, which was trying to crowd up through his thorax, and gasped faintly:

"Why, certainly, my precious one, but break it to me gently, I pray."

"Then know, my darling husband, that on the first day of April, rain or shine, I shall begin h-leaning house."

Without a word, but pressing a feverish kiss on her quivering lips, Clarence rushed out of the room, hurried up stairs, packed his grip and left the house.

OMEMEE

—Easter Sunday service passed off splendidly, and each and every service in the respective churches were largely attended. The special music rendered in the Presbyterian church was highly appreciated.

—Large numbers of visitors went to Peterboro on Friday and Saturday, and were very much surprised at the progress made with the cereal works building.

—Mr. Cobb, merchant tailor, Peterborough, is working up a good trade here.

—The old folks concert Monday night in aid of our public library passed off most satisfactorily in every respect, the proceeds amounting to about $70. The choruses rendered were excellent. Costumes, regardless of expense, were procured from Toronto, Peterboro and other places and every one was delightfully entertained, and our library will now boom.

Procession of 50,000 Advocating Revival of Irish Language

CELTIC ASSOC. REPRESENTED.

Many of Those Present wore the Old Celtic Costume — Speeches Made Mostly in Irish

Dublin, April 2. — A procession in furtherance of the movement for the propagation of the Irish language, organized under the auspices of the Gaelic League, was held in Dublin recently. In spite of the fact that the weather was most depressing, the gathering assumed very large proportions, the attendance being estimated at 20,000. The demonstration, which was entirely non-political, was of an orderly character. The Lord Mayor attended in State, accompanied by a large number of members of the Dublin Corporation. The Celtic Association, which has branches throughout the United Kingdom and Brittany, was represented by some of its most prominent members, a number of whom wore the old Celtic costume. The procession was headed by a band of Irish pipers playing old Irish airs. Representatives of Dublin trades with their banners also marched in the procession, prominent amongst them being the letterpress printers to the number of 700, and the bookbinders numbering about 200. A picturesque feature of the display was a number of tableaux, the most interesting being that shown by the Irish Industrial League, which represented several Irish girls engaged at spinning wheels. The Dublin Fire Brigade also attended. Speeches were made mostly in Irish, in support of the Irish language movement, it being urged that proper facilities should be given for the teaching of Irish to the youth of the country.

INCOME TAX AND MATRIMONY.

London, April 2.—Mr. Alfred Chapman, the income-tax expert, has submitted a proposal to the Chancellor of the Exchequer to allow an additional abatement to income-tax payers who are married, and further abatements proportioned to the size of their families. He argues that under the present system matrimony is penalized. He puts the case of a man earning between £350 and £400 and a girl with a similar income, and says that as long as they remain single they get an abatement of £9 6s 8d a year each. If they marry they lose both abatements, and consequently the annual tax on their union is £18 13s 4d.

London, April 2. — Speaking at a Liberal meeting at Woking to a resolution thanking Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman for his efforts to secure an honorable peace in South Africa, Mr. F. C. Selous said it was perfectly hopeless to attempt to make peace until the proclamation of banishment against the Boer leaders had been repealed. How could they expect such men as Delarey, De Wet and Botha to surrender. As long as they could get one man to stand beside them, they would go on fighting rather than be banished from South Africa. To a Boer banishment was worse than death. He knew the Boers. He had lived among them for twenty-five years, and he was sure that the first step towards an honorable peace must be the repeal of the proclamation of banishment.

FROM PAUPER TO RICH MAN.

London, April 1.—At Tivetshall, Norfolk, yesterday, the funeral was to have taken place of the late Mr. Jonathan Boyce, who died there at the age of 75. On a cabled request from America, however, the body has been embalmed, and is to be sent across the Atlantic for interment. Born at Tivetshall, Mr. Boyce worked in his youth as a farm laborer at 2s a week. In 1851 he went to America and started a wood business, which was so prosperous that the mill he owned to-day cut 175,000 feet of lumber a day, while on the forest estates which belonged to him there is over 200,000,000 feet of white pine standing.

EXPERIMENTAL MOTOR 'BUS

London, April 1.—As a result of the first two days' working of their experimental motor bus, the Road Car Company are confident that motor buses in London have come to stay.

The only question to be settled is as to what kind of motor will prove most serviceable for London streets. The one that began running this week between Oxford-circus and Shepherd's bush is propelled by steam, but it is the company's intention to experiment with oil and electric motors before finally deciding which kind shall be adopted. Once this point is settled the company hope to introduce motor buses on most of their routes.

Nor is the General Omnibus Company remaining idle in the matter. They are having various kinds of motor buses constructed, and in a few weeks they hope to put them to a trial.

DRAMATIC LITERATURE

London, April 1.—The Rev. Stewart Headlam, chairman of the Evening Schools Committee of the London School Board has started a novel scheme for nourishing a love of dramatic literature among those attending the continuation classes. He has arranged with Mr. Ben Greet for performances of some of Shakespeare's plays in various parts of London, the representations to be given without scenery. Last night the City and Tower Hamlets scholars were invited to a recital of "Twelfth Night," in the Queen's Hall, of the People's Palace. The gallery, which was densely crowded, was reserved for the scholars, while the seats in the body of the spacious building were sold to visitors. It says something for the taste of the playgoing public of the East-end that every seat which could be purchased was bought before the performance had commenced. The representation was extremely interesting. Mr. Ben Greet took the part of Malvolio. The audience seemed thoroughly to enter into the spirit of the play, and the absence of scenery did not interfere with their enjoyment. Applause of the heartiest description followed the close of each act, but while the actors were on the stage the silence in the hall was remarkable, every line being listened to with attention.

London, April 2. — A Parliamentary paper issued this morning gives correspondence respecting the comparative merits of the American, British and Belgian locomotives now in use in Egypt. In a despatch to the Foreign Secretary, Lord Lansdowne, December 31, covering a number of reports received from railroad officials, the British diplomatic agent and Consul-General in Egypt, Lord Cromer, draws the general conclusion that the main reason who so many orders for railroad equipment have recently been given to the United States is that the American firms are able to execute them with extraordinary rapidity, due largely to the system of standardization.

In respect to price, Lord Cromer finds the British firms can hold their own where special designs have to be executed. With respect to the quality of British work, it is at least equal, and often superior to American and Belgian work, while in consumption of coal the British engines have a decided superiority over the Americans, though not over the Belgian engines.

The British manufacturers' weak point is delay in executing orders. The reports enclosed showed that the Americans' tenders promised delivery within one-third of the time required by the British firms, while they offered to supply standard locomotives of equal suitability at 19 per cent. below the British, though the latter's tenders for locomotives built on Egyptian specifications were lower than the American offers.

American Pilgrims to Visit His Holiness the Coming Summer

Special Telegram to The Times.

New York, April 3 — American pilgrims who will go to Rome to take part in the jubilee of Pope Leo will leave here in three sections. The first sails on July 1, in the steamer North America. The ship has been reserved entirely for the pilgrims. Four days later, the Hohenzollern, in which a hundred places have been reserved, sails and the third section will leave on July 12. The expeditions will be in charge of Father McAdam, Father William St. Elmo Smith and Father Porcile, the latter of whom goes with the first section.

ENORMOUS SUM OF MONEY

Over a Billion Dollars to be Spent by Leading Cities of the Union

Special Telegram to The Times.

New York, April 3 — The announcement is made by municipal experts that the second year of the new century promises the most lavish expenditures on important improvements ever seen in the United States. One billion dollars is the amount estimated to be spent by the leading cities of the country. Twenty-four millions will be laid out by New York city alone. The improvements include pavements, waterworks, sewers, bridges, the subway, boulevards and parks.

RUSSIA STANDS BY OPEN DOOR

But Tells us Troops Will Not Be Withdrawn From Manchuria at Present

Special Telegram to The Times.

Vienna, April 2 — The Allgemeine Zeitung says it learns that in answering the American inquiries submitted to Count Lamsdorf, Minister of Foreign affairs, the Czar himself replied that so long as sufficient guarantees for the maintenance of order in Manchuria were not forthcoming the Russian troops would not be withdrawn.

Nevertheless, the principle of "the open door would be maintained there as in the rest of China.

The Doctors Told Miss Blake She Was Going Into Consumption

Paine's Celery Compound

Truly Rescued Her From The Grave

This Is the Season To Use The Great Medicine If You Would Banish The Seeds of the Great White Plague

On every hand we see men and women who at this season should be active, hale and strong, losing flesh and weight, looking pale and languid. We hear them complain of feverishness, pain in the chest and of shortness of breath.

Ah! reader, these are a few of the symptoms of the White Plague! Act at once with wisdom and decision; you cannot afford to lose precious time experimenting with medicines that have no reputation — that have no positive victories to their credit.

Heaven help you to use the life-saver that rescued Miss Blake from an untimely grave. Her doctors told her she was going into consumption. Providence directed her to make use of Paine's Celery Compound. The first bottle produced a marvellous effect; her life blood was being freshened and enriched; her appetite was improved; strength was taking the place of weakness and the tinge of health was coming to the pale face. Miss Blake, who resides on Hughson street, Hamilton, Ont., tells her story for the benefit of others.

"For years I suffered greatly and was under the care of doctors who finally told me I was going into consumption. I was getting worse through the use of medicines, and I gave up my doctors. While in a very critical condition, not able to sleep or rest, always faint and weak, appetite and digestion bad, and my system run down and little life left in me, I commenced to use Paine's Celery Compound. After taking one bottle I felt much relieved. I have used in all seven bottles, and am now a new woman, can enjoy life, and am as well as I wish to be. Many thanks for your great medicine."

Weather Notes

NUMBER OF DEATHS ARE FORTY-FIVE

Lord Kitchener Reports that Barberton Train Wreck an Accident

THE ENGINEER LOST CONTROI

Train Went at the Rate of Eighty Miles an Hour, and Jumped the Rails at a Curve.

London, April 2.—It has been suggested that the train wreck near Barberton, Transvaal Colony, March 30, resulting in the death of thirty-nine soldiers, and the wounding for forty-five others, nearly all of whom belonged to the Hampshire Regiment, was caused by the Boers, but Lord Kitchener reports that it was accidental. The train was descending a steep grade, when the engine and five trucks jumped the track and turned over.

DETAILS OF THE WRECK

Pretoria, April 2. — Details of the train wreck show that, after leaving Barberton, the engineer lost control of the train on the down grade, and for three miles, it went at the rate of eighty miles an hour. The engine jumped the rails at a sharp curve, with five trucks filled with soldiers. A terrible smashup followed, and the boiler of the engine exploded. The engineer and fireman were killed. Six of the injured soldiers have since died, raising the total deaths to 45.

Items of Interest

KRUGER'S LAST PROPHECY

Amsterdam, April 3.—Mr. Kruger and the circle surrounding him are not optimistic as to the conclusion of immediate peace. They believe that England is willing to grant full amnesty and rescind Lord Kitchener's proclamation in regard to the banishment of all Boers who did not surrender on Sept. 15, but that she remains adamant on the question of granting independence to the South African Republics. It is claimed that there is complete unison among the Boer leaders in the field and the representatives in Holland that the war will continue unless Great Britain agrees to grant independence. The friends of Mr. Kruger say in regard to the visit of Field Marshal Lord Wolseley to South Africa, which it is said in some quarters is for the purpose of conducting peace negotiations, that everything depends on whether he is empowered to negotiate concessions. If not, his mission will be fruitless.

TO DISCUSS SURRENDER.

Heidelberg, Transvaal, April 3.— Commandant Alberts has called a meeting of the Boers in his district, to take place 25 miles east of The Springs station, in order to discuss the proposal for a general surrender. It is said that General Hans Botha has summoned a similar meeting at Amsterdam.

A party of constabulary and native scouts was ambushed near here March 28. Six of the party were killed. The Boers eluded pursuit.

Surrenders are occurring daily in the Standerton district.

DR. KUYPER AT BERLIN.

Berlin, April 3.—Dr. Kuyper, the Dutch Prime Minister, has arrived here. It is not stated whether his visit has any bearing on the present negotiations regarding peace in South Africa.

COLONIES SHOULD BE HEARD.

London, April 3.— The London Times, in an article on the peace negotiations, says it is admitted that colonial opinion must be considered in the matter. Canada, Australia, and New Zealand have earned the right to be consulted. While a generous policy in granting terms would be the wisest, the claims of the Cape Loyalists, the Uitlanders, and the colonies must be first considered. "Leave any district under purely Boer rule," says the article, "and a new arsenal will arise to astonish the British Empire.

RUSSIA'S BOLD GAME.

Pekin, April 3.—Russia has made another characteristic move in her bold play in the East.

Ten thousand fresh Russian troops have arrived at Port Arthur, according to advices from New Chwang. They are particularly active at this latter place are making extensive telegraph connections about that place, and are giving other evidences of large and lasting military activity.

BISHOP OF LONDON DECLINES.

London, April 3.— The engagements of the Bishop of London, Right Rev. Arthur Ingram have compelled him to decline the invitations of Bishop Potter, of New York, and other bishops, to address the missionary gatherings in New York next advent.

RUBBER IN NEW GUINEA.

Berlin, April 3.— In a cablegram received at the Colonial Bureau, Herr Schlechter, the botanist, declares he has discovered an abundance of rubber and gutta percha trees in German New Guinea.

By this discovery Herr Schlechter wins the 3,000 marks ($7.50) prize offered by the Colonial Society for the first person to find such trees in the German colonies.

CECIL RHODES' WILL.

London, April 3.—The Daily Telegraph claims to have authoritive information that nothing hitherto published in connection with the will of the late Cecil Rhodes is authentic. It states the will is certainly of Imperial interest, but in a way not yet even hinted at.

MARCO IN THE SOUDAN

London, Wednesday, April 3. — A despatch to the Daily Mail from Cairo says the Marconi has applied to the Soudan Government for permission to introduce his system of wireless telegraphy in that province. The adoption of the system is doubtful owing to the expense and the existence of the present telegraph lines.

COLOR POISON SOLUTIONS.

Brockville, Ont., April 3.— The coroner's jury which investigated the death of Miss Mary E. Jackson, the Brockville General Hospital nurse, who by mistake drank a dose of bichloride of mercury for Epsom salts, arrived at a verdict to-night. The jury found that there was no proof as to who filled the bottle, and thought that the suggestion made in the Toronto Mail and Empire recently that all solutions of poisons should be colored was a matter worthy of consideration and would to a great extent be a preventive to such mistakes occurring in the future, where these medicines are kept in solutions in stock and ready lotion. The jury recommended that the control of medicines distributed to the nurses should be restricted to the dispenser or head nurse.

TO RETIRE PREFERENCE STOCK.

New York, April 3.—The directions of the United States Steel Corporation, gathered in quarterly meeting here today, gave formal approval to the conversion plan under which it is proposed to retire preferred stock to the amount of $200,000,000, upon which dividends are paid at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum, and issue bonds to a total of $250,000,000, with interest fixed at 5 per cent. May 19 was fixed as the date upon which the project will be submitted to the stockholders. The directors also issued a statement showing that the earnings of the corporation for the first year of its existence, which ended on March 31, with the last month estimated, reached a total of $111,067,135. The directors voted the usual dividends at the rate of 7 per cent. on the preferred stock and 4 per cent. on the common stock.

PLOT AGAINST THE KING.

Rome, April 3.— The Corriere Della Sera asserts that King Edward abandoned his proposed visit to the Riviera on account of the discovery of an Anarchist plot against his life. The Anarchists purposed to give the appearance of Boer revenge to their operations.

CHINESE INDEMNITY.

Shanghai, April 3. — The third instalment of the indemnity was paid today. It amounts to 1,000,000 taels (11,170,000).

FEAR SHE HAS FOUNDERED.

London, April 3. — A Deal pilot boat reports having picked up a lifeboat marked "Ship Maxwell." She also saw boats marked "Maxwell," and says a three-masted ship sank eight miles south-west of Dungeness Lighthouse.

The British ship Maxwell, Captain Young, left San Francisco, Oct. 30, for Hull.

WESTMINISTER ABBEY CLOSED.

London, April 3.— Westminister Abbey closed to-day, and will remain closed still the coronation.

PRISONERS GAINED THEIR FREEDOM.

Chicago, April 3. — Three prisoners under guard at Fort Sheridan escaped from their sentries to-day, and gained freedom under exciting circumstances. One prisoner was shot at by a crack marksman recently returned from the Philippines and it is thought was badly wounded. Another boarded a passing freight train going toward Chicago, and was not missed for fifteen minutes. The third escaped with his life only, because the rifle which the sentry snapped at him missed fire.

M. S. Whitlow, A Kentuckian, sentenced to nine months in the guard-house for desertion, is the man supposed to have been wounded.

WILL WHITE LEAVE ENGLAND.

New York April 3.—Ambassador Choate is quoted in reference to the report that Henry White, of the London Embassy, will be appointed Ambassador to Italy, as saying he has had no information on the subject. Mr. White's friends are incredulous as to the report, according to The Herald's London correspondent. They believe that he has no wish to leave London, even though it means preferment. He has lived here many years, and has a fine country place and town residence. He has the largest acquaintance in England of any one American, and has many warm personal friends.

Rome, April 3.—The report that Henry White, Secretary of the United States Embassy in London, will succeed George V. L. Meyer, as Ambassador of the United States here, has been received with much interest in American circles in this city. Mr. White, who had just arrived at Florence to take his family back to England, has heard nothing officially of the matter. It has been reported for some time that Mr. Meyer contemplated resigning his post.

THREATEN TO KILL CONSULS

Constantinople, April 3. — The Servian Legation has called the attention of the Porte to the situation in Kolashin, where the Albanians are threatening the Christians. The Albanians are opposed to the appointment of Russian and Servian Vice-Consuls at Mitrovitza and Prizrend respectively, and threaten to kill them when they appear.

TO EMBARK FRESH TROOPS.

London, April 3. — Orders were issued this morning from the Home military headquarters at Aldershot that every available man of the Second and Third Provisional Battalions now being formed there as part of the First Army Corps must embark for South Africa by April 15th.

RUSSIAN SOLDIERS ACTIVE

Pekin, April 3.—The Manchurian convention permits China to maintain whatever force she may think necessary in Manchuria after the evacuation of that territory. Official reports received here from Niu Chwang declare that the Russians are displaying great military activity there. Ten thousand troops have recently been moved to Port Arthur and new drafts are arriving. An extensive and permanent telegraph system is being constructed.

Russian forces in Manchuria total; 49,900 infantry, 30,000 cavalry, 19,000 artillery, 24,000 engineers and 300 railway corps, or a grand aggregate of 98,200. To these may be added the Amur, which is said to consist of 30,000 of all classes, so that the total available Russian force in those regions of Asia is 128,200.

SIXTEEN KILLED IN AN EXPLOSION

Tirteen Bodies Already Recovered From the Nelson Mine

THE RESCUERS BEATEN BACK

Three Remaining Bodies Must Perforce Remain in the Mine - An Enquiry to Fix Responsibility

Special Telegram to The Times.

Chattanooga, Tenn., April 2. — The total of killed in the explosion in the Nelson mine at Dayton, Tenn., will reach but sixteen. Thirteen bodies have been recovered, and three more are known to be in the mine. It was described yesterday that the mine is on fire. The rescuing party distinctly felt the heat, and were beaten back in their attempts to reach and recover the three remaining bodies in the mine. An enquiry will be demanded by the miners to fix the responsibility.

The explosion is believed to have been caused by the untimely and unintentional firing of a shot by Lark Henter and John Horney, two of the experienced fire bosses, who were killed by the explosion.

He Pretends to be a Boer Officer, and Takes in Rhode Island Irishmen

Special Telegram to The Times.

New York, April 2.—A despatch to The Sun from Providence, R.I., says that there are a lot of members of the Clan-na-Gael in that region who are curious to know whether Capt. Louis De Villiers, of the South African Republic, and Lieut. De Villiers, late of Strathcona's Horse, are the same person. Capt. Louis De Villiers first appeared a day or two before St. Patrick's Day, and was soon on the most friendly footing with the principal Clan-na-Gael people. Being a great talker, the patriots made a lion of him. They secured a horse for him and gave him a leading place in the St. Patrick's parade at Pawtucket, and it was also arranged that he should speak at the banquet given in honor of Ireland's patron saint in Providence. In an address in the auditorium at Pawtucket, the captain vehemently cursed the British, and especially Lord Kitchener.

"If I saw Kitchener in hell," he said, "with flames all about him, and I knew that one drop of water would quench the fire, I would not lift a finger to help him."

Local Irishmen were so impressed that they decided to get up a big demonstration in his honor, but next day they were informed that he had received "orders" and had departed probably for New Orleans. Later, they were surprised to learn that he was in Boston, and was an ex-member of Strathcona's Horse, and had fought with the British through most of the war.

STRIKE TIES UP HARBOR

Longshoremen Quit Unloading of Steamer —Demand Increase of Wages

Special Telegram to The Times.

Halifax, N. S., April 3. — The harbor front of Halifax was tied up at midnight to-night, when a strike was ordered by the Longshoremen's Association. The Allan liner Sardinian came in just in time to be the first steamer on which the trial of strength between the stevedores and steamship owners and agents of the port will be made. The Sardinian had 300 tons of cargo to land here. At 12 o'clock only half of it had been removed, but every man stopped work and the hatches had to be closed for the night. On every other steamer on which work was being done the same thing happened.

The trouble is over wages. The longshoremen ask for an increase from 30 cents an hour, the present rate for day work, to 35 cents, and for night work they demand that the rate be increased from 35 cents to 50 cents. The association numbers 700 men, of whom 400 are employed at steamship work. Both sides are determined to fight the matter to a finish. The International Association will assist the striking longshoremen.

NEARLY ONE HUNDRED MILLION

The Enormous Sum Required to Run New York City

Special Telegram to The Times.

New York, April 3.—The Board of Estimate in revising the city budget will make an effort to lop off a million or two dollars from the Tamany total of 398,000,000. It is not an easy task to accomplish, however. Street Cleaning Commissioner Woodbury asks for nearly $300,000 more than his predecessor and Water Works Commissioner Dougherty asks for $31,000 more.

RUSSIA AND HER LARGE VOLUNTEER FLEET.

Monks Guarded Miss Stone in Connivance with Brigands---Sale of Danish West Indies

Special Telegram to The Times.

London, April 3.—A despatch from St. Petersburg to The Times says that the new regulations of the Russian volunteer fleet provide an annual subsidy of three hundred thousand dollars, for which the fleet must maintain a regular service between Russia and the far East. The management of the fleet is vested in a committee subordinate to the Minister of Marine.

MAY DEMAND PLEBISCITE

Copenhagen, April 3.—There is a probability that the upper Danish House may acquiesce in the sale of the West Indies to the United States, on condition that a plebiscite be taken of the inhabitants of the islands, who are chiefly colored.

London, April 3.—A despatch from Vienna to The Times says that the chief of the brigands who captured Miss Stone is a young partisan of Sarafof, named Sandaunky. The band consisted of twenty-seven Bulgarians and two Greeks. The correspondent says Miss Stone and Madame Tsilka were on two occasions in Bulgaria, once at the monastery of the Rilck monks, who acted in connivance with the brigands, and kept guard of the captives.

RUSSIA IN CONCILIATORY MOOD.

London, April 3.—A despatch from Pekin to The Times says that Russia is still conciliatory, and has agreed not to make her withdrawal from Niu-Chwang entirely conditional on the previous abolition of the provisional Government of Tien-Tsin, but promises to withdraw within eight months after the signature of the convention.

EDITORIAL NOTES

The annual report of the Ontario Agricultural College at Guelph has been issued, and shows that 281 students were registered for the general course last year, 89 in the dairy course and 22 in the specialists course. For the three short courses, stock judging, poultry raising and domestic science, 344 additional students were registered. The average age was 20 years, and the gamut ran from 16 to 36 years. In the general course 222 students came from the province of Ontario (42 counties being represented), 27 from the other provinces of the Dominion, 7 from England, 2 from Jamaica, 4 from the United States, 14 from the Argentine Republic, one each from Asia Minor, Scotland, Mauritius and Swedon.

The latest method of painless dentistry in Paris is by the application of electricity to produce insensibility; more precisely speaking, the dentists have employed electric currents of great frequency, furnished by the apparatus of Professor Arsonval. The new method is that, although the current which passes through the mouth of the patient is very powerful, it produces no sensation; the patient experiences neither shock, trepidation nor any unpleasant feeling whatever. After the passage of the current there remains no hurtful impression, nor even an uneasy feeling. Nevertheless, the insensibility is absolutely complete. Besides the advantages above enumerated the method has another, which is that those who submit to it need no special preparation. There is no necessity for fasting previously or for auscultation.

APSLEY

—The farmers in this vicinity have started seeding.

—The Apsley cheese factory was run on the instalment plan last year and the patrons received their last instalment on March 28th.

—Messrs. James and Bert Downing are moving on the Steen farm which they have purchased lately.

—We have seen that some of our young ladies have had a calling down for going to a low down hoe down. We think the remark uncalled for and ungentlemanly, as any young lady can conduct herself just as properly in a shanty as in a mansion, and we don't see why a man or woman either should be judged by the size of their house or the cut of their clothes. It has always been the custom for the young folks to meet at a neighbor's house and have a good time. And if the house was small it was to their disadvantage—not his—and as we have known those young ladies since they were children, we can say they are quite capable of taking care of themselves, and we don't see why anyone should blush to look at old Joe's house in daylight. Of course there is no fancy carving on it, but it has stood the storm for many a year and old age is no disgrace. So we hope the more careful in future of what he says about young ladies, and try and govern his temper and tongue.

—It is interesting and not altogether unsatisfactory to us to find that one of our neighbors, while mentioning that faith was necessary to render certain medicines effective, does not forget to include animals in the list of beings thus benefited, though we must confess it requires a trifle more faith on our part to quite see how this can be, considering that the animals taking the medicine, while in blissful ignorance of what it contains and of why it is given, no one even thinking it worth while to explain it to him. Even babies, it is presumed, exercise faith, when they receive a dose of medicine without being woke up, just as, for instance, they may catch an occasional fly or mosquito in summer time while napping with their mouths too wide open.

—Thomas, son of Mr. Charles Hales [illegible], had the misfortune to break his arm last week. Dr. Bell set the fractured limb and when we last heard the patient was doing well.

—Mrs. Garrard, of Clydendale, was visiting Mrs. McIlveen, of Apsley, last Sunday and Monday.

—Fred is quite a dog fancier. He has another one now—got it from Clint—supposed to be a good one for deer, but we are of the opinion that it will prove to be a coon dog.

—There was an item in your paper of March 22nd, put in with other correspondence, that the readers of The Times think should not have been there. It was in reference to a dance at a house a few miles from Apsley. Now, Mr. Editor, we know where it was, and it is an ordinary sized farm house. The people who occupy it have lived there for a good many years and are respected by all their neighbors. They had had a wood bee that day and the young folks concluded to wind up with a dance, as is often the case. Invitations were sent out, inviting some of the Apsley young folks, who went and they enjoyed the evening very much. There was no liquors nor rowdyism—nothing to cause such a letter to be written, except the simple fact that it was a dance, and you know there are some who object to dancing even in a palace. We hope in future that no one will so far forget himself as to call a clean, well cared for farm house a twice-by four shack or hovel.

—The following may be interesting to mineralogists: A certain party called the doctor's attention to a specimen he had sent to him and made a bet that the doctor could not guess what it was in five guesses. The doctor accepted the bet and named five different kinds of minerals — all wrong — it was a sample of Garry's maple sugar. We smoked the doctor's cigars.

Anecdotal.

A Yorkshire miller, noted for his closeness in financial matters, was once in a boat trying his best to get across the stream which drove his mill. The stream was flooded, and he was taken past the point at which he wanted to land, while further on misfortune again overtook him, to the extent that the boat was upset. His wife, realizing the danger he was in, ran frantically along the side of the stream, crying for help in a pitiful voice, when, to her sheer amazement, she was suddenly brought to a standstill by her husband yelling out: "If I'm drowned, Molly, dunnot forget that flour's gone up two shillin' a sack!"

In the year 1871, when the Government of Monsieur Thiers was at Versailles, and before the National Assembly had decided whether the new constitution of France was to be monarchical or republican, the late Comte de Paris visited the palace at Versailles. Just as he was about to enter, M. Jules Simon met and recognized him. Bowing low, Monsieur Simon said with much gravity: "If we are a republic, count, you are in my house, and I shall be delighted to do the honors; but if we are a monarchy, then I am in your house, and cannot play the host." The Comte de Paris laughed and took Monsieur Simon's arm. "Ah, monsieur," he said, gaily, "let us go in together!"

A Philadelphian tells the story of a waiter at a restaurant in the Quaker City, who has lately announced that he has begun to study French. "Do you find it necessary here?" asked the customer. "Not here, sir," said the waiter, "but I've been offered a steady job in Paris at one of the hotels if I can learn French." "But Paris is full of French waiters," said the gentleman. "I'm afraid you're being deceived." "Oh no, sir!" said the man, with much earnestness and absolute simplicity. "It's a perfectly straight thing. The proprietor of the hotel says the waiters he has can't understand French as we Philadelphians speak it, and that's what he wants me for, you see."

"Who," asks "The Candid Friend," "does not recollect Lord Hardwicke, the Glossy Peer, immaculately tailored, riding an almost priceless horse in the Row of a morning, or walking down Piccadilly, his hat at an angle which defied the laws of gravity? Spontaneously witty, with that talent for repartee which is as rare as it is delightful, Lord Hardwicke was the best of good company, and one of the unforgettable social leaders of London in the last quarter of the nineteenth century. No one will have forgotten his famous answer to a well-known tailor who had been asked to stay in the house of a noble patron, and complained to Lord Hardwicke that the 'company was mixed:' 'Good Lord, man, you didn't expect to find 'em all tailors?' "

The late Joseph Cook was celebrated for his positiveness, which those who did not admire him termed "cocksureness." The Boston "Pilot" relates several stories in illustration of this. It says that when he went over to Scotland to demonstrate by practical experiment the dangerous effects of alcohol on the human brain, he beat up the white of an egg with spirits until the mass coagulated, but it did not convince his audience as he had expected. On the contrary, it only evoked from Professor Blackie the quiet remark: "That seems to prove that whiskey must be good for softening of the brain." But the cruelest sarcasm said of him was when Bill Nye demurely wrote: "I understand that my friend the Rev. Joseph Cook has completed a thoughtful essay entitled 'A Bird's-Eye View of the Kingdom of Heaven?' "

In the early Indiana days, when both judges and attorneys literally "rode the circuit," a newly elected judge, noted for his lack of personal beauty, was plodding along on horseback between two county-seats one fine summer day. Suddenly he was confronted by a hunter, who unslung his squirrel-rifle from his shoulder, and ordered the horseman to dismount. Somewhat startled by this peremptory command, the jurist began to remonstrate. He was quickly cut short, however, by the remark: "It's no use talking. I long ago swore that if I ever met a homelier man than I am, I'd shoot him on sight." The judge, sizing up the situation, promptly got off his horse. Folding his arms, he faced his assailant, and said: "If I am any homelier than you are, for heaven's sake do shoot, and be quick about it." Needless to say, his wit saved him.

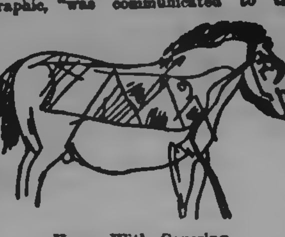
Her Revenge.

This amusing story is told by the president of a New Bedford bank, and is repeated in a Boston paper. One day not long ago he and other officers and directors were engaged in a business meeting, held in the directors' room of the bank, and as they believed themselves secure from intrusion, were much surprised to see a poor little waif enter the room, something which a man of business affairs would not dare to do under such conditions. The little girl, shabbily clothed and pinched looking, had all unconsciously entered on forbidden ground, but this she didn't realize, and at once went to the men seated about the big table, offering them small cakes of soap for sale. The very first director whom she approached shook his head, impatient at the interruption of business, and said sharply, "I never use it." The tiny peddler, unabashed, went from man to man, all the others, out of pity for her wan little figure, buying of her. As she started to leave the room, after thanking each purchaser, the girl hesitated a moment in front of the director who never used soap, according to his own declaration, and, looking him over from head to foot, said, disdainfully, "Well, yer look it!" and then she swept out like a duchess.

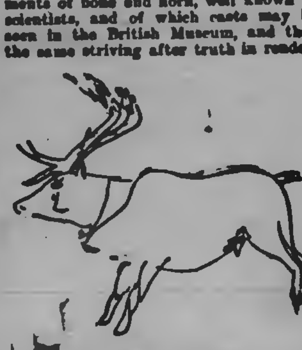
Man's Aesthetic Yearnings.

Among the most interesting of the discoveries made by the scientists who devote their time to researches into the Palaeolithic ages—thousands of years before recorded history begins—are those which prove that even in those dim and distant ages man, such as he was, had aesthetic yearnings. Few and far between are such discoveries; but when, once in a while, they are made, they cause a sympathetic thrill of interest in the bosoms of learned societies, and even of those who, not having time to be learned, feel the magnetic attraction of the "human document."

The Daily Graphic's illustrations, which are printed herewith, refer to one of the most important of such discoveries recently made in France, in the Grotto of Combarelles, near Eyzies, in Dordogne. "The discovery," says The Graphic, "was communicated to the Academie des Sciences by Messrs. Capitan and Breuil, and was accompanied by drawings, some of which we reproduce, of certain figures of animals engraved on the walls of the grotto on each side of its length. The drawings are in some places quite deeply engraved in the rock; in others they are only scratched; here and there is an effort to give a relief to the sketches. It was at once evident to the discoverers that these remarkable rock drawings were identical in character with those on fragments of bone and horn, well known to scientists, and of which casts may be seen in the British Museum, and that the same striving after truth in rendering the characteristics of the animals was to be seen in the Grotto of Combarelles, proving the familiarity of the artist with the appearance of the animals themselves. So that the artist was contemporary with the animal he drew. Now, one of these animals being a hairy mammoth, and the other a reindeer, it is evident that when those creatures roamed the hills and valleys of South Central France man was also there—that is to say, in the Palaeolithic or older stone age.

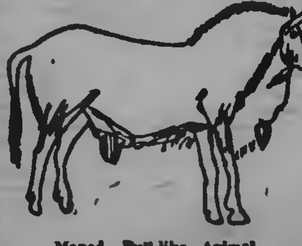


Horse With Covering.

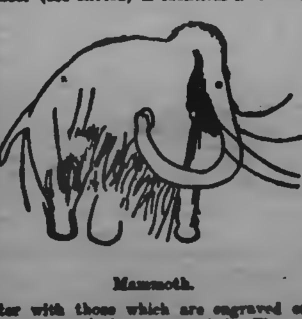


Running Reindeer.

"The precision with which the figures are drawn," say the discoverers, "allows us to recognize the species of the animals so represented. The equine types are sometimes large headed, with short, stiff manes—sometimes with flowing manes and tails. Some of the horses were domestic animals. One of them (shown in our sketch) has on its back a covering—a Palaeolithic horse cloth—others have traces of bits and halters. The bovine types are less frequent; one of them (also reproduced) has the character of certain African antelopes (such as the gnu), while another is much like our oxen of to-day. The running reindeer (see sketch) is identical in character with those which are engraved on bone and of the same period. The representations of the mammoth (of which fourteen were exhibited to the Academie des Sciences) are very characteristic. Some are more hairy than others." With these rock drawings are strange signs engraved in the rock: a circle with the semblance of human features, a double outlined lozenge on the middle of the body of one of the horses, others of M-like shape, semicircles, etc., all of mysterious and unknown significance. Since the memorable day when the first piece of engraved bone was discovered, embedded in the stalagmite of the caverns once tenanted by human beings, there has been no discovery which has caused so great an interest as this one in the Stalagmite Cavern of Combarelles. We have in these rude and yet skilful efforts of the human race deeply interesting evidence that man once shared with mammoth and with reindeer the Arctic plains of southern France.



Maned, Bull-like Animal.



Mammoth.

Piper Findlater, shot in both legs at Dargai, had his forerunner, nearly a century earlier, at Rolica, in the Peninsula, under Wellington:—"A piper of the 71st had his leg broken. Sitting down on his knapsack, the brave man cried out to his mates:—"I canna gang wi' ye, lads, but de'll tak' me if ye shall want music."

WASP WAISTS

Are not much in evidence among American women. The women of America are workers, and a weak waist handicaps a worker. But women has a greater handicap than a weak waist. She may have a perfect form, beautiful and strong in all its lines, and yet be weak because her strength is undermined by diseases peculiar to her sex.

There is no room for argument as to the weakening effect of these diseases. There is also no room for argument as to the power of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription to cure them. It regulates the periods, stops unhealthy drains, heals inflammation and ulceration, and cures female weakness. It is a purely vegetable preparation, and cannot disagree with the weakest constitution. There is no alcohol in "Favorite Prescription," and it is entirely free from opium, cocaine and all narcotics.

Sick women suffering from chronic forms of female diseases are invited to consult Dr. Pierce by letter free, and so obtain the invaluable advice of a specialist in the diseases of women. All correspondence strictly private and sacredly confidential. Address Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y.

"Words cannot tell how grateful I am for your kind advice and good medicines," writes Mrs. John Cooke, Hastings, Northumberland Co., Ontario. "I had been in poor health for four years back, and this spring got so bad I could not do my work. I went to the doctor and he said I had ulceration and falling of the internal organs, but I thought I would try your 'Favorite Prescription.' I took five bottles and three of the 'Golden Medical Discovery' and one vial of Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets, and I can safely say that I never felt better in my life. I have spoken well of your medicines wherever I have been."

Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets keep the liver healthy. They assist the action of "Favorite Prescription" when a laxative is required.

Coats of mail are now being manufactured from papier-mache that cannot be distinguished from real antique armor. According to the wishes of the customer, the armor can be turned out bright steel, silver and gold inlay, hammered brass, rusty iron or malachite. As described by the New York "Evening Post," the new goods are calculated to deceive the best critics, and to give all the satisfaction of the genuine coat of mail. They are warranted not to break easily or to cut any unfortunate guest upon whom they may happen to fall. All descriptions of armor can be had. The new invention has aroused the anger of the dealers in antique armor, who declare that it is intended to ruin their trade.

A well-known English firm of tobacconists are giving away in their packets of cigarettes a small map of the Klondike district. It is colored red, and the words "British Territory" are printed upon it in large letters. On the back is found the following little history of the gold fields: "There is no doubt that the Klondike district is the richest gold field yet discovered. It comprises some 192,000 square miles, mostly in British territory, and although mining has been going on steadily for the past ten years, it was only in August, 1896, that the extraordinary richness of the diggings was discovered." We have been accustomed to portraits of fat women and popular heroes for so long that the novelty is as pleasant as it is instructive.

Where He Failed.

The young man drew himself up to his full height.

"I have," he cried, "an unsullied character, an ardent heart, a versatile mind and strenuous biceps."

The young girl yawned and seemed interested. He was quick to push his advantage.

"I am the possessor of a town and country house, a yacht, a stable of thoroughbreds and a box at the opera."

She hesitated, and a slight flush betrayed that she was listening.

"I have got," he continued with a certain fierceness, "thirty servants, forty pairs of trousers, fifty ancestors, three automobiles, six prize bull pups and an army commission."

Ah! she had found her tongue at last.

"And how many golf medals?" she lisped.

The young man shuddered.

Anecdotal.

As a preface to his attack upon the recent army appointments in England, Rudyard Kipling tells a story of a man who was carrying a bag, and of whom a fellow-traveler asked what it was that the bag contained. "Mongooses," was the answer; "my brother sees snakes, and I'm taking the mongooses up to kill them." "But your brother doesn't see real snakes." "No; but these aren't real mongooses."

Hans Jensen, a Dane, who appeared before a Kansas judge in order to take out naturalization papers, very easily demonstrated his fitness for the privilege. "Hans," said the judge, "are you satisfied with the general conditions of the country? Does this government suit you?" "Yaa, yaa," replied the Dane, "only I vould like to see more rain." "Swear him!" exclaimed the judge. "I see that he already has the Kansas idea."

On one occasion Hans Richter was present at a concert given by a brother composer, at which the latter performed a long and not particularly interesting work of his own. When the composition came to an end Richter expressed his criticism in a very few words. "Well," he said, "I too haf written compositions to make a pile so high," raising his hand three feet from the ground; "but I haf burned them!"

A story is being told in the London clubs about King Edward. A discussion once arose among a circle of his intimate friends as to how they would each meet a sudden reverse of fortune. One of them turned to the Prince—it was before his accession—and said: "If the monarchy was overthrown here, sir, what would you do?" The Prince of Wales thought for a moment, and then replied: "Well, I think I might support my family by lecturing in the United States upon how it feels to be Prince of Wales."

When Mark Twain lived in Buffalo he made the acquaintance of some neighbors under peculiar circumstances. Emerging from his house one morning, he saw something which made him run across the street, and remark to the people who were gathered on the veranda: "My name is Clemens; my wife and I have been intending to call on you and make your acquaintance. We owe you an apology for not doing it before now. I beg your pardon for intruding on you in this informal manner, and at this time of day, but your house is on fire!"

While Charles A. Towne was senator from Minnesota for about thirty days last winter he made a speech on the Philippines in the Senate Chamber of Congress, and it was pronounced a great effort. At the conclusion of his speech, Senator Chauncey Depew was among the first to take Mr. Towne by the hand and congratulate him. "Senator Towne," he is said to have remarked, "your delivery was splendid, your rhetoric unsurpassed, but your argument was damnable." This left-handed compliment was no doubt intended to embarrass Senator Towne, but it didn't. He bowed politely to Mr. Depew, and said: "Senator Depew, I am glad you compliment the only features of my speech you are capable of understanding."

Nebuchadnezzar's Throne Room.

(Berlin correspondence of the London "News.")

The German Oriental Society confirms the reports in American papers to the effect that Dr. Koldewey has succeeded in discovering Nebuchadnezzar's throne room at Babylon. It is a gigantic building, about 60 feet wide by 160 feet long. Exactly opposite the door is the niche in which once the royal throne stood, and on both sides and on the northern front of the hall are richly colored ornaments, in good preservation, which will doubtless prove of the highest historical and artistic importance. The German expedition has also begun excavations in the City of Babylon, near the present village of Jumjuma, and has already discovered a goodly number of inscribed clay tablets, which, according to the testimony of Dr. Weissbach, the Assyriologist of the expedition, contain letters, psalms and vocabularies. They are, therefore, all documents of the deepest interest, and are specially calculated to further the study of the Old Testament.

With the help of new railway material, the work on the hill of Amran-ibn Ali is shortly to be resumed, and the excavations of this unique Pantheon of the Babylonian metropolis, hidden deep down in the earth, promise rich and varied discoveries.

The German Oriental Society does not confine its activity to Babylon. It has secured two other hills, named Fara and Abu Hatab, which are believed to contain particularly fine monuments dating from 4000 B.C. The two hills are not far from Nuffar, where the American excavations are being made, and the Sultan has already issued an irade permitting the excavations.

The Shortcomings of Breadth.

WHEN I was a schoolgirl, with many definite opinions, I remember having a talk with a man of thirty, who happened to advance a theory—I forget about what—which aroused in me ardent dissent. I eagerly presented my view, which was the exact reverse of his, and paused for him to defend himself. He gave me a friendly look; then leaned back and gazed out of the window, with the remark, "Well, there's something in that, too."

I felt as if the bottom had dropped out of the room. For, I thought, if one really hold an opinion, how can he say there is "something in" the contrary view? But since then I have not only had many such experiences; I have myself become an offender. And I wonder if it is altogether a gain. It may be sheer contrariness, but I do get a little tired, sometimes, of broad-mindedness and tolerance, and long for good, bigoted narrowness that can be counted on. I should really like to be told: "No, you're totally wrong; what you have just said is false absolutely. The facts of the case are these, and if you don't believe it, so much the worse for you." How I should enjoy that! But I have not had the experience since my brothers grew up. Occasionally, in desperation, I have assumed the part myself, and taken my stand on positive assertion of a single half truth; but it does no good. I simply live over that early experience; again I am told, "There's something in that, too," and it gives me the feeling, to quote a figure used by a friend in another connection, of having come up against a soft curtain where I expected a wall.

"A plain categorical proposition," says Mr. Morley, "is becoming less and less credible to average minds. Or at least the slovenly willingness to hold two directly contradictory propositions at one and the same time is becoming more and more common." I do not think it is quite this. Men surely used to hold two directly contradictory propositions at one and the same time with the utmost ease. The point is that they did not know they were contradictory, whereas we do; and still we hold them—or rather, entertain them, as one would interesting guests. Our attitude toward every opinion we meet might be expressed thus: "Well, there's something in that, too. Come right in!" And the new opinion comes in, and draws a chair up to the hospitable fire, and finds a friendly circle of other opinions there; they shake hands all round, and each tells the others what good fellows they are.

This is amiable, but, in honesty, I don't like it. It is like the congress of religions, which I have never been able to understand, save on the assumption that each secretly hopes to convert the others by taking them off their guard, or that no one is in earnest about his religion except as regards its common moral basis. The old attitude used to be, "You think differently from me, therefore you're wrong, therefore you're bad, therefore I'll kill you." One by one these clauses have been dropped, beginning with the last one; thus reversing the system of "the House that Jack Built." First we stopped killing the other man, then we stopped thinking he was bad, and now we have nearly stopped thinking he is wrong. May this not be carried too far?—From the "Contributors' Club."

Defeated the Bicyclist.

"GO and hitch up the ostrich," is not at all an absurd command on an ostrich farm. There these great birds are often harnessed to a carriage, and make fairly good substitutes for horses. Although they cannot draw a heavy load, their speed is a recommendation.

At Jacksonville, Florida, there is a bird named Oliver W. that can run a mile in two minutes and twenty-two seconds. His owners claim that he is more satisfactory than a horse because he eats less, never shies at anything, never runs away, and goes steadily at a good pace without laziness or fatigue.

This particular ostrich appears to like his work. When the little carriage is brought out he comes running toward it at full speed, with both wings spread out, ready to have the harness put on.

On one occasion a cyclist tried to pass Oliver W. on a long, smooth stretch of road. He came up behind the carriage, thinking to get ahead and escape the dust. Oliver W. thought differently. He threw his head high in the air, gave a flap with his wings, and went forward with a speed that astonished the cyclist. Putting forth more effort, the latter made another attempt to pass the ostrich, but the faster the pedals of the bicycle moved the faster sped the long legs of the bird.

It so happened that the cyclist had a record as a fast rider, and to be distanced by an ostrich was not to his liking. For two miles he tried to pass his feathered rival, but was then obliged to give up the race, defeated.

Some fast horses have tried conclusions with Oliver W., who seems to like nothing better than testing their speed, starting slowly to make them think it easy to distance him, and then gradually increasing his pace.

Modest Fees.

LAWYERS do not usually get the small end of a bargain with their clients, but the "Green Bag" recalls two incidents where the clients had rather the best of it.

Sir Walter Scott's first client was a burglar. He got the fellow off, but the man declared that he hadn't a penny to give him for his services. Two bits of useful information he offered, however, and with these the young lawyer had to be content. The first was that a yelping terrier inside the house was a better protection against thieves than a big dog outside; and the second, that no sort of lock bothered his craft so much as an old rusty one.

Small compensation as this was, the first brief of the noted French lawyer, Monsieur Rouher, yielded still less. The peasant for whom Monsieur Rouher won the case asked how much he owed him.

"Oh, say two francs," said the modest young advocate.

"Two francs!" exclaimed the peasant. "That is very high. Won't you let me off with a franc and a half?"

"No," said the counsel; "two francs or nothing."

"Well, then," said his client, "I'd rather pay nothing."

And with a bow he left.

Interesting to Smokers.

A New York Sun editorial the other day was of interest to smokers—even, possibly, to reformers who include in their list the "holy herb nicotian":—

A sacrificial fire has been burning in Clayton, N.J., and the savor of it still tickles Gloucester County nostrils. The Anti-Nicotine Club brought to its rooms all its idols, cigars, cigarettes, pipes, tobacco, and burned them up in the stove. So fierce for the moment is the rage in Clayton against the holy herb nicotian. The case of the Vice-President of the club, Mr. Samuel Turner, is especially glorious or sad, according to the taste and fancy of him who considers it. He is 75; he has smoked for 63 years; with reasonable prudence and longevity he might hope to hold the smokers' record, for this county at least, and puff away in peace and comfort for a whole green century. He throws away the laurel in his grasp. He makes fuel of the comrades of two generations. In the heat and fury of the Clayton anti-nicotine movement he gives up the charmer of pain, the consoler of sadness, the blameless companion of reverie, the silent partner of books, the lubricator of digestion, the fountain of philosophy, the mother of good temper, the nurse of sound old age, the old, faithful, harmless, constant friend.

A boy may toss away his cigarette and a youth his cigar or briarwood, worn for show and ornament rather than for use, and feel no loss. But wait till you come to forty year. Nobody really takes his degree in the first and greatest University of Virginia before that age. His bacon isn't really cured till then. Then he becomes entitled to the freedom of the city of Nicotia. Then, if he has eyes to pierce through the smoke, he begins to see how the world goes round. For instance, what made the Elizabethans great? Tobacco. What made Bismarck great? Tobacco. Take such a philosopher and let him come to sixty year, as he cannot fail to do unless you crush him with automobiles or dynamite. For twenty years more he has worshipped at the fragrant altar. Surely he will not be turned away from it now. Surely he will obey the voice at eve obeyed at prime.

The case of Samuel Turner of Clayton shows what capacity of self-renunciation exists in the bosom of the veteran smoker. But why do people leave off smoking? Well, one reason is that there is a lot of confounded doctors who make it their pleasure to knock yours in the head. They tell you point-blank: "You positively must stop smoking;" and all the time the rascals have cigar cases in their pockets. That's the worst pang of the condemned smoker.

The Guards' New Uniform.

The thirteen hundred Guards who left the other day for South Africa were accoutred in the new uniform which has displaced the khaki, which was the all-prevailing hue at the beginning of the war. Popular interest," said The Times in describing their inspection by the King, "in these ceremonies is as keen to-day as it was when the first contingent departed for the war. Long before noon the approaches to the barracks were crowded with spectators who had not the privilege of admission to the parade ground, and were content to look on from Birdcagewalk and the railings of St. James' Park. It was not an unfavorable morning for such a display. A sharp frost nipped the air and a light mist hung over the park. Within the enclosure was a scene of picturesque activity. Guardsmen, in long grey overcoats and busbies, moved about among the ever-increasing crowd of civilians; bands mustered, and men in the new campaigning uniform paraded for a preliminary inspection by their officers. Smart and serviceable is the judgment that will be passed on the new kit. The color is a blend of khaki and drab—drab tunic, drab breeches, drab putties, and drab hat. The hat is a novelty in shape, being broader and more substantial in appearance than the ordinary soft felt with which we have become familiar. Rakishly looped up at the side—on the right for Grenadiers and Coldstreams, who wear the white and the red hackle; on the left for the Scots, who, instead of hackle, have the tartan badge of white and red—it is not merely a comfortable, but an effective and even picturesque head-dress. And it has this further advantage, that it is not uniform, and, therefore makes men less conspicuous objects for the enemy's rifles. In the early days of the war our soldiers were easily distinguished, even when lying scattered on the drab veldt, because of the uniformity of the helmet, though covered with khaki, whereas the Colonial troops in their soft felt hats were invisible from even a short distance. The accoutrements, however, have little of the quality of invisibility. The bandoliers are of light grey canvas, the belts are white, the haversack is white, the blanket is rolled in a white cover. Only the water-bottle and the cover of the "billy" or canteen which hangs from the shoulder over the blanket are of khaki color. The buttons, too, are of shining brass—buttons that are rarely seen after men have been once under the close fire of Boers. Yet there is this to be said—a few days on the African veldt will tone down the glaring whites to a neutral tint."

His Aplication for Cash.

One of the recent incidents in the invasion of England by the United States has to do with an American boy of the "smart" order. Arising out of an application in court to presume the death of one Alfred Richardson, who had been manager of some cycle works at Middlesbrough, and who had mysteriously disappeared, it was elicited that he had been advertised for in some American papers, and that one reply was received from H. C. Starnes of Virginia, U.S., a boy purporting to be nine years of age, who alleged that the deceased had married his mother in 1893. There were also two enclosures from a man represented to be a County Court Judge. Asked by the solicitors for particulars, the boy further wrote: "If there is a Estate over thear coming to Alfred Richardson, y of coarse that is a coming to me, and I want to get just as I can." Another document came, said to be from a County Court Judge, which began: "This certifies that Mr. H. C. Starnes has brought before me 20 good old citizens of Scott country—and proved that his father was Mr. Alfred Richardson." It was signed "Judge." The English Judge said it seemed impossible that a County Court Judge anywhere could have written this, and he granted leave forthwith to presume the death.

DAISY GORDON'S FOLLY

—OR—

The World Lost for Love's Sake

By Laura Jean Libbey

Author of The Crime of Hallow-E'en, The Flirtations of a Beauty, Willful Gaynell, Little Leafy, Only a Mechanic's Daughter

But he soon rallied, thanks to his youth and stalwart constitution.

Daisy was the first to welcome him as he came down to the hotel parlor.

Why should she avoid him? she told herself with bitter recklessness. Why deny herself the few days of the only comfort she would ever know in her poor young life—surely the angels in heaven would forgive her for being unable to withstand so small a temptation.

Aleck did not know the horrible past—why should she not be happy the few golden hours in his company that she might.

Braving the anger of both Olive and Hetty, she no longer avoided Aleck, and hope began to dawn in his breast. Bright dreams came to him of the future, with Daisy always by his side.

There seemed no obstacle in his path; he had nothing to do but win her love; and that he determined to do, after waiting patiently for three long weeks for a letter from Daisy's father sanctioning it.

In those lovely eyes of hers, he believed he read some faint signs that he would not woo in vain.

His gentle, chivalrous wooing was like a beautiful poem to Daisy—as yet she was not startled into a sense of reality.

"I am going to forget the dark past and be happy for just a few short weeks," that was her constant cry to heaven by night and by day.

For a few pleasant weeks the sun shone over her, the flowers bloomed fair for her; happy birds sang in her ears; the whole world had but one voice for her, and it was full of love.

She did not heed the end of the road, she was blind to the precipice before her, and she would not see that the end was black, bitter ruin and death.

She knew that Aleck loved her—read it in his eyes, she heard it in his words, she knew it by his every action and gesture. They loved each other, and the knowledge had come to her—too late.

She could never tell in after times how this love of theirs was made known to each other, though she carefully reviewed many scenes.

There came a beautiful moonlit night when they stood on the beach together, for the first time quite alone. Olive and Hetty were at a hop, and Mrs. Burnett was seated on the veranda, near enough to see, but too far off to hear the impassioned words that fell from Aleck's lips.

He had taken her white hand in his and was trying to tell her how he loved her.

Oh, how eloquent his words were, they seemed to have burned their way from his heart to his lips.

"You stand beside me white as death, darling," he cried, "as though you were frightened. Tell me my words have not startled you, Daisy. Tell me you love me and will be my little bride."

CHAPTER VIII.

A Terrible Struggle.

Daisy did not answer; the words seemed to die away on her lips.

If he had shot her—stabbed that beautiful white throat of hers, she could not have been more horribly startled; the color died from her face; her whole figure swayed and trembled; she would have fallen to the ground had he not reached out his arm and caught her.

His wife! Oh, heaven! That terrible word—she was the wife of the man who at that moment was in a prison cell, and she only a child!

A low cry of irrepressible anger came from her lips, her head drooped, she buried her face in her hands.

It seemed to her she was back again in the little dimly-lighted stone church, enacting that horrible scene at the altar; then through the dim chaos of her thoughts she heard Aleck's voice.

"Daisy, my little darling, I must have frightened you!" he cried; "but you know—you must have known—how much I wished to ask you this."

As he spoke he drew nearer to her and threw his arm about the little slender figure.

"I am laying my life and my heart at your feet, Daisy," he pleaded. "Raise your eyes to mine, dear, and tell me my great worshipful love is not in vain."

Even in that moment it struck him that her face was pale with anguish; he could not understand the sorrow he saw expressed there.

"Answer me one question, Daisy," he said, earnestly—"answer it honestly and truly: Do you love me—'Yes' or 'No?' Can you deny that you love me?"

He caught her little, trembling hands in his, holding them close prisoners, and looked down eagerly into the averted face.

No human being could have realized the struggle that was going on in the girl's heart.

Almost involuntarily her lips formed the answer.

"Yes, Heaven help me, I—love you, Aleck!"

He laughed aloud at the timid, piteous, faltering way in which the words were uttered. He attributed it all to her girlish confusion and bashfulness. Ah! it was so sweet to woo and win such a timid, shrinking little bride.

"Listen to me, my beloved," he cried. "You own that you love me, and all true love ends in marriage. I pledge my life to you as I pledge my love."

She drew back with a piteous quivering of the white lips that he could not fail to see.

"I have startled you, dear," he declared. "We will be lovers for a little while—betrothed, you know—and after you are used to the idea, then you will think by degrees how soon you will take me for your husband."

She drew back from him in horror.

"Oh, Aleck, never mention the word 'husband' to me—it is hateful! Oh, if we could but be lovers always!"

"You would like that?" he asked, in wonder.

"Yes," she answered, with a sob.

He could not understand her; other girls, he had always believed, were most anxious to hear their lovers say something of marriage; but, then, Daisy was so very young.

"There is Mrs. Burnett coming, Daisy," he whispered suddenly. "Answer my question before she comes; are we to be lovers, darling?"

Then followed the most terrible struggles between the good angels and the bad that ever fought for a human heart.

Why not take a few weeks of joy out of her life? Oh, to be loved for a few short, fleeting weeks; they were not much, they would pass all too

Labor-Saving but Oath-Producing.

SPEAKING of the introduction in Eastern telephone exchanges of the "line-busy" phonograph attachments, the "Argonaut" remarks that in the effete East these innovations may possibly be tamely received, but they had a short life in San Francisco. When some bright telephone clerk conceived the plan of saving another clerk's wages by putting on a phonograph to say, "Line is busy," it was received with rejoicing by the telephone stockholders in San Francisco. But the telephone subscribers did not like it at all, and did not hesitate to say so. On the first day of the innovation the startled telephone subscribers listened in wonder to the mechanical moaning, squeaking and buzzing of the phonograph droning out: "We—will—call—you—line—is—busy—line—is—busy—we—will—call—you." The machine, naturally, was deaf to expostulation or enquiry. To polite dissent and to fiery oaths it returned the same monotonous groan: "We—will—call—you—line—is—busy." Goaded by this automatic barking, the most mild-mannered men became temporarily maddened. On that famous first day the telephone scenes in the various clubs were peculiar. From the telephone closets there would come at intervals wild bursts of oaths and sometimes maniac laughter. The attendants would hasten to the telephone temple, and assist forth congested millionaires, purple-faced, pop-eyed, apoplectic. They were speechless—all they could do was to shake their fists at the telephone. When a mining millionaire from Mexico, newly arrived that day, suddenly burst out of the telephone closet clamoring for an axe with which to attack the instrument, the club manager grew apprehensive. When, later in the day, an alcoholic millionaire could not wait for an axe, but demolished the telephone with a heavy, silver-headed cane, the manager concluded to take prudential measures and ask the telephone company to switch off the phonograph. Which was done. This was the end of the telephone-phonograph in the San Francisco clubs, and not long after it was disused throughout the city generally. This experience is respectfully submitted by the "Argonaut" for the consideration of Eastern cities.

Suicide Contagious.

Mayor Morse, of Emporia, Kan., asked the editors of Emporia papers recently to refrain from publishing details of suicides. He said that the publication of such details had caused an epidemic of suicides in that community in the last two years. He had consulted with the Board of Health, and thought that if the papers would not comply with his request he had a right to stop summarily the publication of suicide details under a law providing for the suppression of epidemics.

"If the paper," he said, "on which these local papers are printed had been kept in a place infected with smallpox I could demand that the papers quit using that paper or stop publication. If they spread another contagion, the contagious suggestion of suicide, I believe the liberty of the press is not to be considered before the public welfare, and that the courts would sustain me in using force to prevent the publication of papers containing matter clearly deleterious to the public health.

"However, no such steps need be taken. Mr. White, of the 'Gazette;' Mr. Strong, of the 'Republican,' and Mr. Yearout, of the 'Times,' are in sympathy with me in this movement and will suppress the details of suicides until the epidemic subsides."

Sunshine.

After a morn of dreary rain
The sullen clouds withdrew,
The summer sun shone forth again
From skies of dazzling blue:

Sorrow and suffering was my date,
But you have banished pain—
Your love shone through my lonely soul
Like sunshine after rain!

Where There Is No Degeneracy.

A delightful article by Mr. Frank Beddard, of the London Zoological Gardens, in the "Pall Mall Magazine," makes one suspect that the only spot in civilization where degeneracy has not begun is the "Zoo." Mr. Beddard takes us through the great menagerie which is under his supervision, and shows us many distinguished inmates at dinner. The hippopotamus is an enviable gourmet. He has been thirty-seven years at the "Zoo," and has had only one attack of indigestion. On that grave occasion he was cured with forty (or eighty) drops of croton oil, administered in a bun. Happy beast! No visits to specialists at a guinea a visit! No anxious trials of patent medicines, advertised in the evening papers with portraits of the cured! Down went the bun, and Hippo was himself again! The Australian cassowary consumes everything (except the missionary and his hymn-book), and never knows what indigestion means. Excellent living (Mr. Beddard's statistics of the food are staggering) and leisured ease make astonishing longevity at the "Zoo." There was a Madagascar parrot who flourished in captivity for fifty-four years, and goodness knows how old he was when he retired to Regent's Park. Possibly he became a centenarian. The official records apparently neglect to state his views of life.

Incident at Pekin.

Probably the most amusing incident of the siege of Pekin, says Henry Savage Landor, occurred on July 23, 1900, when the Dowager-Empress sent a hundred melons, some cucumbers and egg-plant as a present to the Chinese soldiers at the barricades. The servants who brought them misunderstood the order, and handed over the whole lot to the foreign soldiers, also at their barricade. The vegetables were hauled in with due haste, as soon as the guards got over their first astonishment at the handsome gift; but no doubt the person most astonished of all was the messenger on his return to the Dowager-Empress. It is not improbable that the misplaced melons cost him his life.

A Woman's Age.

Mr. Youngwed—Do you mean to say you are 24 years old to-day? Why, you told me six months ago, just before the wedding, that you were only 22.

Mrs. Youngwed—Yes, I know; but, my dear, I've aged so rapidly since we were married.

Miss Crawford—How did you enjoy your ocean voyage? Miss Crabshaw—It was just lovely. The state-room seemed so comfortable after living in a flat.—Town Topics.

A MARVELLOUS MEDICINE

"No Cure, No Pay," is the Newest Proposal of the Proprietors of Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills

Editor Morning Times

Sir,—We make the following proposal to the readers of the Times: To any one who is a subject of rheumatism (no matter how long standing), or any blood disease, as enumerated below, and will give Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills a fair trial, and do not find a perfect cure, we will refund the money paid for the pills. If no substantial improvement is observed, we will in addition, pay $10 in cash on satisfactory evidence being supplied us to this effect.

We have yet to know of a single case where these wonderful pills have not been almost entirely successful in effecting a cure. CANADA CHEMICAL CO.

Ex-Ald. Bailey, St. John's, writes: I cannot speak too highly of Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills. They worked a miracle in my case, and cured me after many years of suffering. I do not think their equal is to be obtained.

Dr. Clarke's Little Red Pills are a positive and certain cure for la grippe, rheumatism, asthma, paralysis, catarrh, eczema, coughs, backache, indigestion, all stomach and liver troubles, female complaints, even when the diseases have been standing for many years, the most stubborn cases will yield. Price 50 cents per box. For sale by Ormond & Walsh. The Canada Chemical Company will forfeit $10 for any case that these pills do not help.

Dr. Clarke's Sure Cure for Catarrh, and Dr Clarke's Sure Cure for Eczema, same price. $10 will be paid for any case they will not permanently cure.

Don't Allow Operation for Cancer

There is a simpler, safer and more effective Method of Treatment.

Dr. J. C. Oliver, of Cincinnati, Ohio, U.S.A., in a paper he read before the Ohio State Medical Society, May 1896, said: "I have operated in a considerable number of cases of Cancer recently, and with one exception all have died within fourteen months after the operation."

This statement of a prominent Surgeon, should make any one suffering from cancer, hesitate before submitting to operation and consider carefully the evidence offered on behalf of the new Constitutional remedy, which cures Cancers, Tumors and all malignant growths, without the necessity of operation. It is a simple vegetable medicine that searches out and destroys the cancer growths, completely eradicates the disease, and at the same time, builds up and invigorates the system.

Stott & Jury, Bowmanville, Ont., will be pleased to send full particulars of this treatment, in a plain, sealed wrapper.

—There was no police court yesterday.

—A ladies' hat awaits an owner at the police station.

—There was a good attendance at the market yesterday.

—A pocket book awaits an owner at the police station.

—Workmen were engaged yesterday in taking down the front wall of the Crystal Block.

—Coal oil, it is said, has been discovered at Melrose, near Belleville, while boring a well.

—If you want a cheap lady's bicycle, call at the Times Bookstore. Two second-hand wheels at a bargain.

—The steamer, Maple Leaf, owned by Kennedy, Davis & Co., of Lindsay, is being fitted out at the wharf below Lindsay street bridge, and will start her season's work in a few days.

—The Rector's bible class of St. Luke's church will be conducted on Thursday evenings instead of on Friday. The hour will be unchanged.

—The fortnightly cottage meetings at Auburn will be conducted by Rev. Langfeldt, and will be held in the future on the first and third Friday of each month.

—Forty-three townships in Ontario have abolished statute labor and adopted the system of commutation recommended by the Provincial Road Overseer.

—Gravenhurst citizens lately carried a by-law to raise $15,000 for the purchase of the existing electric light plant. Only seven votes were cast against the by-law.

—Mr. Thos. Marshall, of Orillia, Chief Engineer of the Trent Valley Navigation Co. fleet, is busy fitting up that company's boats at Bobcaygeon, and hopes to have two of them ready early next week.

—A lady visiting here from New York had photos taken by Whiten. She thought the work was equal to the best she ever had taken. When you want the best go to Whiten and get it. Studio, 158 Hunter street, west.

—Andrew Carnegie has presented Smith's Falls with a $10,000 library building. A few wealthy residents of that town provided the site and the books. Why not accept a similar gift from the great philanthropist, and make an appeal for donations for site and books? We have at least a dozen rich men in Peterborough who should and would help the scheme if properly presented.

—The Times was pleased to have a call yesterday from Mr. George A. Jordan, who is spending a few days in town in the interests of the Canadian Casualty Company, of which he is the Inspector. This is a new company, with a very promising future before it. There is a wide field for accident insurance, and the promoters of the Casualty propose to cover the ground fully. The provisional board of directors are composed of the very cream of our business men.

Mission Appointments

The appointments made to the Home Mission Congregations under the supervision of the Presbytery of Peterborough are as follows,—Cardiff, Mr. J. A. Miller, Chandos, Mr. Alex. Evans; Cordova, Mr. Edgerton, S. Carey; Harvey, Mr. Stanley, H. Pickup; Oakhill, Mr. George Shearer.

Remanded Until Monday

County Constable Cochrane returned yesterday from Methuen, bringing with him, as a prisoner, Frank Newell, a farmer. Newell is charged with wife-beating, and was remanded by County Police Magistrate Edmison until Monday. This is his second offence, he having been up on a similar charge some months ago but was allowed to go on a promise to behave himself.

Y. W. C. A. NOTES

The Domestic Science classes in connection with the Y.W.C.A., have completed a most successful course of work. The attendance at the meetings has been excellent throughout, and the members have expressed themselves as highly pleased with the progress they made in this special branch of household economy.

The committee in charge desire to express their deepest thanks to Mr. C. B. McAllister, the Light and Power Co., and many others, for the generous contributions they made which aided the work most substantially.

ANOTHER CASE OF SMALLPOX

A Case, of a Severe Type, Has Developed in Otonabee

A rather severe case of smallpox has been discovered in the Township of Otonabee, about seven miles from town. The health authorities were notified of the case and all necessary precautions as to isolation vaccination etc, have been taken and the disease is not likely to spread. The case is supposed to have originated in a person who came to Warkworth from Michigan, suffering from a supposed case of chickenpox. The victim is the father of a large family and had visited in the house in Warkworth early in March where the infected person had been staying. The family have been isolated, the father being separated from the others. Only one case has so far developed and the patient is reported to be progressing favorably.

These are the facts of the case as we have received them and there is no cause for alarm. The public are therefore requested not to give credence to any rumors that might be circulated.

A TEARFUL BABY

wanted to Write a Letter

A man came upon his little girl in a grievous and tearful condition, because she had been restricted in her allowance of Grape-Nuts. The father says, "I am little at home and I hardly understood why the absence of one particular food should excite her grief, but upon inquiry discovered that she had taken such a decided fancy to it that she was refusing meat and almost every other kind of food.

Since she has been using Grape-Nuts a serious condition of constipation of the bowels has been changed to a thoroughly normal condition and her flesh is as solid as a rock.

I quieted her grief by agreeing to let her write a letter, or I would write if she would tell me what to say, so here it is: 'My dear Mr. Grape-Nuts,—Mamma will not give me all the Grape-Nuts I want. She says I must eat some beef, and I don't like it; I just like Grape-Nuts better than anything else, with cream on them. Mamma used to soak them in water, but now I just eat them dry with cream on them. If I had ten dollars to buy Grape-Nuts with, I would fill the big pantry shelf, then mamma would give me more. I am six years old. With love, and thanking you for making Grape-Nuts. D. L. F.'"

Her father adds: "Right here I may gratefully give credit to Grape-Nuts, (which has largely taken the place of rich, indigestible food in my own case), for curing a distressing catarrh of the stomach." This father and little girl live in Truro, Nova Scotia. Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

A SERIOUS ACCIDENT

A Youth Badly Burned and Cut by Powder Exploding in a Bottle

Michael, the nine-year-old son of Mr. J. J. Hogan, of East Ops, found a small bottle filled with gun powder while he was exploring the dark corners of a root house. He retired to the stable to have an opportunity of examining the contents without interuption. He struck a match and dropped it into the powder with the usual results. The bottle exploded and the boy received about fifty cuts besides being badly burned. A large piece of glass lodged in the palm of his right hand and medical assistance had to be called to remove the glass and dress his wounds.

THE COCKING MAIN

A Case of Considerable Local Interest Now on in Lindsay

There is considerable suppressed excitement in certain circles in town over the prosecution that has been begun against those who have been engaged in the recent cocking main near Lindsay. It is said that as soon as evidence is secured steps will be taken to punish those in Peterborough who took birds to the fight.

At the preliminary hearing at Lindsay, a number of witnesses were examined, at which the names of those who took part were disclosed. Interesting developments are expected when the case comes up again on Monday next.

Weak Back and Spinal Pains

Pains in the back number their victims in thousands. Only very powerful and penetrating remedies will reach these distressing complaints, but Polson's Nerviline is as sure to cure them as anything in this world can be sure. Rub Nerviline over the sore parts night and morning, and see how quickly it drives out the pain. Five times stronger than any other. Good for internal and external use. Large bottles 25c.

PROGRAM FOR TO-NIGHT

The Closing Exercises of the Y. M. C. A. Gymnasium

For months past the members of the Y.M.C.A. gymnasium class have been preparing for a splendid exhibition of their work on the closing night of gym for the year. An excellent programme has been prepared, and will be presented to-night when the friends of the members, and those interested in the work will have an opportunity of witnessing the progress made in that branch. The hall has been prettily decorated for the occasion. A silver collection will be taken at the door.

The programme will be as follows:

Instrumental string quartette.
Dumb bell drill	Junior boys
Wrestling bout	Juniors
Rifle manual	Sergt.-Major Brittain
Hand-ball and tug of war	Juniors

Malt Breakfast Food

A STRONG AND EASY WINNER

For the past ten years millers and speculators with a very limited knowledge of the chemistry and physical value of grain foods, have placed on the market preparations under various names; some of these preparations they designate as "health foods." No greater delusions or snares have ever been foisted on the public.

Food experts, analytical chemists and physicians qualified to speak on the subject, quite agree that Malt Breakfast Food is the only true health food now before the public. This finding of scientific men should influence and direct those who are now making use of poorly prepared breakfast cereals.

The exquisite deliciousness of Malt Breakfast Food, its palatableness, its strengthening virtues and its economical features all combine to make it popular; it is a strong and easy winner with all classes of our people. Your grocer delights to recommend Malt Breakfast Food.

VESTRY MEETING

In Connection with St. Luke's Church—The Officers Elected

The annual meeting of St. Luke's Vestry was held on Easter Monday, and a very large number of the church members being present.

After the reading of the minutes of the previous meeting the reports of the different branches were received, which were highly satisfactory. The expenses for the year amounting to $2100.00 together with a debt of $147.00, carried over from the previous year had all been met. The contributions to Missions had been very good. Reference was made to the large Easter offerings, which amounted to $340.00.

The election of officers resulted as follows:—

People's Warden—Mr. Frank Adams.

Rector's Warden—Mr. Adam Dawson.

Assistant Wardens—Col. J. Z. Rogers and Mr. A. O. Sawyers.

Vestry Clerk—Mr. T. H. Adams.

Lay Delegates to Synod—Messrs. F. J. Jameson, G. F. Warde, and R. B. Rogers.

Finance Committee—Messrs E. A. Peck, H. Nesbitt, G. G. Pratley, W. Manlece, Mrs. W. J. Scott, Mrs. A. O. Sawyers and Miss H. Peck.

The sidesmen are to be appointed by the Men's Guild from month to month.

A very hearty vote of thanks was tendered to the Church Wardens, also to the organist and choir leader, whose services had been much appreciated by the congregation. Votes of thanks were tendered to the choir, the different organizations and to Mr. J. Hall.

The meeting adjourned until April 21st. The benediction was pronounced by the Rector.

WEDDING BELLS

Nuptials of Miss Clara Strain and Mr. Wm Roberts, of Town

A pretty and interesting event took place last evening in St. John's church being the occasion of the marriage of Miss Clara L. Strain, daughter of Mr. John Strain, of town, and Mr. Wm. Roberts, also of town.

The ceremony, was performed by Rev. J. C. Davidson in the presence of a large number of friends of the contracting parties.

The bride was assisted by her sister, Miss Bertie Strain, while the duties of groomsman were performed by Mr. G. Dormer, of Ashburnham.

The newly married couple will take up residence on Stewart street.

WHAT PROMINENT MANITOBANS HAVE TO SAY

Rev. Dr. Duval, of Knox Church, Winnipeg, Says That a Day of Judgment is Coming

Winnipeg, Man., April 4. — The latest returns up to 9.30 o'clock this morning show a vote in favor of the referendum of 13,621, and against, of 14,600. A very heavy vote was polled in Winnipeg City, where the ballot stood 2,450 for, and 5,317 against. The consensus of opinion seems to be that prohibition is for the present removed from politics, and no political party will reintroduce it for many years. License holders feel well repaid for their arduous campaign work. They acted very wisely last night, and did not grow excessively jubilant over their victory. The saloons and bars were likewise tightly locked up, even after the polls had closed. There was nothing doing at prohibition headquarters, and the few faithful that gathered there were much disappointed, especially as regards Winnipeg. The temperance leaders received the result in silence, and will not express an opinion on the matter. They are strictly non-committal. Mr. Mulock, chairman of the Dominion Alliance, said he would prepare a statement for this afternoon, but nothing else could be got from him. At the Prohibition League Committee about the same state of affairs existed. Mr. Taylor refused to talk on the vote itself, but he condemned the manner in which it was taken. In many polls, the prohibition scrutineers were kept from assuming their duties for some time by substitutes who got there ahead of them, presumably appointed by the liquor men, and during that time Mr. Taylor said the liquor men had "Got in some of their fine work." In interviews on the result of the election

Rev. Dr. Duvall of Knox Church, said the Alliance expected something of the kind, but if the Government wished to determine the fate of prohibition on the result of this referendum, they must remember that a day of judgement is coming.

Rev. Jos. Hogg, of St. Andrew's said it was neither a surprise nor a disappointment to him. "I would rather," he said, "have the Act defeated than trust its enforcement to either of the present political parties. Now that it is defeated we must see that we put men into office who will be true to their pledges to the people, men who will have the moral courage to enforce a law that the people demand."

Premier Roblin said that it would have a great effect in Ontario, and would help Premier Ross out considerably.

Attorney-General Campbell would not yet express an opinion. He wants to size up the situation after all the returns are in and he has time to consider things.

WHAT THE FREE PRESS SAYS.

Winnipeg, Man., April 4. — The Free Press summary of yesterday's vote says: The test of the Manitoba Liquor yesterday, with the result that the measure failed to meet with the approval of the electors at the polls. The returns available last night showed that a total of 37,221 votes had been cast, and of these 15,600 were against bringing the Act into force, and 13,621 were in its favor. There was therefore a negative majority of 7,979. The result was rather a surprise to many, who thought that the prohibition vote would equal, if not exceed, that against the Act, although nobody expected that it would be sufficient to carry the measure. A great many country polls still remain to be heard from, however, and although these may cut down the adverse majority to some extent, they will not affect the main result. They will also have the effect of considerably swelling the total vote cast, so that it will be far beyond the votes cast at the plebiscite taken in 1892 and 1898. It is variously estimated that when all returns are in the total figures will range anywhere from 30,000 to 40,000, which will closely approximate the vote cast at the last Dominion general election.

The morning telegram says the vote cast for the act were 9,230 and against it 15,082, making the majority against as far as the returns went 5,852. The total number of votes cast at points outside Winnipeg, for which returns were received last night, was 17,120, of which 7,355 were cast for, and 9,760 against, making the majority against the adoption of the Liquor Act outside the city 2,430. This, of course, is far from a complete record of the votes cast.

LOOSE VOTING ALLOWED.

In Winnipeg the vote was very heavy quite early in the morning, although the polls were open until 8 p.m. A noticeable feature of the morning's vote was that a large number took the declaration, the Act permitting practically manhood suffrage, and anyone who was not on the list and had been a resident of the province for a year was permitted to take the oath and vote.

Rumors of fraud are heard everywhere. In one or two places, also, mysterious free liquor booths were in full swing, run by enthusiasts alleged to be foreign anti-prohibitionists, but as those owning the booths insisted that they had a right to give away their own property, their efforts were not frustrated.

Paine's Celery Compound

Saves Sleepless, Nervous Despondent and Morose People From Insanity

It is the Only Effective and Honest Medicine For the Banishment of Common Spring Ailments

Medical men of the highest standing, and a host of educated men and women competent to judge, declare that Paine's Celery Compound is the only true and effective medicine for the banishment of the ills that make life miserable in springtime.

In the spring season tens of thousands are sleepless, fretful, nervous, despondent and gloomy. They find it impossible to obtain restful sleep, and soon become physically exhausted; some are already mere wrecks of humanity.

Such sufferers cannot with safety trifle with their condition. They need immediate succor and aid before nature is too severely overtaxed. The weakened, exhausted and irritated system must be fortified at once.

Paine's Celery Compound is the only agent that can afford the rundown, nervous, sleepless and despondent victims prompt relief and permanent cure. If you are assured of this fact dear reader, do not hesitate a moment; putting off will certainly aggravate your condition and lead you nearer the grave. If you wisely determine to test the health building powers of Paine's Celery Compound, do not accept a substitute or vile imitation; your special case demands the best; you are paying for it and should get it. Ask your dealer for PAINE'S. Refuse all others. See that the name is on the bottle and wrapper.

SANTOS-DUMONT COMING

The Great Air Ship Navigator Sails for the United States

London, April 4.—M. Santos-Dumont, the Brazilian aeronaut, sails for New York to-day on the Hamburg-American liner, Deutschland. The purpose of his trip is to assist the authorities of the St. Louis world's fair in the organization of the proposed balloon contests, and select a site on which to erect a balloon shed for himself. M. Santos-Dumont takes with him several tons of his aerial apparatus. This includes the frame, motor and the contributory portions of the Santos-Dumont No. 7, which has lately been completed in Paris.

TO COME TO CANADA

Imbued with the Opinion That Colonial Militia is Vital to Empire's Defence

Special Telegram to The Times.

London, April 4.—I have authority to state that Lord Dundonald will assume command of the Canadian militia at the termination of O'Grady-Haly's term of office. Lord Dundonald is now at Ascot, awaiting the Gazetting of the appointment.

In view of Lord Dundonald's selection there have turned up recent expressions of his views. He has a tremendous belief in the citizen soldier as an increasingly important element in the defence of the Empire, the State providing freely everything to secure his efficiency. He points to his experience in Natal in the dark days of 1899-1900 as proof of the splendid work in the field civilian soldiers are capable of doing when formed in regiments under good regimental officers. He says on the true recognition of the citizen soldier depends the solution of one of the gravest political problems before our race, and insists on the paramount importance of good shooting to make the Empire safe.

Such are the changed conditions of warfare that we must be a match for the enemy at a thousand yards or more away. This can only be attained by constant practice in rifle shooting.

Lord Dundonald anticipates his work in Canada with the keenest interest, and fully appreciates the conditions of Canadian life, which must guide him if he is to avoid the pitfalls of his predecessors.

Lord Dundonald sends me this message for publication in The Star: "The Canadians who served under me in South Africa were men from the top of the head to the soles of their feet. To be more explicit, there are persons with rifles and men with rifles. When a general has men under him with rifles, he knows what he can do, and what risks he can take. Dundonald."

HUDDA MULLAH ON WAR PATH.

The Fanatic Who has Caused Britain Much Trouble in the Past

MURDER OF BOERS BY AUSTRALIANS

Were Ten who Surrendered Executed with Object of Robbery?

NATIVES SHOT LIKE RABBITS.

German Missionary Who Knew of the Crimes was Put Out of the Way with a Gun.

London, April 4.— The Morning Leader publishes the alleged story of the crimes which led to the court-martial and execution of two Australian officers in South Africa, which is just now exciting keen indignation in Australia.

The Morning Leader asserts that several officers of this particular irregular corps shot natives like rabbits, and they are even suspected of murdering men of their own command against whom they had grudges.

MURDER FOR PLUNDER

The incident which led to their court-martial was the cold-blooded "execution" by those officers of 10 Boers, who were journeying to Pietersburg with the object of surrendering. It was supposed that these Boers had £20,000 with them. Actuated by cupidity, the Australians stopped the Boers, tried them by mock court-martial, and ordered all of them to be shot. This was done by a squadron of the soldiers, after some non-commissioned officers had refused to carry out the death sentence.

The officers then ransacked the Boers' waggons, and were disgusted upon finding that the £20,000 was in Transvaal paper money.

SHOT A MISSIONARY

The Morning Leader says further that a German missionary, a few miles distant from the scene of the "execution," heard of the affair. Lieut. Hancock, one the Australians concerned, fearing he would divulge his information, shot the missionary down. This shooting eventually led to a complaint by the German Consul to Lord Kitchener, who proceeded to court-martial the Australians.

A STIFF FIGHT.

London, April 4.—Lord Kitchener, in a despatch from Pretoria, announced that the 2nd Dragoon Guards fought a sharp rear-guard action near Boschman's Kop. Four officers are known to have been wounded. The column commander, Col. Lawley, detached the Dragoons with the object of surprising a Boer laager reported to have been located ten miles east of Boschman's Kop. The Dragoons found the Boers strongly posted, and the burghers were subsequently largely reinforced, with the result that the Dragoons had to fight a hard rear-guard action in order to regain the main column. The heavy firing called up Col. Lawley, and his troops, who drove off the Boers. The latter's loss is reported to have been heavy.

Items of Interest

Kroonstad, Orange River Colony, April 1.—The Transvaal delegates are still here. It is believed that Gen. De Wet is influencing ex-President Steyn not to meet acting President Schalkburger.

MAY BE A BOER TRICK.

Pretoria, April 2.—Communications have passed between President Steyn and the Transvaal mission at Kroonstad, but nothing is yet known of the result. The majority of the military men and civilians here expect more from the continual pressure of the troops than from the present negotiations. It is pointed out that once before, when hard pressed, the Transvaalers showed a desire for peace, but this was promptly overridden by President Steyn. Nothing in the present situation, so far as known, indicates that President Steyn is less irreconcilable than previously. Indeed, the known facts seem to point to a greater determination to continue the struggle.

CAPT. CHRISTMAS REPUDIATED.

Copenhagen, April 4. — An official note was issued to-day formally announcing that the Danish Ministry has had no connection with Captain Christmas. The latter applied for an audience, but the Premier, Dr. Deuntzer, refused to see him. The Premier also refused to receive a copy of Christmas' report on the subject of the negotiations for the sale of the Danish West Indies.

KILLED BY FIRE DAMP.

London, April 3.—Six men were killed as the result of an explosion of fire damp last night, in a colliery at Wigan, Lancashire. A number of men were entombed at Dunfermline, Scotland, this morning, owing to a similar accident.

GENERAL TRAFFIC CLOSED

Durban, Natal, April 3. — General traffic is closed throughout the whole country north of the Tugela River. The region is stoutly protected by lines of blockhouses, extending from Ladysmith. Permits are required to enable people to proceed beyond Colenso. The town guards at Ladysmith, Dundee and Newcastle are under arms and have been recruited to their full strength.

RUSSIAN STUDENTS FAIL.

St. Petersburg, April 3.—The intended demonstration of students planned for April 1 did not materialize. The organizers were arrested on the previous night. The students' revolutionary movement has temporarily ended. The malcontents have failed to prevent the delivery of the university lectures, though the attendance in the lecture rooms averages only half a dozen students. The recent wholesale arrests and the imposition of sentences have greatly lessened the prospect of agitations in the immediate future. The agitators, at the present moment have no formidable program beyond the May day workingmen's celebrations; but strikes and lock-outs, it is anticipated, will occur in the spring and summer. The sending of 86 of the Moscow rioters to Siberia with many persons from other cities has caused serious apprehensions. Clashings between rioters and the police still occur, and one hears of ominous whispers of "next comes the revolver." Prophets have been predicting a revival of the reign of terrorism as a result of the Government's determination to prevent all political propaganda and all proclamations. The discontent, however, is manifested in a peaceful manner.

ATLANTIC CITY ON FIRE.

Atlantic City, N. J., April 4.— Fire broke out this morning among the mass of hotels on the board walk, and speedily enveloped many buildings in flames.

The fire is reported to have started in Brady's bath-houses, near Illinois avenue. In a few minutes it communicated to Smith's photograph gallery and two small shops adjoining, and within twenty minutes all of these flimsy structures had been destroyed and the Tarlton Hotel was in flames. The wind drove the blaze toward the Windsor and the Luray Hotels, and these, too, were soon on fire. The Stratford Hotel, at Kentucky avenue, and the board walk, one block north of the Tarlton, also caught fire. These three buildings, it is feared, will be a total loss. The Hotel Berkeley, adjoining the Stratford, caught in a few minutes.

The board walk is crowded with thousands of spectators. The hotels on Kentucky and Illinois avenues, adjoining those that are on fire, have been emptied of their guests, and furniture, in the expection that they too, will be burned.

At noon the fire was still raging, having spread to the block north of that in which it originated. Young's pier is ablaze, and will be a total loss. The Tarlton is completely destroyed.

The chief of the Atlantic City Fire Department has notified the Electrical Bureau at Philadelphia that the fire was beyond his control, and aid has been sent.

STRIKERS EXCITING SESSION

Butte, Mont., April 4.— Striking hoisting engineers of the Amalgamated Copper Mining Company's properties and the Engineers Union held an exciting session last night. The action of the hoisting engineers in walking out and violating the agreement made with the company a year ago maintaining the present wage scale for two years, was denounced by the union. The strikers, upon the decision of the union being given, bolted the meeting, and after an hour's secret session prepared a statement for the public, giving their side of the controversy. The hoisting engineers, they allege, were not a party to the so-called agreement, and that further with the exception of the Amalgamated Company, the mining companies are paying a higher scale of wages.

TRAIN JUMPS THE TRACK

Utica, N.Y., April 4.—The regular train north on the Mohawk and Malone Division of the Central Hudson Railroad jumped the track at Moose Lake early this morning, and five coaches loaded with emigrants were ditched. Physicians were summoned from Fulton Chain, but it is said that there are no fatalities. The train is badly wrecked, and a number of people are badly bruised up.

PROTRACTED STRIKE LIKELY

Boston, Mass., April 4.—What promises to be a protracted labor contest began here this morning when 1,500 brewery workmen and 73 firemen employed in Boston breweries refused to go to work. A further strike of 500 bottler, coopers and stationary engineers employed in the breweries is threatened within the next 24 hours.

THE STANDARD TIMES CARGO.

Montreal April 4.— The cargo of the stranded Elder-Dempster Liner, Lake Superior, is being removed in lighters, and brought to St. John, N. B. Mr. J. D. W. Campbell, general manager of the line, is superintending the work. As there is not sufficient lightering apparatus at St. John, arrangements will have to be made with some New York or Boston firm, for floating the ship.

BODY FOUND ON THE RAILS.

Ottawa, April 4.— Yesterday morning, about a mile west of Franktown, 36 miles from Ottawa, Engineer Langelier of the Canadian Pacific Railway train that runs into the city from Toronto at 7.15 a.m. noticed the body of a man lying across the track and stopped.

It was found that the body was that of a young man who had made himself particularly obnoxious at Carleton Place station the evening before.

Death was apparently caused by a blow at the base of the skull, and, notwithstanding the fact that the body was discovered thinly covered with snow, it was not rigid.

New York, April 4.—Because he will be legally dead as soon as he is sentenced, it is reported that Albert T. Patrick, convicted of the murder of William M. Rice, the Texas millionaire, has made a will, transferring all his rights to his wife.

By the terms of the will Mrs. Patrick will administer her husband's affairs during his incapacity, pending the decision of the Court of Appeals. If Patrick goes to the death chair his wife will try to sustain the Rice will of 1900.

London, April 4.—A despatch from Pekin to The Times, written by Dr. Morrison, says that while the concessions held by the Pekin syndicate and the British-Chinese Corporation are greater in value than those obtained by all the other powers combined, not a hand's-turn of real work has been attempted since the concessions have been held. Not a foot has been sunk in any mine, not a sod turned on any railway. Dr. Morrison says that while the Pekin syndicate cannot operate without railway communication, there is no excuse for the inactivity of the other corporation. The latter company now demands a new contract, providing for exemption from taxation, admission of machinery and stock duty free, and other privileges regarded by China as excessive and un-British.

THE BOERS HAIL STEYN AS THEIR LEADER.

De Larey and Other Boers Praise His Conduct and Hope to See Him Head of U. S. Africa

Special Telegram to The Times.

London, April 4.—The Times' correspondent, writing from Vaalbank, says that among some Boer papers captured March 25 were copies of two addresses of welcome to Steyn and De Wet, signed by De la Rey, Commandant Liebenberg, and others. In one of them Steyn is apostrophized as "leader and counsellor," and the address continues: "We thank God for your manful and steadfast attitude. We pray also that it may be granted to you to come forward as head and leader of united South Africa."

A proclamation issued by Schalkburger in Lydenburg district ordered that March 20 be observed by the burghers as a day of intercession for the restoration of peace and the independence of the Republics.

Durban, Natal, April 4.—General traffic is closed throughout the whole country north of the Tugela River. The region is stoutly protected by lines of blockhouses, extending from Ladysmith. Permits are requested to enable people to proceed beyond Colenso. The town guards at Ladysmith, Dundee, and Newcastle are under arms, and have been recruited to their full strength.

New Cure for Malaria.

Special Telegram to The Times.

London, April 4.—An important discovery in medical science is announced by M. Armand Gautier in the current number of the Comptes Rendue. He has found that sodium methylarsenate, injected into the blood in minute amounts, is an absolute cure for malarial fever. Particulars are given of the treatment of nine cases, all of which had been contracted in Africa, which were of such a severe type as to be refractory to large doses of quinine. The nine cases were rapidly cured, two only showing a slight relapse, and these yielded at once to a second injection. The progress of the cure was followed in each case by the examination of the blood, and the treatment was always followed by the disappearance of the specific hematozoa. The salt was also found to suppress entirely the anaemia associated with malaria. M. Gauthier regards the results as sufficiently definite to authorize the substitution of this drug for quinine in pernicious malaria, although it still remains for further researches to determine the best dose, and whether administration by the mouth or hypodermically is to be preferred.

PRES. STEYN WILL NOT GIVE UP THE FIGHT.

As Irreconcilable as Ever, He is Backed Up by Gen. De Wet, Who Objects to Meeting Schalburger

Special Telegram to The Times.

Kroonstad, Orange River Colony, April 4.—The Transvaal delegates are still here. It is believed that General De Wet is influencing President Steyn not to meet Acting President Schalkburger

Pretoria, Wednesday, April 2.—Communications have passed between President Kruger and the Transvaal at Kroonstad, but nothing is yet known of the result. The majority of the military men and civilians here expect more from the continual pressure of the troops than from the present negotiations. It is pointed out that once before, when hard pressed, the Transvaalers showed a desire for peace, but this was promptly overridden by President Steyn.

CONQUEST OF SOUDAN BY GREAT BRITAIN

She has Acquired An Enormous Amount of Territory in That Country

BRITAIN'S SUPREMACY ASSURED IN EGYPT.

The Country to be Immediately Opened Up by Means of Railways—A Good Financial Success

Special Telegram to The Times.

London, April 4.—In connection with the report of Egyptian finances for the fiscal year just closed, more than usual interest attends the story of an expedition into the interior by the Sirdar, and the report of Bishop Tugwell, who has just reached London after a two years' sojourn in the central Soudan. A balancing of the accounts shows that a surplus of £764,000 (Egyptian) is at the disposal of the Egyptian government. But this does not represent the entire difference between revenue and expenditure for nearly £2,000,000 of the difference has been applied to the several funds which the Government is obliged to keep up in accordance with the agreement with the powers. As a matter of fact the revenue amounts to £12,160,000, as against £11,663,000 for last year, while the actual expenses amount to £9,924,000, or an increase of £24,000 over those of the previous year. The total current balance is therefore found to be £2,236,000.

The party under the new Sirdar, Sir Reginald Wingate, who, it will be recalled, succeeded Lord Kitchener as commander-in-chief of the Egyptian army, has arrived at Gebel Ain from the Upper White Nile after visiting Gondokoro, the northern post of the Uganda Protectorate. The party also visited Lado and Kiro, where they were entertained by the Congo State officials, and inspected the newly-established Egyptian posts at Shambeh, Kennimo and Mongalla, the last named place being only fifteen miles north of Gondokoro. The facility with which the party was enabled to travel from Uganda on the east, to the Congo State, on the west, shows what immense advances have been made in the means of transportation within the last few months.

Bishop Tugwell's mission led him further to the south, and to the west where he penetrated as far as Kano, the great Hausa emporium, which had not been visited by an Englishman since 1894. He says that there everything is ready for the coming of British domination, and that Mohammedans and heathen alike will rejoice at effective English administration. He adds that "before the end of the year British supremacy will be established right up to Lake Chad. Recent events have no doubt had a welcome effect upon the King of Kano, and if he proves to be recalcitrant I do not believe his people will side with him in hostility against us.

Too much importance cannot be attached to the statement recently made by General Lugard regarding the immediate opening of the country by means of railways.

GERMANY AND HOLLAND SEE TROUBLE AHEAD

The Growing Feeling Against the Encroachment of Germany

WILL GREAT BRITAIN INTERFERE?

The German Emperor Anxious to Absorb Holland—Will Soon be a Live Question and a Threatening One

Special Telegram to The Times.

London, April 4.—That Germany is laying her plans for the early absorption of Holland, there can be no longer any doubt. Germany owns the upper Rhine, while Holland controls the outlet. This situation prevents Germany from becoming a great sea power, so long as Holland refuses to deepen and improve the lower course of the historic waterway. By absorbing Holland, Germany would at once spring to the front as a sea power, whose geographical relation to the British channel might rest on English nerves. Germany would also thereby acquire Holland's East India possessions, with 50,000,000 of subjects, included in Java, Celebes, a large part of Sumatra, Borneo and New Guinea, as well as some minor islands. France would not lift a finger to shield Holland from incorporation in the German Empire, if compensated in Belgium. Whether England would fight Germany out of good will to the Dutch depends on a multitude of considerations connected with England's fiscal military, naval and international position at the time.

The United States would be interested in the matter, because Holland has colonial possessions in the New World as well as in the Old. There is no doubt that Germany would like to acquire Dutch Guiana, which would give her a foothold on the mainland of South America, and she would also be pleased to secure the Dutch island of Curacoa, which would give her a strategic coign of vantage with reference to Venezuela. The Monroe Doctrine, as construed by the Washington State Department, however, would not sanction the transfer of Dutch Guiana, or of the island of Curacoa, from a weak European power to a strong one.

If You Are Using Brain and Muscle in the Persuit of Your Life Work, Use

Malt Breakfast Food

Men and women who make Malt Breakfast Food their first dish at the morning meal, avoid the many discomforts that come to those that use oatmeal and other starchy grain foods.

Malt Breakfast Food users go forth to the work and duties of the day with a full store of bodily and mental energy so necessary for battling with the worries of business and home responsibilities. The reasons are plain and simple. Malt Breakfast Food is easily digested and quickly assimilated, it is an energy producer as well as a flesh, bone, and muscle builder. Oatmeal and other starchy grain foods tax the powers of digestion, exhaust existing energy, give rise to stomach troubles and skin eruptions.

If you are a daily worker depending upon body and brain power, make Malt Breakfast Food your regular morning dish; health, strength and happiness will be your reward. All grocers.

HUNDREDS ARE SLAIN IN CHINESE RIOTS

Regular Soldiers of the Empire Kill Poorly Armed Villagers

TROUBLE IN COLLECTING TAXES

People too Poor to Pay the Enormous Sum Levied to Cover Indemnities—Reinforcement Sent to Quell Revolt.

Special Telegram to The Times.

Pekin, April 4.—Reports from Ta-Ming-Fu, the southernmost prefecture of the province of Chi-Li, show that the soldiers slaughtered 1,000 villagers. It is believed here that these reports are exaggerated, but it is not doubted that there was a great loss of life.

The riots were due to attempts of local officials to collect indemnities for the Catholics, as arranged between the officials and the priests.

Soldiers have been despatched to quell the disturbance, and a taotai has been sent to adjust the differences.

The officials warn the missionaries to keep out of the disturbed district.

Such resistance to the payment of missionary claims is to be expected in localities where the population is poor and large sums are levied.

Later reports from Ta-Ming-Fu say the greatest loss of life occurred during the fight between Yuan Shi Kai's soldiers and the populace. The inhabitants of several villages who were enlisting in the so-called united villagers society, resisted the soldiers, but, as most of the villagers were only armed with spears and swords, they suffered great slaughter.

The Russians are not pressing the proposition to give the Russo-Chinese bank exclusive mining and other rights in Manchuria, as the powers are not likely to oppose the signing of the Manchurian treaty, as now practically agreed upon between Paul Lessar, the Russian Minister here, and Prince Ching, president of the Chinese foreign office. The signatures will probably be attached in a few days.

M. Lessar has been suggesting to Prince Ching that Thibet should be granted independence. The Chinese believe that this portends a Russian attempt to acquire Thibet as compensation for compromising Russia's Manchurian ambitions.

Certain German instructors who were formerly employed in the Chinese army, have requested their reinstatement, but the officials replied that China had agreed not to employ foreign instructors on account of the jealousies of the powers. Nevertheless, more Japanese officers recently joined Yuan Shi Kai's army. They are wearing Chinese clothing, and their efforts have already resulted in great improvements in the equipment of the forces.

EDITORIAL NOTES

The United States of America has been carrying on a war for some years, and Great Britain has been carrying on a war for a less number of years. It is not uncommon thing for Britain to be making war, but it is out of the usual for the United States to be making war. One would naturally suppose, then, that the people of the United States would be very much taken up with their war, and would give it a great deal of attention. But the fact is that the war receives very little attention in the United States, while the Boer war is the principal newspaper topic in that country. Why is it?

Britain is undertaking an unusual kind of task in South Africa. She asserts her authority by thrashing the combatants, meanwhile protecting and feeding the non-combatants, women and children, and now she is about to send school teachers to educate them. Yet some anglophobe papers across the line seek to fasten on her charges of injustice and gross cruelty.

Catarrh is a Germ Disease

Science, armed with the microscope, has established it a fact, and this conclusion renders obsolete the practice of treating asthma, catarrh and bronchitis by stomach drugging, sprays, snuffs, etc. Such treatments are an utter failure because they cannot penetrate the delicate air cells of the lungs, or permeate the air passages of the nose and bronchial tubes where the germs of catarrh have their stronghold. Catarrhozone is the only certain remedy. It is inhaled by the mouth and after spreading through all the respiratory organs is exhaled through the nostrils. Catarrhozone kills the germs, heals the inflamed tissues, clears the head and throat in two minutes, and cures in a few hours. Nothing is so effective, pleasant and simple as Catarrhozone. Two months' treatment, $1.00. Small size 25c. Druggists or N. C. Polson & Co., Kingston, Ont.

The Farmyard in Spring.

How it usually looks after the long winter of the north country! Bits of board, scraps of bone, perhaps brought there by the dog, or, what is worse, thrown out there after dinner; wisps of straw, scraps of paper, and all manner of debris scattered there during the cold days of winter, come to light, now that the snow has vanished.

What about it? It ought to be cleared up. You know it. Then why not do it? We live in this world only once. Life is precious to most of us. Pity the man of whom this is not true. More than we know or realise our health and length of life depend upon our farm surroundings. The air we breathe, the water we drink, the light which comes in through our windows, all have much to do with the length of our days and the joy of living. All the waste material left by the winter days will surely decay if left where it is, and decay means malaria, which is simply the latter day big word for bad air. The washing from this decaying matter floats along the surface of the ground until it finds its way into the well, bringing back to us impurities which pass into the food we eat and the water we drink. The house drains get stopped and need opening.

But, putting aside all considerations of health, look at the matter from an aesthetic standpoint. How much better it looks to pass a farmhouse the grounds of which are well kept! You have noticed this. You cannot help it. About houses owned by those who "have no time for such things" you have seen indisputable proofs of the fact that the man who lives there thinks that all there is of farming is the money he can get out of the place. Nine times out of ten, if you really knew the family sheltered by that house, you would find them ill-natured, hard worked, and generally unhappy. Life has little meaning to its members. Everything about the farm corresponds to the appearance of the grounds around the house. No doubt the boys and girls are just aching to get away from the home to the city. The rundown and slipshod way of keeping the house yard may be taken as a sure index of all the other methods of the farmer.

Back to It.

In a school for colored children there was a little boy who would persist in saying "have went." The teacher kept him in one night and said: "Now, while I am out of the room you may write 'have gone' fifty times." When the teacher came back he looked at the boy's paper, and there was "have gone" fifty times [illegible]. On the other side was [illegible]

Dooley on Athletics For Women.

Mr. Hennessy having ventured to say that athletic exercise is a splendid thing for women, "Is it, faith?" said Mr. Dooley. "Well, it may be, but it's no good f'r th' women f'r th' men. I don't know annything that cud be more demoralizin' thin to be marrid to a woman that cud give me a sthroke a shtick at goluf. 'Tis goin' to be th' roon iv fam'ly life. 'Twill break up th' happy home. I'm a man, we'll say, that's down town fr'm th' arly mornin' bendin' over a ledger an' thryin' to thrap a dollar or two to keep th' landlord fr'm th' dure. I dispise athletes. I see that all th' men that have a metallic rattle whin they get on a moovin' sthreet car are pounds overweight, an' wud blow up if they jogged around th' corner.

"Well, I come home at night, an' no matther how I've been 'Here-you-d' all day, I feel in me heart that I'm th' big thing there. What makes me feel that way, says ye? 'Tis th' sinse iv physical supeeryority. Me wife is smarter thin I am. She's had nawthin' to do all day but th' housewarrk an' puttin' in th' coal an' studyin' how she can make me do something I don't want to do that I wud want to do if she didn't want me to do it. She's thrained to th' minyit in havin' her own way. Her mind's clearer, mine bein' full iv bills iv ladin'; she can talk betther an' more frequent; she can throw me fam'ly in me face, an' whin har-rd put to it, her starry eyes can gleam with tears that I think ar-re grief, but she knows diff'rent. An' I give in. But I've won, just th' same.

"But now, how is it? I go home at night an' I'm met at th' dure be a female joynt. Me wife's th' champeen lady golufess iv th' Ivy Leaf Goluf Club; th' finest oarslady on th' canal; a tinnis player that none can rayzist without injury. She can ride a horse, an' I cudden't stay on a merry-go-round without clothespins. She can box a good welterweight, an' she's got medals f'r th' broad jump. Th' on'y spoorts she isn't good at is cookin' an' washin'. This large lady, a little peevish because she's off her dhrive, meets me at th' dure an' begins issuin' ordhers before I have me shoes off. 'Tis jut th' same as if I was back on th' hoist. She doesn't argy, she doesn't weep. She jus' says, 'Say, you,' an' I'm off on th' bound. I look her over, an' say I to meself, 'What's th' good? I cuddent cross that guard,' an' me reign is ended. I'm back to th' ranks iv th' prolitory.

"It won't do, Hinnissy. It's a blow at good govermint. 'Twill disrupt th' home. Our fathers was r-right. They didn't risk their lives an' limbs be marryin' these female Sharkeys."

Dressing-up For the Coronation.

(Paris Correspondent of London "Truth.")

The Earl-Marshal's notification to the peers and peeresses of Great Britain is thought vastly amusing. It strikes us here as might an attempt to go back with pride to the ancestral missing link, whose skeleton it appears has been found in the farthest East. There was something grand and handsome in the distinctive costumes that Louis the Fourteenth invented. The tabouret and the pliant, or folding seat, had their manifest raison d'être in the crowded saloons and galleries at Versailles. But the notification of the Earl-Marshal strikes us as the triumph of smallness, the exaltation of pettiness. Could Swift have been thinking of a similar notification in his time when he wrote about the war between the Big-Endians and the Little-Endians? A consequence of the notification will be to make American heiresses scorn offers of marriage from noblemen less high than dukes. They will know now that dukes only have strawberry leaves on their coronets and four rows of black snips of fur on their miniver capes. Barons who can only wear two rows of the black snips will be held of small account in the heiress preserves of the United States, and so, we may expect, will be earls who have half a row less than the marquis, and a whole row less than a duke. What American lady could bear to appear as a baron's wife in a mantle with a train three feet on the ground when the viscountess immediately preceding her had one a quarter of a yard longer, the countess preceding her half a yard, the marchioness three-quarters of a yard, and the duchess a whole yard? The English easily grasp the inferiority of their "proper stations" in or out of the Peerage. But the Americans do not. Their motto is "tout ou rien." They must have a front seat, or they leave the room. Mr. Jesse Grant, though not of the ornamental sex, declined to dine at Windsor with the lords' gentlemen-in-waiting. "If I do not dine with father (the ex-President of the United States) and mother at the Queen's table I go home." A court official with fear and trembling conveyed this intimation to her late Majesty, who reluctantly yielded, for Big-Endian and Little-Endian questions came within the compass of her brain, and she attached great importance to them. Mr. Jesse Grant did not know that the smallest of the court officials with whom he scorned to dine took precedence of the grand old Gladstone, and that without shocking any Englishman. The aristocratic nobody who waited on the Queen was supposed to absorb some of her sacred virtue. So far as precedence went, the Prime Minister, who was the representative of the nation, was of inferior standing. But I dare say this did not matter to the Grand Old Man.

I had some years ago one of her Majesty's judges (Sir Henry Keating) dining with me. Another guest was an English Honorable, who might have been, in regard to age, his son. It seemed to me absurd that the place of honor should not be given to the judge. To make things pleasant to him, I consulted him before the dinner came off on the subject of precedence. "If," he said, "it is a Franco-English dinner, adopt French rules, since you are in France; if it is an English one, adopt English, in which case I go behind the Honorable. Any earl's son old enough to wear a swallow-tailed coat and a white cravat is entitled to take the pas of me. I know that an American judge, accustomed to be looked up to, would not like to walk behind a young sprig of nobility. I remember Evarts, the great American lawyer who pleaded on the side of the United States at the Geneva Arbitral Court, being visibly annoyed at an earl's son who had just left Eton being placed above him at table."

Tommy—Pop, a husband and a wife are one, aren't they?

Tommy's Pop—So we are told, my son.

Tommy—Then it doesn't always take two to make a quarrel, does it?—Philadelphia Record.

Mrs. Martere—I must say, Jane, that I am not altogether pleased with your cooking.

The Cook—It isn't to be expected you should be at first, ma'am; but you'll get educated up to it in time.—Boston Transcript.

A Queer Conventionality.

The royal English family is exceedingly domestic and affectionate; but there had developed among its members and the people connected with the court a strange surface dread of meeting the Queen, which was perfectly incomprehensible to outsiders. It was quite real on the part of her children, and was probably a remnant of their rather stern bringing up. The efforts they made to vanish into thin air when the Queen came upon them unawares were most ludicrous. From them the entourage caught the same spirit, which led to many amusing incidents. Says a writer in the "Century Magazine:" We were coming home from Whippingham Church, designed and built by Prince Albert, and where Princess Beatrice had been married the year before, when we suddenly came upon a royal group walking leisurely ahead toward Osborne Cottage. Naturally we slackened our pace, when, to our dismay, we saw looming up in the opposite direction certain white ponies and outriders. Caught between two fires, we paused a moment, took in the situation, and decided quickly that we had just time to scramble in safely before the Queen's carriage could draw up at the door. Seeing that the advance party had already turned into the vine-covered porch, we gave wings to our heels and bolted in, too, and there suddenly came upon the whole company saying good-bye to one another, nearly knocking them over in our mad haste. Prince —— and H.R.H. the —— of ——, seeing our breathless condition, and at the same time hearing horses' hoofs approaching, quickly guessed what the frightful danger was and left their conversation unfinished, having in common with us only one idea, that of getting out of the Queen's sight at once." Poor people or perfect strangers the Queen never minded seeing at all. It was only those whom she knew about that she did not care to encounter, as it would put her in the awkward position of being discourteous and passing them by, or else force her to stop and talk with them, when she felt disinclined to do so. Hence, out of deference to the Queen's supposed feelings, arose the etiquette prescribing that one must never be seen on her path. This grew into a stereotyped rule.

Wisdom From the Orient.

Taking Chinese proverbs as they are found in the literature of that nation, they contain many gems of wisdom that cannot be claimed by any Western people.

A peculiar proverb exposing the works of Chinese idolatry runs as follows: "A maker of graven images does not worship the gods; he knows what they are made of." Speaking thus in regard to his make-believe gods, the Chinaman disposes of his real divinities in a manner equally quaint. The saying is attributed to Confucius: "Respect the gods, but keep them at a distance." Some of the proverbs of Cathay are remarkable for their insight. For instance, the following is by no means shallow: "The man of first-rate excellence is virtuous independent of instruction; he of the middling class becomes so after instruction. The lowest order of man is vicious in spite of instruction." Here, too, is a truth which carries far in a work-a-day world: "A single conversation across the table with a wise man is better than ten years' mere study of books." Again, the following is an example of much that might almost have been made to Socrates' order: "When the work of merit is done and reputation is coming, to get out of the way is the high road to Heaven." And, setting aside the wisdom of the wise, we find the last commentary of the pessimistic Chinaman on things in general in the following concise form: "For every soul that Heaven creates Earth provides a grave."

"L'Ouvrage."

The god of heart's desire, ignored, doth wait,
Whilst sated Wealth within the palace gate
Lures dreamless sleep in vain, and 'wails his fate.

Whilst he (to whom this god's an unloved guest),
His brawn would barter, and his hungry nest,
For Wealth's soft, silken pillows of unrest.

"Splendid and terrible, the wage I deal;
To some, a curse, for others, balm to heal;
To-day, I hide; to-morrow, I reveal."

—Richard Scrace.

A Novel Enterprise.

"Harper's Bazar" states that a young woman in a Western city is adding very appreciably to an otherwise moderate income by making sandwiches. As usual with these nondescript businesses, the occupation came by chance. It fell to her lot once or twice to furnish sandwiches as her contribution to one or two fairs and festivals, and their excellence aroused comment. Then friends coaxed her into sandwich service now and then, till at last she took advantage of her evident specialty and became a professional at it. Many of her combinations are original, one of the moment being chopped pineapple mixed with a delicate cream cheese, the variety that is made from whipped cream. She does all the work herself, even to the designing of attractive little cards decorated with a seasonable flower upon which she prints in dainty script her assortment with prices. The success of her work undoubtedly lies in the limitation which she puts upon it—she will take no more orders than she can fill herself, and each sandwich which leaves her hand is as perfect as if it were the only one. She finds a demand for her products throughout the year, picnic sandwiches being one of her most frequent orders.

Mrs. Pretty—Isn't it strange? Mrs. Beauti has not put on mourning for her husband. Mr. Pretty—I understand that her late husband particularly requested that she should not. Mrs. Pretty—The brute! I s'pose he knew how lovely she would look in it.—"Pick-Me-Up."

Mrs. Query—Isn't she a member of your club?

Mrs. Gadabout—Not any more. We had to get rid of her or she would have disorganized us.

Mrs. Query—You don't say?

Mrs. Gadabout—Yes; at one of our sessions we were discussing the servant girl question, and she said the best way to solve the problem was for all of us to stay at home and do our own work.—Philadelphia Press.

Life at Stake

Somewhere in the world life is at stake every minute of the day. Right at our own doors, perhaps, is going on a struggle as grim and fierce as any fight or flight on record. You hear the hollow tearing cough; see the ooze of blood which tells of the wounded lungs; mark the emaciated body and hectic cheek, and know a life is at stake.

The use of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery has saved many a life in just such a crisis. It cures obstinate, deep-seated coughs, stops the hemorrhage, strengthens "weak" lungs, and restores the emaciated body to its normal weight and strength.

There is no alcohol in the "Discovery," and it is absolutely free from opium, cocaine, and all other narcotics.

"I desire to send you this brief, unsolicited testimonial," writes Rev. Joseph H. Fesperman, Barium Springs, Iredell Co., N. C. "In 1898 one of my daughters was suffering on account of a severe cough, hectic fever, wasting of flesh and other symptoms of diseased lungs. I promptly gave her Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery with gratifying success, and she now enjoys excellent health. This experience caused me to recommend Dr. Pierce's medicines to my neighbors, who, without exception, used them with favorable results."

Dr. Pierce's Medical Adviser, in paper covers, is sent free on receipt of 31 one-cent stamps to pay expense of customs and mailing only, or if cloth bound volume is desired send 50 stamps. Address Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y.

TOBACCO, LIQUOR AND DRUGS

Dr. McTaggart's tobacco remedy removes all desire for the weed in a few weeks. A vegetable medicine, and only requires touching the tongue with it occasionally. Price $2.

Simply marvelous are the results from taking his remedy for the liquor, morphine and other drug habits. Is a safe and inexpensive home treatment; no hypodermic injections; no publicity; no loss of time from business, and a certainty of cure.

Address or consult Dr. McTaggart, 75 Yonge street, Toronto.

Having resumed practice, I am again ready for business at the old prices—

Far Reaching Influence.

"Old-fashioned Indian stories, the dime novels of years back which were within the reach of all the boys, were an important factor in building up the great West," said a typical Westerner. "These novels used to circulate in a neighborhood till they had been read by every boy and had fallen to pieces through handling. They fired the ambition of the youngsters, set them to practising shooting and riding, and sent many of them to the West in search of adventures. Some soon returned to their homes, others became bad men and were killed in time, but the great mass of them, too proud to return home, created the vigorous, wideawake population of our Western States. I have talked to hundreds of our Western pioneers about the causes which brought them west, and a majority of them admit that dime novels had more to do with it than anything else."

A Heretic.

"The man is a driveling idiot," said the trust magnate.

"A plumb fool," agreed the coal baron.

"An unmitigated lunatic," assented the steel king.

"Crazy as a March hare," asseverated the great financier.

"A hopeless imbecile," asserted the power in Wall street.

"Absolutely and utterly devoid of sense," chimed in the senator.

"As brainless as a barrel," added the corporation lawyer.

"But what has he done?" asked the ordinary citizen.

The crowd was convulsed with laughter.

"Why, he says," they replied, choking and gurgling, "he actually says that money isn't everything!"—Smart Set.

A father, in consoling his daughter who had lost her husband, said: "I don't wonder you grieve for him, my child; you'll never find his equal." "I don't know as I can," responded the sobbing widow; "but I'll do my best!"

"If a ship," began the comedian with the rose tinted beard, "is 100 feet long and 40 feet wide, and its masts are 100 feet high, and the bo'sun is bowlegged, what does the captain weigh?"

"It weighs the anchor!" hoarsely shouted the audience, as it grabbed the benches to prevent itself rising en masse and doing violence to the Thespians.—

What's the Trouble?—Is it Sick Headache? Is it Biliousness? Is it Sluggish Liver? Is your skin sallow? Do you feel more dead than alive? Your system needs toning—Your Liver isn't doing its work—Don't resort to strong drugs—Dr. Agnew's Little Pills, 10 cents for 40 doses, will work wonders for you.—63

Jack Frost, Artist.

One of the small wonders of the winter season is the abundant and beautiful tracery which Jack Frost has a habit of writing on the pane, usually overnight, in the hours of sleeping, when the fires burn low and the house has lost something of the cheery warmth of day. Everyone has seen and admired the mysterious fungus-like growth which is often the thing which greets him in his first look at the world of a biting winter morning perhaps without knowing that its formation, in all its multiform and delicate variations, is one of the most incomprehensible of phenomena. In Cosmos recently a writer gave some of the theories that have been advanced from time to time to explain it. The Literary Digest translates from the article as follows:—

"The least arrangements of these tiny interlacing ice-crystals furnish decorative designs of incontestable originality and of unequalled delicacy. The observer asks, not without surprise, how in these marvellous formations of ice one and the same design is often rigorously and mathematically reproduced in a certain space, while its character differs totally only a few inches away. There is in this fact alone a real mystery that no one can explain plausibly, at least at present.

"In one place appear very distinctly almost recognizable plants with long, thick leaves. Palms and ferns abound, forming mimic forests. By their side stretch out fine fringes bordering the angles of fantastic sheets. Further away seem to rise the serried trunks of a lofty grove in the midst of a carpet of verdure.

"Then the scene changes completely. On all sides appear the light feathers and plumes of birds. . . .

"What are the physical phenomena that control the formation of these tree-like frost pictures, so remarkable and so varied? Most of our scientists answer these questions by hypotheses, more or less valuable. Almost all give abundant explanations of the deposition of frost along the branches of trees. As to the causes that determine the appearance of such delicate and beautiful ornaments of this same frost on the panes of our windows, most of them remain silent.

"They tell us that the most probable method of frost-formation is as follows: Every tiny droplet of water, if it is produced by condensation of vapor below the freezing-point, is necessarily in a state of 'superfusion.' In this condition when it meets a rough surface it is deposited thereon as a microscopic crystal of ice impregnated or covered with a thin layer of liquid water at the freezing-point.

"This latter, being in continual contact with air that is colder than itself, must finally freeze. As the motion of the air brings up new masses, the thickness of the frost increases.

"Other physicists, we are told, give a somewhat different explanation. According to them, when the vapor of water in the air is deposited as ice, without passing through the liquid state at all, it constitutes frost. That the vapor does not really pass through the liquid state is abundantly shown by the fact that frost has not the structure of frozen dew. It presents, on the contrary, a layer of spongy, opaque ice in which we can detect the prismatic crystals lying side by side. There are still other scientific men who explain the feathery frost formations on the branches of trees by the congelation of a thick mist that comes in contact with a body of lower temperature than the freezing-point or by the solidification of a fog in superfusion, determined by contact with a solid body. The French writer says further:

"We will leave the reader to take his choice of these opinions. So far as the deposit of frost on our window-panes is concerned, we must suppose that the infinite variety of design presented by the crystals is due to the nature of the glass. This substance is, in fact, a very bad and very irregular conductor of heat; it also offers a certain resistance to the physical action of crystallization. These causes are sufficient, when vapor is congealed on the surface, to bring about the formation of these designs, which are as varied as they are remarkable."

Not so Sick as Supposed.

Judging from an opinion expressed recently in The London Spectator, Turkey's sobriquet of the "Sick Man" is being maintained under false pretences. "A strong Sultan," says the writer, "could still place in the field an army of 600,000 of the bravest soldiers in the world, defend his coasts and ports with torpedo boats, and even in defeat inflict terrible blows upon his conqueror. It is true that the advent of a strong Sultan is most improbable, the race of Othman appearing at last to be worn out, but a Sultan weak as a Merovingian is quite probable, and a strong Mayor of the Palace or Grand Vizier would be even more dangerous, because replaceable. A ruler of Turkey who threw all caution to the winds, summoned every Osmanli to his standard, stopped all payments except for munitions of war, and fought as the Mahdi fought at Omdurman, would, to begin with, shatter all European alliances, might hold in check for three years any single European power, and might while being defeated cause an explosion such as Europe has not had to face since the Spahis threatened Vienna. The Sick Man will bequeath nothing, and the whole western world desires his heritage. The catastrophe may not come just yet, for the strange being who now occupies the throne of Turkey, and who will neither yield nor fight, seems irremovable; but it cannot be put off forever, and every blow such as the one M. Delcasse has just delivered brings us nearer to its occurrence. If history affords us any guidance, the Turk will die biting hard."

"I once won a case with one of James Whitcomb Riley's poems," says Congressman Brick of Indiana, who is a lawyer, "and so I stand for him. I was defending a man charged with stealing silk, and it looked so bad for him that I decided on an appeal to the jury. I did the best I could to win with the evidence; but I banked most on the fact that the defendant was a young man with a wife and child, and that it would go hard for all of them to have him go to the penitentiary for a term of years. My whole argument led up to the point where I closed with Riley's little poem, 'Back From a Two Years' Sentence.' When I finished, the jury was in tears, and even the Judge and the Attorney for the prosecution were affected. The jury took just one ballot, and returned a verdict of not guilty."—New York Tribune.

The Revolution in English Character.

IT is the opinion of Mr. Bernard Shaw, as expressed in a characteristic preface to a late volume of his plays, that the nature of the English people has, within the past ten years, undergone certain conspicuous modifications. Excitability—"theatricality" is his own word for it—Mr. Shaw believes to have been steadily mounting in force among the English, usually so solid and stolid; and this he ascribes to the pronounced romanticism of taste developed among them by the literature, the books and plays, of the past five years; a taste which has caused them to lose their true sense of the realities, with all the steadying effects thereof.

It will not be disputed that the special style of literature in vogue during a period leaves its impress upon it, nor will it be gainsaid that the demands and tastes of the period in turn determine the essential nature of its literary supply. We are hearing it said on all sides now that popular education accounts for the love of the novel of adventure. Popular education creates an enlarged reading public, but one which does not wish to have the realities of life laid before it; which, indeed, in many cases, reads, or goes to the play, just to escape reality. If one accept this explanation of certain present phenomena it is only going a step farther to find in all democratically organized, popularly educated societies an inherent inclination toward romanticism. As no countries have carried the modern experiment so far as the English-speaking countries, we ought not to be surprised to see a strong bent toward the romantic attitude showing itself, in many directions, in an English or American public; the romantic attitude here meaning any attitude betraying absence of a full perception of the realities, or disinclination to look at them.

Out of all this we seem to draw three propositions: that democracy appears to presuppose a certain sort of popular education, that without that education there would be no democracy, and yet that that education is calculated to destroy the sense of the realities. Now how is this? The very plea made for the education which, more and more, is prevailing against the classical education, is just this—that it cultivates the true perception of real things. It is a "practical" education for that precise reason, say its advocates. Why, then, asks the writer of "The Point of View" in "Scribner's Magazine," should this same generation manifest so much liking for the romantic fiction, the romantic plays, which are a means of getting away from the real conditions of existence? He proceeds to answer this question as follows: "It may very probably be that this liking is a taste of the moment, without ulterior connections or deeper significances. And, indeed, it seems to have been too much overlooked by some writers who have no love for the novel of adventure, that it is by no means the first time in the world that romance has been in high favor. It is none the less true that this subject does suggest another of far greater moment, which is the question what the "popular" education ought to be, and whether the democratic state of modern man really needs exactly that form of it which is now so insisted upon as essential to its maintenance and well-being. To perceive the realities in the high sense, and in that sense be willing to abide by them, is never, at any time, the portion of more than the few. But general education goes forward, very properly, on the assumption that all may be made in some degree to know the life to which they belong, to realize it. Realization comes, however, only in part through the development of practical efficiency. It comes also through the unfolding of the spiritual nature, the growth of moral vision, the dreams of the imagination—to none of which is the 'classical' education a stranger."

Pleasing Kind of Mal de Mer.

News comes from Honolulu that the transport "Thomas," which reached there on August 1, having on board three hundred male and one hundred female teachers, en route for the Philippines to engage in educational service under the Taft Commission, developed a veritable matrimonial epidemic. The young men and women on board represented almost every State of the Union. After the transport left San Francisco friendships were formed which soon ripened into love, and the day prior to the arrival at Honolulu Captain Buford found that thirty couples desired the nuptial knot tied. He refused to permit the ceremony on board the vessel, and the next day a clergyman at Honolulu made the thirty pairs happy by uniting them in matrimony. Prior to the sailing of the transport from Honolulu several other cases were reported. The departure from New York last week of the fifty-four Cuban girls and twenty-four men, who have been students at the summer school of Harvard University, developed the fact that they, too, had been victims of Cupid's darts, although their courtships have only reached the engagement stage. Most of the Cuban men are returning engaged and several Harvard students and professors are said to have lost their hearts to the girls from the South. Five of the ladies took home with them diamond engagement rings.

A Humane Pater.

One reads so frequently of the paternal boot as applied to the undesirable youthful suitor that it is a pleasure to chronicle the more humane method adopted by a wealthy Glasgow merchant for choking off a "follower" of his daughter. The girl was very young, so was the follower, but nevertheless he called formally on the object of his affections. The merchant and his wife entered the room, the latter bearing a glass of milk and a huge slice of bread spread with butter and jam. "Now, dear, run away to bed," said the kindly mother to her daughter; "it's time that all good girls should be in bed." Then the Glasgow merchant addressed the astonished young man: "Now, youngster, you drink that glass of milk, and take that slice of bread and jam to eat on the road home—and hurry, for your mother must be anxious about your being out so late by yourself." The young man did not call again.

quickly, then she must send him away.

She would not care to live then — but she would forget that dark future, and live only in the present.

"Are we not to be lovers, darling?" he urged again.

And this time Daisy answered: "Yes."

Bitter was the jealousy of both Olive and Hetty Gordon when they heard of it.

"I knew that would be the way!" declared Hetty, angrily. "I knew how it was going to turn out on the first evening that Aleck came here. Daisy is wonderfully attractive; why, there is that handsome young fellow, Harry Joscelyn, who sits at the opposite table, desperately in love with her. Even though he has heard of her betrothal to Aleck, he does not seem to despair of winning her. He follows her about like a shadow; Aleck is blind not to notice it."

"There is one thing that you are blind if you have not noticed," said Olive; "and that is, how unhappy Daisy looks; I cannot find out why. Only last night, as I passed through her room, I heard her moaning in her sleep, and her pillow was wet with tears. I cannot understand it."

Poor Daisy had given herself up to the few weeks of happiness she would have before she told Aleck all, and lost him forever.

Oh, it was sweet to be loved so dearly and so truly.

Ah, but for that one act of folly, what a life of peace and happiness and love might have lain before her with him whom she loved.

Oh, if she could but live her life over again, if she could but undo that dark, horrible past.

What had induced her, so young, fair and beautiful, to commit such an act of folly, such a mad act as to wed that handsome stranger, only to rue it while her life lasted.

At length the time came when Aleck was eager to have the wedding day set; for of course this betrothal could not go on forever, and he was impatient to claim her.

On the morrow she must decide her fate. She must give him up; and what after that? Was she to live always in misery, crying out for death to come to her?

A voice that seemed to stun her with its words, seemed to whisper to her heart. Why should you give him up? Marry him and be happy. As for that other one, it will be long years ere you behold his face again. You could go away so far he could never find you. As you make your choice now, you must abide by it through the long future— as long as you shall live. You must think what life would be to you without him.

That thought terrified her.

She fell upon her knees with a bitter cry.

"I cannot give him up!" she moaned. "God help me, I cannot. I am tempted beyond endurance."

She was so young, she never once realized the full enormity of the horror which surrounded the step she would take if she wedded Aleck.

When he called for his answer the next day, the terrible struggle was all over in poor Daisy's heart.

"Are you to marry me, Daisy?" he whispered.

In the most piteous voice that ever was heard, she answered, sobbingly: "Yes, Aleck, for I cannot live without you."

CHAPTER IX.

"The book fell from the minister's hands with a crash."

It was one of the most pitiful moments of Daisy's life, fraught, as it was in after years, with the cruelest trials that ever darkened a young girl's life.

Her handsome, impetuous lover sprung forward with a glad cry:

"Daisy, my love, my little darling!" he exclaimed, "you have made me the happiest of men!"

How little he dreamed it was at the price of her soul —that for love of him she had defied God and the angels, who looked on from on high and heard and saw all!

"How you shiver and recoil from me, dear!" said Aleck, reproachfully. "One would almost fancy you were forced into this betrothal. You love me, don't you, Daisy?" he asked anxiously.

"Only heaven knows how much!" she sobbed, clinging piteously to him.

He laughed a gay, happy laugh.

"Well, then, why these tears, dear?" he said, playfully caressing the curly, golden head. "You would have our pretty love-dream a tragedy instead of the romance it is. You seem to be regretting your promise almost as soon as given. I have a notion, Daisy darling, that I must claim you at once or I may lose you.

"I have business that calls me out to California the last of this month," he added, wistfully. "Do you think you could get ready to go with me so soon —as my little bride?"

"I will try, Aleck," she whispered.

Hetty and Olive took the matter of Alexander Hamilton's betrothal to little Daisy quite philosophically, for the reason that both had secured lovers of their own.

"You must have a grand wedding, Daisy," decided Olive, one day, and although Daisy piteously protested, declaring she had a great horror of weddings, and liked to see them over as soon as possible, Olive would have her way.

"I'm no great hand for big fusses," said Farmer Gordon, when he was appealed to on the subject, "and like enough it would be a bit awkward for me to give the bride away before such a crowd of city folks, but my pet must have a grand weddin'; her marriage must be an occasion of great rejoicing."

He wondered why Daisy threw her arms around his neck and begged him so piteously not to say any more.

It was decided that the wedding should take place at the pretty villa on the outskirts of Cape May, which Farmer Gordon had purchased recently, and it was therefore fitted up hastily, yet with great splendor, for the occasion.

At length the all-important day rolled around.

The pretty bridesmaids came fluttering into Daisy's room just as the maid was fastening the wreath of orange blossoms on the beautiful golden head half hidden by the shimmering bridal veil.

They had expected to see the lovely dimpled face all rosy blushes; instead, it was white as a snowdrop.

They did not know why she turned away from the window with a shudder.

THE MUNICIPALITIES AND SMALLPOX

Speaking in the Ontario Legislature shortly before the close of the recent session, the Provincial Secretary said it was estimated that the smallpox outbreak had cost the Province and the municipalities $465,000 up to the end of January. The cost by this time is perhaps over half a million dollars. It is a large sum.

It is so large a sum that it is worth while to seriously consider whether improvements cannot be made in the method of coping with this disease. When we speak of the outbreak having cost half a million dollars, nothing is included for the business losses to communities that are shunned because of the presence of the scourge, and no account is taken of the personal losses of individuals who are quarantined in the interests of public safety, but to their own financial detriment. It will thus be seen that the expense to which the outbreak of smallpox has put this Province is vastly much greater than the figures would indicate.

More than once it has been suggested in these columns that the task of suppressing smallpox should be entrusted to the Provincial Board of Health, and the cost of doing it paid out of the Provincial Treasury, and now that the present outbreak has assumed so large proportions the time seems appropriate for again advancing the idea. Although half a million dollars is a large sum to take out of the Provincial Treasury, yet it is easier for all the people to pay such a sum than for one-half or one-third of them to do so. If the Province as a whole should assume the responsibility and the expense of fighting smallpox wherever it appears, it would be in effect a pooling of interests which would insure each municipality against a loss that might be imposed upon it at any time.

One small town in the Province has been saddled with a bill of over $2,000 owing to a visitation of this disease, and the case will illustrate the injustice of the present system. The disease was brought to the town by a stranger who had no more claim on that municipality than on any other in the Province. He came there, knowing, or suspecting, what was the matter with him, expecting to be isolated, cared for, and treated. The town authorities did their duty to the man and to the country by taking charge of him at once, and the taxpayers of that town will have to pay two thousand dollars because the stranger came there instead of going to another town. Another small place was last fall saddled with a bill of three thousand dollars in a somewhat similar way.

But it is not so much a question of adjusting the burden of expense that this virulent disease imposes, as of checking it before it spreads. The point that the Provincial authorities must consider is that when a small town takes in a stranger who has the smallpox, cares for him, and is saddled with heavy costs, the same town is seldom caught in the same way a second time.

What does this mean? It simply means that when a municipality has once been unjustly burdened, it will, under the same circumstances, shirk its duty to society at large to escape a second unjust burden. It will bundle the suspect out of town. He will be told that he has measles or chickenpox, and he will be returned whence he came or sent along to his destination. A doctor in a small town does not wish to abandon his practice for a month or six weeks to attend to a stranger afflicted with smallpox. Nor does he wish to incur the displeasure of the local public by burdening the town with a heavy expense if there is any way out of it. On the merest suspicion of having the disease a man should be isolated, but under the present system the municipalities are only too anxious to have a traveling suspect pass on.

A couple of years ago a smallpox suspect was not prevented from leaving Lindsay and coming by train to Toronto, where he walked the streets enquiring his way to the residence of the Medical Health Officer, to give himself up. Not long ago a doctor on a train leaving Toronto saw a woman whom he suspected of having the disease, and he caused her to be put off at the first town reached, where a local doctor pronounced the case harmless, and she was sent to her destination, carrying smallpox with her. Some weeks ago a woman came by train from Michigan, and, being suspected of having the disease, was not allowed to alight at her destination, but the car in which she traveled was hitched to a returning train, and she was carried back to her starting point across the boundary.

The theory is that smallpox must be grappled with on sight by the authorities, and the cost must be borne by the locality where the disease declares itself, but the practice is for municipalities to evade this duty if they can. The desire is to confine the disease to its place of origin; the effect of the present system is to get the suspect traveling, and thus scatter the disease far and near.

This evading of duty is to a large extent responsible for the spreading of the disease throughout the country. There can be no doubt of this, and Dr. Bryce, the Provincial Health Officer, must have more evidence along this line than any newspaper can get possession of. It is astounding how one case can be traced to another, as though the disease is never produced but always "caught," so that a town that fails to hold a suspect and allows him to depart on a train may be responsible for outbreaks in a dozen places hundreds of miles apart. Yet towns will shirk a duty that is dangerous, unpleasant, and grievously expensive.

If smallpox were a disease among horses or cattle the Province would assume the duty and expense of suppressing it. The contagious diseases that attack animals are fought by the [illegible] as a whole, not by the municipalities; and there are equally strong reasons for meeting smallpox with an equally broad plan of campaign.

When a town seizes a stranger under suspicion of having the smallpox the municipality should be rewarded by the Province for its vigilance rather than compelled to pay the costs incurred in caring for the man and preventing the spread of the disease.—Toronto Star.

TOWN AND COUNTY NEWS

Local Happenings Picked Up Here and There by the Times.

NOTE—The Times requests its readers to contribute items of news to its columns. Anything that is phoned or sent in writing to the office, of a matter suitable for publication, will be received and published.—Ed. TIMES.]

—There was no police court yesterday.

—The organ in St. Paul's church has been repaired, and is now in first class working order.

—Mervin, the Hunter street butcher, has added a handsome delivery rig to his well equipped establishment.

—The Children's Aid Society acknowledge with thanks the receipt of $20.55 from the Y.M.C.A., being the proceeds of the recent basket-ball match.

—The town of Campbellford is contemplating introducing a system of electric heating. Power will be obtained at Crow Bay.

—The Campbellford Orangemen have decided to hold a monster celebration in that place on July 12. It is some years since Campbellford has had a demonstration, and a big time is expected.

—It is reported, that provided he is given command, Col. Sam Hughes is prepared to raise a brigade of men for South Africa. Provided Col. Sam were given a free hand he could accomplish more in a month than the present outfit in Africa could do in a year.—Bobcaygeon Independent.

—We have received a copy of the Advance, published at Adams, Oregon, by Mr. J. C. Craig, formerly of Peterborough. Mr. Craig is an old Peterborough boy, having served his time in this office. The paper, as might be expected, is neat, clean, and a good sample of the typographical art.

—Last Thursday Orillia entered into possession of its power transmission plant, which has been under construction for nearly three years. The town has been enjoying the use of light and power from the Ragged Rapid for six weeks past, under an arrangement with the contractors. As the contractors have not been making satisfactory progress toward the completion of the work, the council last week took steps to expedite matters, and, failing in this, sent out a staff of electricians, accompanied by several constables, and took possession of the plant.

To Consider Domestic Science

At the recent meeting of the Separate School Board it was decided to gather all information they could regarding the teaching of manual training and domestic science in the schools. This subject is gaining headway very strong in the province. Messrs. Kylie and Lynch were appointed a committee to look into the matter.

A Game Toronto Traveller

Commercial travellers are, as a rule, "all-round" clever fellows, and while modest and unassuming they believe in claiming all the credit that is their due. Mr. McConechie, representing McColl Bros., Toronto, and who is a guest at the Munroe House, is an expert trapshot and checker-player. He is of the opinion that Peterborough does not boast a citizen who can "down" him, at checkers, euchre, pedro, rifle, revolver, or trapshooting, and, he last evening voiced his willingness to meet any citizen in a contest, for the honors of the Championship, or for stakes agreed upon.

SOCIAL AND PERSONAL

Events Under This Head Transpiring in and around Peterborough.

NOTE—The Times requests its readers to furnish its paper with items of a personal and social nature, either by phone or in writing.—Ed. TIMES.]

—Frederick Harris, Toronto's great and rapid sign painter, is in town.

—Miss Ethel Dawson, who has been visiting in Toronto for some time, has returned home.

—Miss Ingram, of Fenelon Falls, is visiting in town, the guest of Mrs. Loudon.

—Mr. Hugh Stephenson, representing the International Typographical Union, is in town for a day or two.

—Miss Eva Bullen and Miss May Dunford are visiting in Havelock, the guests of the Misses Byrans.

—Miss Jessie Fairweather, accompanied by her brother, Mr. Robert Fairweather, left yesterday for a visit to Atlantic City, N.J.

—Mrs. Dr. Kirby, of Ottawa, returned to her home yesterday, after a months' visit in Peterborough and Toronto.

—Mr. H. S. Carpenter, late of the T.V.C. engineering staff, left yesterday for Cambridge to assume a new position.

—Mrs. W. D. Wilgar, of Toronto, is spending a few days in town with her sister, Miss Maude McFarlane, prior to the latter's departure for South Africa.

—Mr. Walter Dawson and Mr. Howard, of Albert College, Belleville, have returned to that place, after spending the holidays in town.

—Mr. E. T. Wier, who for some time has been connected with the Grant Hamilton Oil Co., of Toronto, has been appointed General Manager of the Marsh Manufacturing Co., of Toronto. This firm recently purchased the works of the Castile and Mill Soap Co., of Preston. Mr. Weir is to be congratulated on his appointment.

A True Nerve Tonic

acts not so much upon the nerves themselves, as upon the digestive functions, and the abundant formation of rich, red blood. The nerves cannot be fed on medicine. They can be fed and strengthened by digested and assimilated food. Ferrozone's marvellous action arises from its power over the digestive and assimilative functions of the body. You take it, the blood grows richer, redder. You feel strength and vigor, digestion ceases to be noticed, for it has become good. Work is easier, for you have the strength to do it. In a short time you have health. Use Ferrozone.

Warning to Local Merchants

The Canadian Printer and Publisher for March contains the following paragraph which will no doubt be of interest to local merchants,—"I am informed that the two big departmental stores in Toronto, namely, Eaton's and Simpson's, are going in for spring catalogues far beyond what their previous ones have been. For instance they are going in extensively for colored illustrations, so as to illustrate fabrics of all kinds, including carpets. This is intended to scoop in as much trade from the town merchant as possible, and if what I hear of the catalogue is true, it would not surprise me if more business than ever were brought into the city. My advice to advertising managers in town and country offices is to warn live merchants in their own towns of the coming competition, and get them to go in for more home advertising than they have previously done."

RIVER AND LAKE NOTES

The ice has disappeared from the river and Rice Lake.

The steamers Water Lily and City of Peterborough, have been thoroughly overhauled during the winter months. Both boats were inspected a few days ago by Captain Augustus, inspector of Lloyd' Inland Waters.

The trim little yacht, "Rob Roy," has been repaired and re-caulked and is now ready for the water. This trim little vessel looks prettier than ever this spring.

TO NURSE SMALLPOX PATIENT

Mr. W. H. Andrews will Perform the Duties in the Wood Family

Mr. W. H. Andrews, who nursed the smallpox patient at Jackson Park has been engaged to care for Mr. Ras. Wood, the smallpox patient in Otonabee. The patient is in the same house with his family but is not allowed to mingle with them. No new cases have been reported and it is thought the disease will be confined to the single patient. It is needless to say that the case will be well looked after, so far as Mr. Andrews is concerned, because he has had some experience already this winter.

A PHYSICIAN HURT

Helped Himself

When the doctor himself brings on heart disease by the use of coffee it is time for ordinary people to think carefully of the effect of that beverage.

The testimony of Dr. O. W. Mathewson, 1354 Penn. Ave., Des Moines, Ia., is as follows. His letter is rather long and this extract is necessarily condensed.

"I am a physician of 13 years' practice. I felt the need of a stimulant and for the first five or six years of my practice used strong coffee. Eight or ten years ago I began to notice symptoms of heart disease. This seemed to be a regular organic type and year by year became aggravated. Dizziness, faintness, and, later, inability to walk, at times.

Physicians could find no marked symptoms of disease but thought there might be of a kind that escaped observation. Finally I became a confirmed invalid and gave up practice.

Several years elapsed with the symptoms growing worse. I was considered as marked for an early grave. It finally became impressed upon me to give up coffee. This I found easier to do when Postum Food Coffee was used in its place. I did this more to satisfy my friends than with any hope of benefit from such a simple change, especially in such an incurable case as mine. I was debilitated and very weak and about 30 pounds short of my old weight.

From the first week I noticed a marked change, and within three months I was almost fully restored to my old strength and health. These facts are known to hundreds of my friends and acquaintances."

ANOTHER AMERICAN INVASION.

Peterboro's Street Railway to be Resurrected by American Capital

The chances are that our "underground railway" will, ere long, become an up-to-date surface road, in every sense of the term.

A prominent local business man states that he has reliable information to the effect that influential Buffalo capitalists are interested in the matter, and are quietly taking steps towards the formation of a strong company which will extend the existing line to Chemong and Lakefield, secure up-to-date equipment, and put the road in first class condition.

This is "a consummation devoutly to be wished," and our citizens will sincerely welcome the reappearance of the street cars.

A FAMILY RE-UNION

A Pleasant Affair which was Attended by Relatives from Peterborough

Referring to a very pleasant family re-union the Bowmanville Statesman says:—

"A very pleasant family re-union was held at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. John Hellyar, Wellington-st., on Good Friday, when about 30 relatives assembled by invitation to celebrate the approaching anniversary of their golden wedding. This date was chosen as a convenient time for all to gather, as many had to come from a distance. Among the guests who came to join in the festivities of the day were all ages—from the little year-old grandchild to the aged brothers of over four-score years—and the meeting was indeed a glad and happy one. Among those present were: Mr. William Brenton, Fenella, Mr. Frank Brenton, Havelock, brothers; Mrs. Richard Brenton, Peterborough, sister-in-law; Mrs. T. H. Brenton, Trenton, niece; Mrs. James Dawson, Fraserville, niece; Mrs. Albert Pellow, niece, and son Dick, Toronto; Rev. and Mrs. S. T. Bartlett, son-in-law and daughter, and Misses Lena, Hattie and Ethel, Napanee, Mr. W. H. Hellyar, son, Mrs. Hellyar and daughter Fanny and Miss A. Hampshire, Cobourg; Mrs. C. Trenbeth, cousin, town; Miss Carrie Vaughan, niece, Fenella; Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Greenwood, Toronto. Letters of regret were received from Miss Fanny Brenton, niece, Buffalo, N.Y., and Mr. Thos. H. Brenton, nephew, Trenton. During the evening Rev. S. T. Bartlett assisted by Rev. Wm. Jolliffe, baptized Mrs. Pellow's little son, Alfred Richard. After the guests had partaken of a bountiful supper, the evening was spent very pleasantly in social chat, games, etc. Many useful and dainty gifts were presented, and all wished that the worthy couple may be spared to enjoy many more happy years together."

A MARVELLOUS MEDICINE

"No Cure, No Pay," is the Newest Proposal of the Proprietors of Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills

Editor Morning Times

Sir,—We make the following proposal to the readers of the Times: To any one who is a subject of rheumatism (no matter how long standing), or any blood disease, as enumerated below, and will give Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills a fair trial, and do not find a perfect cure, we will refund the money paid for the pills. If no substantial improvement is observed, we will in addition, pay $10 in cash on satisfactory evidence being supplied us to this effect.

We have yet to know of a single case where these wonderful pills have not been almost entirely successful in effecting a cure. CANADA CHEMICAL CO.

Ex-Ald. Bailey, St. John's, writes: I cannot speak too highly of Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills. They worked a miracle in my case, and cured me after many years of suffering. I do not think their equal is to be obtained.

Dr. Clarke's Little Red Pills are a positive and certain cure for la grippe, rheumatism, asthma, paralysis, catarrh, eczema, coughs, backache, indigestion, all stomach and liver troubles, female complaints, even when the diseases have been standing for many years, the most stubborn cases will yield. Price 50 cents per box. For sale by Ormond & Walsh. The Canada Chemical Company will forfeit $10 for any case that these pills do not help.

Dr. Clarke's Sure Cure for Catarrh, and Dr Clarke's Sure Cure for Eczema, same price. $10 will be paid for any case they will not permanently cure.

DEATH OF MRS. JOS. SPROULE

One of Peterborough's Oldest and Most Esteemed Citizens

The death of Mrs. Joseph Sproule, who passed away yesterday morning at the residence of her son-in-law, Mr. John Haggart, Brock street, removes from our midst one of the oldest and most highly esteemed citizens of town.

The deceased lady, who was 87 years of age, was born in County Tyrone, Ireland, and came to Canada with her husband in 1880, and have since that time resided in Peterborough. Her husband who is 87 years of age, is still quite smart, and with three sons and one daughter, is left to mourn the death of a wife and mother. The members of the family are, Mrs. John Haggart, town; Mr. A. H. R. Sproule, County Tyrone, Ireland, and Mr. G. R. Sproule, Helena, Montana, U. S. Another son, Dr. Sproule, died in Ireland some years ago, and was well known in town.

The late Mrs. Sproule was a lady of unusual culture and education, and though of a retiring disposition, made many warm friends in whose esteem she stood very high. In religion she was a Presbyterian.

The funeral will take place this afternoon at three o'clock, from the residence of Mr. John Haggart, 167 Brock street, and proceed to the Little Lake Cemetery for interment.

General - Sports.

TENNIS.

The annual meeting of the Peterborough Lawn Tennis Club was held in the Y.M.C.A. hall on Monday night, and was very largely attended. The different reports presented showed that the past season had been the most successful in the history of the club.

A constitution was framed and adopted for the government of the club in the future. A hearty vote of thanks was tendered Mrs. John Burnham for the use of her beautiful grounds.

The election of officers resulted as follows:

Patroness—Mrs. John Burnham.
President—Mr. F. D. Kidd.
Vice-Pres.—Miss Hatton.
Vice-Pres.—Miss Annie Hall.
Hon. Sec-Treas.—Mr. W. Harold Claxton.

Executive Committee — Miss Dennistoun, Mrs. F. Roger, Miss Lundy, Mr. Hal Burnham, and the officers of the club.

CURLING.

A meeting of the Thistle Curling Club will be held at 8 o'clock to-night in the rink parlor, for the purpose of winding up the season's business.

CRICKET.

The annual meeting of the Colts Cricket Club will be held at the Y.M.C.A. to-night. A full attendance of members is requested.

Don't Allow Operation for Cancer

There is a simpler, safer and more effective Method of Treatment.

Dr. J. C. Oliver, of Cincinnati, Ohio, U. S.A., in a paper he read before the Ohio State Medical Society, May 1898, said; "I have operated in a considerable number of cases of Cancer recently, and with one exception all have died within fourteen months after the operation."

This statement of a prominent Surgeon, should make any one suffering from cancer, hesitate before submitting to operation and consider carefully the evidence offered on behalf of the new Constitutional remedy, which cures Cancers, Tumors and all malignant growths, without the necessity of operation. It is a simple vegetable medicine that searches out and destroys the cancer growths, completely eradicates the disease, and at the same time, builds up and invigorates the system.

Stott & Jury, Bowmanville, Ont., will be pleased to send full particulars of this treatment, in a plain, sealed wrapper.

Ninety Thousand Turkish Soldiers Being Mobolized

ARMY TO BE ON A WAR FOOTING

The Empire in a State of Anarchy and Revolution—Further Armenian Massacres Feared.

Special Telegram to The Times.

New York, April 5—The call to arms by the Turkish Government of some ninety thousand irregulars has a special significance just at this moment. The only troops enrolled in the Turkish army as irregulars are the Kurds of Armenia and the Upper Euphrates, but as they do not number at the most over thirty-five thousand, the remainder of the number stated must be taken from the local reserves in other parts of the Empire. If in Europe, it is from among the Arnauts, Ghegas and Koska of northern, central and southern Albania, and the Turkish Mussulman population of Macedonia and Thrace; the meaning of the step must then be that they will be used to keep down the Christian population while the regular army is employed in the field. How effectively the irregulars called out in 1876 in what is now called Bulgaria did their work is a matter of history, and there is no reason to believe that they would act less zealously now than then. The immunity enjoyed by the Sultan and the authorized perpetrators of the last massacres in Armenia is a direct encouragement to his irregulars to repeat like actions everywhere.

Fro the state of things all over the Turkish Empire, Europe as a whole, and Germany in particular, is responsible. The Treaty of Berlin provided for the reorganization of Turkey in a manner that could have been accomplished easily, if it had been taken up seriously, and that would have insured peace and progress to the peoples of the Empire. Prince Bismarck refused the concurrence of Germany, and Austria actively opposed. The result is that the hope excited among the Christians of Turkey instead of being satisfied have been destroyed, and the empire is threatened with a repetition of the Bulgarian and Armenian atrocities. The Russian and Austrian Governments have, however, come to an understanding with reference to such an eventuality, and the consequence of the Sultan's letting his irregulars loose on the unarm'd Christians, may be an immediate intervention that will bring matters to a head. The necessary preparations are are being made by both Governments. Meantime the Macedonian Committee Which has entered into relations with the National Committee of Greece and Armenia, is prepared to dissolve so soon as intervention takes place and leave the affairs of Macedonia in the hands of the Governments interested.

It is probable that the preparations said to be going on in Italy for the movement of a large body of troops by sea have as much to do with Albania as with Tripoli in Africa. In any case no action would be taken with regard to either unless circumstances warranted; and the calling of irregulars to army by the Sultan seems to justify the Italian Government in getting ready for contingencies.

CATHOLIC TO PREACH

Roman Catholic to Occupy Protestant Pulpit To-morrow

Special Telegram to The Times.

Columbus, O., April 5 — An unusual spectacle will be witnessed in the First Congregational Church of this city to-morrow, when a Catholic layman will address the congregation. Some time ago Dr. Washington Gladden, pastor of the First Congregational Church, extended an invitation to Thomas B. Minahan, formerly of Omaha, President of the American Federation of Catholic societies, to address his congregation on the "No Treating" subject, of which Mr. Minahan is a strong advocate. Mr. Minahan at once accepted the invitation and set tomorrow as the date for the address.

THE CANADIAN RIFLES WIN MUCH GLORY

Lieut. Bruce Carruthers and His Command Held Their Post Until All Had Fallen

Special Telegram to The Times.

London, April 5. — There was severe fighting all day long on March 31 in the neighborhood of Hart's River, in the southwestern extremity of the Transvaal, between part of General Kitchener's force and the forces of Generals Delarey and Kemp, resulting in the repulse of the Boers after heavy losses on both sides. The Canadian Rifles especially distinguished themselves, one party commanded by Lieutenant Bruce Carruthers holding its post till every man was killed or wounded.

THE OFFICIAL REPORT.

London, April 5.—Lord Kitchener's official report dated from Pretoria yesterday evening, says:

"General Kitchener (Lord Kitchener's brother), sent Colonels Keir and Cookson from Vriekuil, Western Transvaal, March 31, to reconnoiter towards Hart's River. They soon struck the track of guns and carried on a running fight for eight miles, following the track through the bush. Emerging on a plain, large Boer reinforcements advanced against their flanks, forcing the British troops to take up a defensible position, which they hastily entrenched. Fighting ensued at close quarters until the Boers were repulsed on all sides.

"Delarey, Kemp and other leaders vainly attempted to persuade their men to renew the action. Fifteen hundred Boers participated in the engagement, but they had suffered too heavily and cleared away to the northwest and south. The British losses were also severe. The Canadian Rifles especially distinguished themselves, one party commanded by Lieut. Bruce Carruthers, holding its post till every man was killed or wounded. Others of the forces showed great steadiness allowing the Boers to advance within two hundred yards of them and repelling them with a steady rifle fire."

WHO LIEUT CARRUTHERS IS.

Ottawa, April 5.—Lieut. Bruce Carruthers was a graduate of the Royal Military College graduating class of 1882. He joined the 21st Hussars (Imperial) and served with them in England and Ireland. He returned to Canada and joined the 14th Battalion P. W. O. Rifles at Kingston, and served as lieutenant and captain. When the first contingent went out to South Africa, he volunteered and went with the 2nd Special Service battalion, Royal Canadian Regiment, and was present with them in all their engagements, for which he received the South African medal, with four clasps. When the 3rd contingent (the 2nd Canadian Mounted Rifles) was raised in December last, Lieut. Carruthers accepted a commission as Lieutenant, and went out with the first portion of the contingent on board the Manhattan. He was attached to Squadron "B" and must have gone directly to the front, but no letter has been received from him by any one here since he landed.

His last letter was written on board the Manhattan, dated the 8th February, reaching Ottawa the 17th of March. He wrote in the best of health and spirits, and expected to reach Cape Town the following Thursday, and to be off for the front in about ten days. He said: "I have a splendid lot of men in this troop, and I know they have confidence in me. My horses are good also. We had a lively time on board crossing the line. Father Neptune paid us a visit, and for a couple of hours assumed control, ducking in the tank and shaving with a large razor any who had not crossed the line before." Lieut. Carruthers was married just before leaving to Miss Etta MacPherson, of Kingston. Their engagement was announced only a short time previous to the formation of the contingent.

He was notified to join the troopship, marriage was decided on, but before sailing he obtained a few days' leave, which he spent with his bride in Ottawa, the guests of Col. and Mrs. Rutherford. Lieut. Carruthers was commodore of the Kingston Yacht Club, and has always taken a great interest in all kinds of athletic sports.

How as in charge of the signallers of his battalion in South Africa, and performed distinguished service in that connection. The names of the men in Lieut. Carruthers' squadron are not known here. The department has the nominal role of the entire contingent alphabetically arranged, but not divided into squadrons. The work of dividing the contingent was to take place on the arrival of the contingent in South Africa.

PREPARING FOR CORONATION

Westminster Abbey Being Put in Shape for the Great Event

Special Telegram to The Times.

London, April 5—Westminster Abbey was closed this week and formally handed over to the Earl Marshal to be put in readiness for the coronation ceremony. The alterations will be of a most elaborate character, but their success will largely depend on the nature of the seating arrangements. This part of the business is giving a great deal of trouble. There are so many people to be provided for, and the accommodation within the Abbey is not of a very adaptable character.

The wild desire of some people to view the ceremony is indeed amusing. It has leaked out that a number of young scions of noble family, in their anxiety to see the coronation of their Majesties, had arranged to join the choir, while others made application for the privilege of acting as dummies in the orchestra. The Earl Marshal, learning of the matter, took immediate steps to thwart the ambitions of the young men, fearing that the success of their plans might interfere with the beauties of the musical service.

It is learned that the streets in Westminster during the coronation festival will be decorated with Venetian masts, red artificial roses, green leaves, celluloid balls, yellow ribbons and other devices. Near the Abbey the poles are to be more ornate than elsewhere, and there will be a series of triumphal arches representing the Mother Country and the colonies.

DIAMOND DYES

Are Invaluable in the Home

A Voice From the Gaspe Coast

Mrs. John Gallichon, Gaspe, P.Q., after testing Diamond Dyes in her home, for twenty years, says:

"When I commenced housekeeping twenty years ago I began the use of Diamond Dyes. In every class of dyeing, Diamond Dyes have always given me the best results. I have recently used Diamond Dyes for staining my floor and stairs; after a coat of varnish the wood looks very pretty. I may say that the people here are astonished with my work. In my hall and rooms I have mats and rugs the materials of which were dyed with the Diamond Dyes which give such lovely colors. They are truly the best of all dyes."

Upon receipt of post card with your address The Wells & Richardson Co., Limited, 200 Mountain street, Montreal, P.Q., will send you post paid sheets of new designs for making up the celebrated Diamond Dye Mat and Rug Patterns.

NO PEACE IN SIGHT SAYS OLD KRUGER

Complete Independence is Only Conditions They Will Accept

BRITAIN WILL NEVER GRANT IT.

The Generals in the Field will Not Discuss Peace—The War May Continue for Many Months

Special Telegram to The Times.

London, April 5.—A despatch from The Hague states that at a recent interview Mr. Kruger stated that ex-President Steyn and Generals Botha and Delarey are in complete accord regarding the war. There will be no surrender. Complete independence is the slogan and will be to the end.

The Times says: An Amsterdam despatch says it is claimed that there is complete unision among the Boer leaders in the field and the Boer representatives in Holland that the war will continue unless Great Britain agrees to grant independence. If there is complete unision upon the question among the Boer leaders in the field, either one way or the other, we do not think that it is of the slightest consequence what the Boer representatives in Holland think. What is more to the purpose is the question, what do the people of the British Empire think of granting the Boers independence. We believe that in Great Britain (leaving a few cranks out of consideration), and in all the colonies, the people are in complete unision in declaring that while they want to see their conquered foes granted the utmost freedom consistent with the integrity of the Empire, they do not want to see the British Empire commit suicide by giving away by diplomacy all that it has prevented itself from being robbed of by arms.

The British at home and in the colonies have made enormous sacrifices in blood and treasure to preserve the integrity of the Empire, and any British Stateaman, who proposed to leave the Boers free to accumulate arms and ammunition for another effort to drive the British out of South Africa, would be looked upon as a lunatic.

It is cheaper, more humane, and in every way, better to finish now, once and for ever, the battle for supremacy in South Africa. To grant the Boers independence would shake the confidence of the colonists in the stability of the Empire. It would be the beginning of national dismemberment. It is a question of Boer independence or British Independence, and by a large majority British subjects prefer British independence.

THE SIFTON TRIAL

Gerald Sifton's Second Trial will be at London Next Week

Special Telegram to The Times.

Woodstock, April 5. — The second trial of Gerald Sifton on the charge of murdering his father, Joseph Sifton, at St. John's, on June 30, 1900, will in all probability begin next Tuesday morning before His Lordship Justice Falconbridge, at London.

The spring assizes open on the previous afternoon, and as the true bill was returned at a previous court, and both sides will be under a heavy expense, the trial is to be brought on at the earliest possible moment. It is hardly likely that the case will occupy ten days, as it did at the fall court, says the Free Press.

Witnesses for both the Crown and defence are being subpoenaed, but the course to be followed by the Crown is of course, kept dark. Crown Attorney Magee stated this morning that he was not in a position to say if many medical men would be called again. This was a matter which rested entirely with Mr. Riddle, K.C., of Toronto, who would in all probability consult with Mr. E. F. B. Johnston, leading counsel for the defence, to be called by each side.

Unmistakable Signs of Catarrh

If you have a ringing in the ears, dropping in the throat, bad breath, headache, morning weakness, bad taste in the mouth—then it's catarrh. Use Catarrhozone Inhaler four times daily and eradicate this awful disease from your system. Items of Interest

London, April 5.—Miss Ellen M. Stone, the American missionary, sailed for New York on the Hamburg-American Line steamer Deutschland, which left Southampton to-day. Her departure from London was quiet.

Miss Stone will begin lecturing in aid of the missions almost immediately after her arrival in the United States. The rest which Miss Stone has had in England evidently improved her health, though she was obliged to refuse many invitations to speak before religious and other bodies. Joseph Choate, the United States Ambassador, and Mrs. Choate are greatly interested in the missionary. They entertained her at the Embassy at tea Thursday, where Miss Stone gave the diplomatic party an account of her experiences.

BROKE FROM BARRACKS.

London, April 5.—Bugler Dunne, whose gallantry at Colenso procured for him a silver bugle from Queen Victoria, has taken his discharge from the army on account of ill-health. He left Dover on Monday night, and had an enthusiastic "send-off" from some of his comrades, who broke out of barracks and played him to the railway station. Yesterday the delinquents were sentenced by regimental court-martial to a week's imprisonment.

REBEL DEFEAT IN COLOMBIA

Panama, Colombia, April 5.—This city was the scene of wild enthusiasm on the part of the Conservatives last night when Governor Salazar made public the contents of the following despatch received from President Marroquin: "Bogota—General Gonzales Valencia has defeated and completely destroyed the armies of Generals Gasion Soto and Juan McAllister. General Uribe, who invaded Colombian territory via Medina, in the department of Boyaca, was also defeated by General Nicolas Perdamo."

St. Louis, Mo., April 5.—Major-General Sir Richard C. Stewart, in charge of the remount service, British army, arrived in St. Louis last night. Upon being shown a telegram from New Orleans to the effect that Governor Heard of Louisiana had reported to the State Department at Washington that the British Government is maintaining a military camp at New Orleans in violation of the neutrality law, the General declared that, although he had just left New Orleans, he knew nothing whatever of the existence of such a camp.

"I am sure that Governor Heard, if correctly quoted, must be mistaken," said he. "If the British army has any representation in the United States not within the knowledge of the Government, I would surely know something about it. This is the first information I have received that there is such a thing as a military camp located near New Orleans. There have been shipments of horses and mules for the British army from a point a few miles from New Orleans, but I do not think the United States Government would consider that a military camp."

Asked if he knew anything about the alleged Boer plot to kidnap British soldiers in New Orleans, General Stewart replied that he did not, and if any attempt had been made to interfere with the shipment of horses and mules to England he had received no information of the fact. General Stewart stated that he would remain in St. Louis for a few days to purchase horses and mules for the British army.

NEW KLONDYKE RAILWAY

Work on the New Alaskan Railway Soon to Commence

Special Telegram to The Times.

Seattle, Wash., April 5.—Work is to be commenced next month on the construction of a new Alaskan railroad extending from Dawson to the Stewart River, a distance of 82 miles, through the richest mining district in the Yukon country. The new road will be known as the Klondike Mines Railway, and is incorporated with a capital stock of $2,500,000. The line will run through the Bonanza Creek district, 12 miles from Dawson to Indian River, and will be completed this year.

Terrible Tortures and Death Result From Acute and Chronic Rheumatism When Neglected in Spring

Paine's Celery Compound

THE GREAT BANISHER OF ALL FORMS OF RHEUMATISM

A Marvellous Cure After Failures with Physicians, Medicines and Mineral Springs

Rheumatism, terrible in its acute, and long enduring in its chronic form, is one of the most baneful diseases that human beings suffer from. It is a disease that will not bear neglect, for if not treated promptly will remain till death to harass, torture and make life miserable.

Rheumatism is also a constitutional disorder and hereditary. Because of an inactive condition of the kidneys and bowels the blood is not purified, and an acrid poison is formed and deposited in the muscles and joints, and this causes the inflammation and intense agonies that thousands are obliged to endure. Too often, the effects of rheumatism are fatal, especially when the dread disease affects the heart; then death is sudden. Many other serious complications result from this terrible disease, such as pneumonia, pleurisy, meningitis and diaphragmitis, and these often prove rapidly fatal.

Racked and tortured reader, what are you doing to get rid of your danger? Physicians candidly admit their inability to cure. The ordinary medicines of the day may give you relief for a few hours or days; they cannot banish the disease from your blood, joints and muscles; they cannot take the swellings from your knees, elbows or wrists, or make supple the stiffened and twisted limbs. You cannot longer afford to experiment; death is the sure result of experiment and neglect.

To-day, our only hope lies in the immediate use of Dr. Phelps' wonderful rheumatism banisher, Paine's Celery Compound. This tested and world-famed vanquisher of rheumatism, neuralgia and other troubles that arise from impure and poisoned blood, is now fully recognized by the medical profession as a positive and unfailing cure. The following important letter sent from Mr. W. H. Crysler, Niagara-on-the-Lake, Ont., is but one of the thousands received from prominent Canadians who have been cured by Paine's Celery Compound. Mr. Crysler says:

"About four years since, I had a severe attack of grippe, followed by rheumatism, for which the local physician prescribed the usual remedies, which helped me at the time, but did not eliminate the disease. Becoming gradually worse, I finally became discouraged and began using "proprietary" medicines without any benefit. Then I went to Clifton Springs, took the treatment, and felt somewhat better; but after coming back I became very much worse, and was confined to bed for a time. I then went to Preston Springs, and really improved; but after returning home I got worse.

I was then induced to try Paine's Celery Compound, and have gained in health and strength up to the present writing. I now walk from my house to my store, a distance of one-quarter of a mile, daily, and to church Sundays. Paine's Celery Compound has done all this for me. My friends are surprised and astonished to see me able to attend to business again. Believing that it is my duty to let other sufferers know of the great benefit I have received from Paine's Celery Compound, I cheerfully send this letter."

SIBERIA FOR REBELS STUDENTS PUNISHED

Hundreds of the Flower of the Empire Banished to Penal Colony

SCHOOLS HOTBEDS OF SEDITION

One-Fourth Taken From University of St. Petersburg—Pupils in Moscow Imprisoned

Special Telegram to The Times.

St. Petersburg, April 5—The wholesale banishment of University students to Siberia and other penal colonies is the latest plan of the Russian Government to suppress the frequent riots in the larger cities, which threaten to evolve into a revolution.

The students of St. Petersburg are in constant fear of arrest. Detectives are hovering day and night around the lodging houses of the university pupils, and it is estimated by the latter that 25 per cent. of their comrades have been sent to Siberia.

At Moscow last Wednesday twenty-six persons, mostly students, were arrested for disregarding the regulations of the governor general and sentenced to terms of imprisonment varying from one to three months.

A teacher in a preparatory classical school here was shot four days ago by a student who declared the teacher had given him an unjust rating.

Yokohama, April 1.— The Chinese minister at Tokio has sent a strongly worded despatch to Pekin in which he advises his government to prohibit Chinese students from coming to Japan, declaring they would imbibe revolutionary ideas here.

It was recently announced that fifty-six Chinese students would soon enter the military school at Tokio. Their expenses were to be paid by the vice-roy of Che-Lee province.

SHOOTING OF SCHEEPERS

The Charges of MacNeill Have Been Made Twice Before

Special Telegram to The Times.

London, April 4 — The charges brought by J. G. S. MacNeill, an Irish Nationalist member of the House of Commons, that the putting to death of Commandant Scheepers by the British at Graaf Reinet, Cape Colony, Jan. 18, was attended by shocking brutality, have been made by Mr. MacNeill twice before in the House of Commons. He refused to name his authority for his allegations, and War Secretary Brodrick declined to have the matter investigated.

Mr. MacNeill's charges have been published in the United States.

ANNUAL BANQUET.

To Mark the Close of the Winter Work in the Senior Department of the Y.M.C.A.

The next great event in connection with the close of the winter work in the Y.M.C.A. will be the annual banquet, of the senior members, which will be given on Thursday evening, April 17th at 8 p.m.

The banquet will be furnished by the Ladie's Auxiliary, as last year, and a nominal fee will be charged. The receipts will go toward the Auxiliary Fund. A social committee have the arrangements in hand and every member of the "Y" should strive to be present.

A prominent Association Worker from another town, and well known in town will be present and the event promises to be one that will be long remembered. Invitations will be issued next week.

PRESBYTERY OF PETERBORO

No Appointment Made to Keene Presbyterian Church

The Presbytery of Peterborough met on Thursday morning for the purpose deciding on a minister to take charge of Keene Presbyterian Church, rendered vacant by the death of Rev. Dr. Andrews. Some time ago Rev. Mr. Kennawin of Omemee preached in the church and he was asked to be an applicant for the pulpit. This he consented to do but afterwards withdrew his name. In the meantime the ballot had been distributed and the vote was taken. The Presbytery decided that as Mr. Kennawin had withdrawn his name it was not fair to the others and consequently a new ballot will be taken.

LEAVING PETERBOROUGH

Mr. Edgar Isaac, an Employee, of the Peterborough Hardware Company Leaving for Tweed.

Mr. Edgar Isaac, who for the past four years has been an employee of the Peterborough Hardware Company has severed his connections with that firm and leaves on Monday for Tweed where he has accepted a very responsible position in a large hardware store. Mr. Isaac is well-known in the town and surrounding country and will be greatly missed by a large number of friends who will, however, extend to him their very best wishes for a prosperous and successful business career in his new position.

Typographical Union Scale Adopted

On Thursday evening at a conference held between the employing printers of Peterborough, Mr. H. Stevenson, Organizer for the International Typographical Union, and representatives of the local Typographical Union, conclusions were reached as to the adoption of a scale of wages to prevail in the local printing offices. The scale includes the shortening of the working day to 54 hours per week, also hours per day, and a substantial advance on wages as specified in the scale.

Heretofore no fixed scale of wages had been mutually agreed upon, although a number of the employees in the different offices have been paid wages higher than that of the scale now adopted. Under the new conditions a minimum rate has been adopted at a substantial advance, together with the adoption of the nine hour movement.

The arrangements throughout were conducted in a most harmonious and satisfactory manner, and the results arrived at without any friction. The reasonable disposition of the organizer, backed up by the good sense of the local members was responsible for the speedy and amicable adjustment of the demands made by the employees, who have accepted the settlement agreed upon.

The agreements between the employers and printers was duly signed by the three offices yesterday afternoon.

CLOSING EXERCISES

Of the Y. M. C. A. Gymnasium Class a Great Success

The closing exercises of the Y.M.C.A. gymnasium class last night, were the most satisfactory and pleasing yet presented in the history of that institution. A large number of friends of the class members were present to witness the exhibitions given by the junior and senior classes. The large gallery was packed to its fullest extent, and a large number were accomodated with seats on the ground floor.

The exhibitions given by the juniors in the various parts elicited great applause. The marching, military and letter, was well performed, and the boys heartily applauded. The advanced work of the senior men was put on by Messrs. Ayers, Trollop, Finnie, Robertson, Hall and Sawers, and was well done, the trapeze work being particularly good.

The instrumental string quartette favored the audience with a number of well rendered selections.

At the conclusion of the program, the class was photographed in the gymnasium.

A CREDIT TO THE TOWN

Gough Bros., the Up to Date Clothiers

There is many a city, with a population several times as great as that of Peterborough, but which cannot boast of such a business house that does such a large and satisfactory business as Gough Bros., of this town.

The store has since the new managers were appointed, done an exceedingly gratifying trade. The firm carry a very extensive stock of mens' and boys' fine ready-to-wear clothing furnishings, etc., and does a heavy ordered clothing trade as well. The store is a genuine hive of industry; the salesmen are kept constantly employed with their many customers, and it is plainly apparent from the contented looks of the latter, that they are thoroughly satisfied with their bargains.

The managers, Messrs. Tully and Merrell make it a point to see that every customer gets full value for every penny expended in the store. They know the needs of their patrons, and with their full and complete stock of the best goods procurable, they find no difficulty in meeting every want. Gough Bros.' store is a credit to the town and is deserving of the support of all our citizens.

Malt Breakfast Food

Is the Kind That Aids Digestion

The human digestive apparatus is better understood to-day by all classes than it was ten years ago. Simple school letters and sensibly written newspaper articles have all contributed to public benefit.

To-day the wise and prudent exercise commendable care regarding the character of the fuel used for the sustenance of life, and demand foods easily digested—nourishment for body and brain that will not waste existing energy or hamper the action of the digestive machinery.

Tests and strick chemical analysis have proven that Malt Breakfast Food is the only pure and true health food; the only form of concentrated nourishment that favors digestive vigor.

Users of Malt Breakfast Food never have their periods of gastric discord, no torments or agonies from dyspepsia, no paroxysms or fits of indigestion. Malt Breakfast Food used regularly at the morning meal is a guarantee of daily physical happiness that users of common starchy grain foods know nothing of. Ask your grocer for Malt Breakfast Food.

RUSSIA LANDS 60,000 RIFLES IN PERSIA

May be Another Move to Get England Out of India

THE WILY BEAR SHOWING FIGHT

How the Russians Hope to Get Back at Great Britain on Account of Their Treatment in China

Special Telegram to The Times.

Bombay, April 5.—The Russian subsidised steamer Korniloff, it is asserted here, landed 60,000 rifles at Bender Abbas on her last visit to the Persian Gulf.

Britain recently sent a special representative to Bener Abbas to look out for her interests.

A correspondent of the London Post sent to spy out the land on both sides of the Persian Gulf, beginning at Kowegt, wrote under date of Feb. 7:

"The power which holds Bender Abbas Bay with Larak and Kishm as its outposts, has complete control of the narrow waters at the entrance of the Persian Gulf."

If the foregoing cabled report is true, it probably is another of Russia's persistent moves to work Britain out of India.

Bender, or Bender Abbas is the key to the entrance to the Persian Gulf, at the upper end of which Britain has been getting a foothold at Kowegt to strengthen her position in the Far East. Bender Abbas is in Persia. Koweyt is in Arabia.

Turkey, which claims sovereignty over the Koweyt region, gave Germany, which works in harmony with Russia, permission to build a railroad across Asia Minor and Persia to Kowegt. Britain prompted the native chief at Koweyt to proclaim himself independent, and sent war ships recently to back him in forbidding Germany to build in his dominions a railway which would imperil British interests.

Young but Flourishing

The Best Stove Co., who opened a commodious and well-stocked store on Hunter street, a few days ago, are doing a rushing trade. Their stock is very large, and includes Buck's justly celebrated stoves, ranges and furnaces. The firm makes a specialty of the popular, new style "Happy Thought" range, and carry also a complete stock of kitchen supplies, tinware, enamelware, etc.

The business is in charge of young, bright, capable and energetic men, who are thoroughly up-to-date in their methods, and who will give their customers every reason to be satisfied with their dealings with the firm.

Band Concert Last Night

The band of the 57th Regiment gave another of their delightful concerts in the opera house last night to a very large audience. The music rendered by the band was of its usual high standard and was rendered in such a pleasing manner, as to draw forth the heartiest applause from the residence. Mr. Jack Perle, Kingston Favorite Comics vocalist delightfully entertained the audience, his selections being well rendered and mostly of a side-splitting character. Mr. Scott in harmonious songs and stories was warmly applauded on his appearance on the stage. He is certainly one of the best entertainers heard in town for sometime. Another of these delightful concerts will be given in the course of a week or two and no doubt will be very largely attended, as the concerts given by the band during the winter season have been growing in popularity to such an extent that before long the opera house will be too small for the crowds who wish to attend.

Labor Meeting

The regular weekly meeting of Peterborough Union, 9240, American Federation of Labor, was held in the labor hall, Water st., last night. The attendance of members was very large and enthusiastic. Several questions of importance to the labor men were discussed, and a large number of new members were initiated. The total membership is now in the neighborhood of 1,300

BOERS STARTED CONFLICT RELYING ON GERMANY

Paris Correspondent of the London Times says Burgers Believed Europe Would Intervene

Special Telegram to The Times.

London, April 5.—The Paris correspondent of The Times quotes an interview with "An Important Dutchman," well acquainted with the Transvaal, who affirms that the German Emperor's telegram to Kruger in 1896 was received by the Boers as tantamount to an assurance of Germany's intervention and protection. A Dutch authority says the Boers went into the war under the conviction that Europe would intervene at the first shot fired, and that the result of the intervention would be that the republics would govern South Africa.

AUSTRALIANS FULL OF RESENTMENT

London, April 5.—The Melbourne correspondent of The Times says that public opinion has changed with regard to the execution of Australian officers by Lord Kitchener. The Australians now deeply resent the stigma cast on the good name of their soldiers by a few men who were not members of the regular contingents.

Something New in Wedding Frills

The newest thing in connection with fashionable weddings in Toronto, that mirror of fashion, and fountain of all that is good, is to have a brass band to play the newly-wedded couple to the railway station from which they start on their wedding tour. A young couple going eastward on the G.T.R. were thus accompanied, a few days ago.

Weather Notes

Probs. To-day,—Light winds; fair and milder.

The weather is fair and temperature nearly uniform throughout the Dominion. From present indications it is likely to continue fine and become milder in Ontario and Quebec during Saturday and probably over Sunday.

SHORT AND POINTED

The Food Was Grape-Nuts

It helps one to know the kind of food to select if they can learn the experiences others have had.

"I consider it my duty to let you know what Grape-Nuts has done for me. I was suffering from dyspepsia and daily stomach trouble. After taking many kinds of medicines without finding relief I saw a description of Grape-Nuts Breakfast Food and began using it regularly, and in less than two weeks my indigestion was entirely gone.

When I began using the food I weighed 125 pounds. I now weigh 160 pounds and feel stronger than I have ever felt before. Thanks and praise to the makers of Grape-Nuts." Name and address given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

MR. BUCHANAN AND THE EXAMINER

It must be very gratifying to the readers of the Examiner that it should devote so much of its space to a controversy with Mr. Lindsay over Mr. Buchanan. Does Mr. Lindsay, does the Examiner, in fact, does anybody think, that the pretended feud is a real one? The question of drawing each other out, a trick the Liberal organ has so often played successfully on the Review, is the real one at issue, and we would recommend to the readers of the Examiner a careful perusal of the points which it does not touch upon. This hokey-pokey style of campaigning may do for greenhorns but not for them of mature age.

THE LAND OF THE SPY

A Constantinople correspondent, quoting instances, says that in no country and at no time of the world's history has the spy system been developed to the point it has attained in Turkey to-day. It is a most elaborate organization and costs an immense amount of money. There are spies and counter spies and counter counter spies to the fourth or fifth degree. Their number is legion, and they are to be found in all classes of society, from the highest to the lowest. Besides the Minister of Police, almost every high dignitary has his own service of spies. These are all rival organizations, and spend most of their time in spying and denouncing each other. All prominent persons are closely watched, and followed even while shopping, and should they meet another person of note and exchange a few words, the fact is carefully noted. Turks no longer dare assemble in parties of five or six for the purpose of spending their evenings together. It is impossible for three or four of them to sit down at a table in a coffee house without having a spy at the next. On such occasions they always speak very loud, so that everybody might hear them. Should a European converse with a Turk in the street, a spy will follow them and try to find out what they are saying. The result of all this is that the Turks avoid one another's company as much as possible, and whenever they do come together the conversation is on the most futile subjects, and quite childish. The Turkish nation is growing more and more demoralized under the present spy system.

A PROSPEROUS COMPANY

Annual Meeting of the London Life Insurance Company

We once again heartily congratulate the management of that popular financial institution, the London Life Insurance Company, on the result of the year's operations, as set forth in the financial statement submitted at the twenty-seventh annual meeting, held at the head office of the Company, London, Ontario, on March 10th.

During the year 12,468 applications for insurance were accepted, amounting to $1,615,165. The net premium income was $271,725.83, and interest $50,293.76, making a total of $322,019.59, being an increase of $24,770.47 over the previous year. $50,898 was paid for death claims. There was an increase of 2,806 policies for $379,636.74, for the year. The total assets amount to $1,126,130.40. The showing is an excellent one and indicates careful management and wise investments.

The Company does a large business in this district, which is under the energetic management of Mr. George Lee, who has been with the institution upwards of eight years. The Company has a reputation not only in Peterborough district, but everywhere else, for promptly settling all claims. Indeed, in this respect it has made a record for itself. Mr. Alex Campbell is the local agent.

A Defect of Reformers.

The newspaper despatch from Topeka, Kansas, about Mrs. Charles M. Sheldon's hired girl has been very popular, and acres of comment have appeared about it. The story is that the hired girl, who was new, had read in one of Mr. Sheldon's the-world-made-over stories that it was a good plan for the servants of a household to take their meals with the rest of the family, so she expressed to Mrs. Sheldon her willingness to follow that course, but Mrs. Sheldon dissented, and the girl left. This is thought to be a joke on Mr. Sheldon, but, remarks New York "Life," really it makes him appear in a good light as a reformer who respects the rights of others, and does not try to compel even his immediate family to share his social experiments. That is the way it is in the family of Tolstoi. He lives the ideal life, and goes barefoot, and cobbles shoes for recreation, but his wife and most of his children respect conventional customs, and live a life modified, but not stunted by his ideals.

A great and common defect about ordinary reformers is that they are not content to let their light so shine, but insist that every one whom they can control shall emulate their good works. Says the Women's Christian Temperance Union to the army, "We think it's wicked to drink beer, and you shan't have any." Says Mrs. Carrie Nation to Apollo Belvidere, "It is an outrage that you have no trousers on. Let me smash you!" Mr. Sheldon's way is better. He goes in for precept, and, maybe, example, but not for constraint. If the Women's Christian Temperance Union followed his example it might still distribute tracts to the army, but it would not legislate away the canteen, and Mrs. Nation, acting Sheldon-wise, would be content to say to Apollo Belvidere, "Wear trousers, like me."

Good Hearts and Bad Manners.

An exchange tells about a judge more noted for his bad manners than his knowledge of law. He continually insults lawyers, litigants and witnesses—especially women—in the most outrageous way, and spares no one except certain members of the bar whose political influence he fears. Recently a young lawyer, having more backbone than discretion, perhaps, was bullied by His Honor beyond the limit of endurance, and began to talk back. With the aid of a cool head and a polite but sarcastic tongue the young practitioner soon had the bencher apoplectic and nigh to frenzy and yet lacking ground for holding the lawyer guilty of contempt.

When the case had been decided against the young man an older member of the bar said:

"You did not take the judge in the right way. He is cranky, but you should have humored him. At heart he is a pretty good man."

"His heart may be good," said the young man, "but his manners are bad; and I'm tired of humoring people whose hearts are so good that they feel privileged to be bullies and curmudgeons."

"Castles of Sand."

(Written after seeing the picture called "Castles of Sand.")

I.

Castles of Youth and Hope, and Joy,
Castles of Love without alloy,
Built in the heart of a woman; there
They were fashioned with tender care.

Built to withstand the blows of Fate,
Built to rebuff the hand of Hate,
With towers of silver, and turrets of gold,
And all the Love that the walls could hold.

'Twas a woman's hand that built them there,
And a woman's thought that made them fair;
For a woman's Faith had strengthened their walls
And a woman's beauty would grace their halls.

But Youth is gone, and Faith is betray'd,
And Joy in its lonely grave is laid,
And Love has come, and laughed, and flown,
And a woman's life is lived out alone.

For a heart grew cold, and slain was Trust,
And the silver and gold all crumbled to dust;
And these castles built by a woman's hand
Are only some mounds of shifting sand.

Castles of sand on a sunny shore
Of golden grains like a hoarded store,
Mounds of shining, glistening sand
That built up the Castles of Day Dream Land.

Make Way For the Ladies.

In Michigan there is an Indian school where the children of the more or less noble redman are instructed in Anglo-Saxon graces and civilization. One of the teachers says:

It is very interesting to study these children, especially as we have them from four different tribes.

The boys have a sense of humor. In my flag-drill last Friday the partners were a boy and a girl, and where the lines intersect to form a cross I taught the boys to let their partners go first; and much trouble I had to do it.

After the exercises Isaac Crane came up to me, and in his solemn way said:

"Miss B., in letting the girls pass in front of the boys you have struck at the root of an Indian national custom."

"How so, Isaac?"

"It is the custom for the man to go first, carrying his dignity, and for the woman to follow, carrying everything else."

Expensive Revenge.

Mankind is so constituted that it is sometimes not able to forget readily any slights or rebuffs endured, and the disposition to seek revenge is frequently uppermost in the thoughts. In Sheffield, England, it is said, there is a manufacturer who became furious with the local post-office people because of certain regulations they insisted he should follow in the matter of registered mail. After calming down, the manufacturer concluded he would have to toe the mark if he wanted his mail forwarded, but his revenge he would have, too. So every day for a month or more he sent each of his two hundred employees to the post-office to buy a single penny stamp. The employees were decorated with red tape, and seemed to enjoy hugely the making of their daily purchase.

—Frederick Harris, Toronto's great and rapid sign painter, is in town.

—Mervin, the Hunter street butcher, has added a handsome delivery rig to his well equipped establishment.

Dropsy is one Positive Sign of Kidney Disease.—Have you any of these unmistakable signs? Puffiness under the eyes? Swollen limbs? Smothering feeling? Change of the character of the urine? Exhaustion after least exertion? If you have there's dropsical tendency and you shouldn't delay an hour in putting yourself under the great South American Kidney Cure.—56

A noted London club man once laid a wager with a friend that the latter could not sell a given number of gold guineas at a penny a piece. He won his wager. The people refused to buy. They thought he was offering too much for too little.

It may be that the claims made for Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription seem almost too great to women who in years of suffering have found no help in doctors or medicines. But it is to be remembered that no claim is made for "Favorite Prescription" which is not substantiated by thousands of women cured by its use. Its effects are truly wonderful. It wipes out past years of pain as a sponge wipes a slate.

Favorite Prescription is the great medicine for women. It establishes regularity, dries enfeebling drains, heals inflammation and ulceration and cures female weakness. It is the best preparative for maternity, making the baby's advent practically painless.

"When I wrote to you in March, asking advice as to what to do for myself," says Mrs. Ella Reynolds, of Cuffe, McLean Co., Ky., "I was expecting to become a mother in June, and was sick all of the time. Had been sick for several months. Could not get anything to stay in my stomach, not even water. Had mishaps twice in six months, and threatening all the time with this one. Had female weakness for several years. My hips, back and lower bowels hurt me all the time. Had numbness from my hips down. Had several hard cramping spells, and was not able to do any work at all. I received your answer in a few days, telling me to take Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. I took three bottles, and before I had taken it a week I was better, and before I had taken it a month I was able to help do my work. On the 27th of May my baby was born, and I was only sick three hours, and had an easy time.

"We praise Dr. Pierce's medicine for it has cured me."

SEVEN MAIN QUESTIONS

THAT ARE USUALLY ASKED BY MEN WHO ARE TEMPTED TO LOOK INTO A MINING PROPOSITION

1st. What is the characteristic ore showing of the property being presented?

2nd. Where is it located and is it in the vicinity of other mines that are being worked?

3rd. Is there a good title to the mines or are they merely held on bond and lease, or on an option?

4th. What sort of a corporation has been formed to take title to the property and under what state laws; also the charter life of the company?

5th. Is it safe to trust the men who are at the helm?

6th Will money put in be used to open up the mines or will it be pocketed by the managers?

7th. Will one stand a good chance to get a fair slice of profits against what is put in?

In answer to the above questions, a prospectus, or statement will be sent upon postal card request addressed to

Coats of mail are now being manufactured from papier-mache that cannot be distinguished from real antique armor. According to the wishes of the customer, the armor can be turned out bright steel, silver and gold inlay, hammered brass, rusty iron or malachite. As described by the New York "Evening Post," the new goods are calculated to deceive the best critics, and to give all the satisfaction of the genuine coat of mail. They are warranted not to break easily or to cut any unfortunate guest upon whom they may happen to fall. All descriptions of armor can be had. The new invention has aroused the anger of the dealers in antique armor, who declare that it is intended to ruin their trade.

A well-known English firm of tobacconists are giving away in their packets of cigarettes a small map of the Klondike district. It is colored red, and the words "British Territory" are printed upon it in large letters. On the back is found the following little history of the gold fields: "There is no doubt that the Klondike district is the richest gold field yet discovered. It comprises some 192,000 square miles, mostly in British territory, and although mining has been going on steadily for the past ten years, it was only in August, 1896, that the extraordinary richness of the diggings was discovered." We have been accustomed to portraits of fat women and popular heroes for so long that the novelty is as pleasant as it is instructive.

Where He Failed.

The young man drew himself up to his full height.

"I have," he cried, "an unsullied character, an ardent heart, a versatile mind and strenuous biceps."

The young girl yawned and seemed interested. He was quick to push his advantage.

"I am the possessor of a town and country house, a yacht, a stable of thoroughbreds and a box at the opera."

She hesitated, and a slight flush betrayed that she was listening.

"I have got," he continued with a certain fierceness, "thirty servants, forty pairs of trousers, fifty ancestors, three automobiles, six prize bull pups and an army commission."

Ah! she had found her tongue at last.

"And how many golf medals?" she lisped.

The young man shuddered.

He felt that he had lost. He had played nervily and high, but she was above his limit.—"Waverley Magazine."

DAISY GORDON'S FOLLY
—OR—
The World Lost for Love's Sake
By Laura Jean Libbey

Author of The Crime of Hallow-E'en, The Flirtations of a Beauty, Willful Gaynell, Little Leaby, Only a Mechanic's Daughter

Her heart sank as she looked out at the sunshine and listened to the birds.

"I am so frightened!" she gasped when they crowded about her —"oh, I am so very, very frightened!"

They did not recognize a young heart sick and feint with its stings of accusing conscience —seized for the first time with unutterable dread —surely, if they had done so, they would have saved her, but they all kissed the lovely white face, declaring it was perfectly natural.

"No one could wonder at her fright," one of them said, "for marriage was a very solemn thing."

"Did you tell her about the accident," asked one of the bridesmaids, pushing through the group to Daisy's side.

"Look how you have frightened her," retorted one of their number. "The accident she tells about was scarcely worth mentioning, it was simply this: The minister who was to perform the ceremony missed the boat, therefore finding it impossible to reach here, and telegraphed that another minister would have to be secured in his place— which has already been done."

"I heard that it was a bad omen to have a change of ministers or of bridesmaids at a wedding," faltered Daisy. "I once knew of such a case, and when the hour for the ceremony rolled around the bridegroom was missing."

"That will not be your case," laughed Hetty, "for Aleck is pacing up and down the corridor outside with all the impatience of a schoolboy, begging to see you just the earliest moment you are ready. There's devotion for you."

"You will have one of the handsomest of husbands, Daisy darling, and what is better than all, he is marrying you for love alone," whispered one of the girls; "you ought to be so happy, dear, yet your face expresses— what shall I call it?—something very like terror."

"It is only your fancy," murmured Daisy, faintly. "What should cause me to feel terror?"

"Why nothing, only you look so!"

It was like a terrible dream to Daisy when Aleck led her down the corridor and into the grand parlor where the guests were assembled.

As he led her up to the floral horseshow beneath which the minister stood, by some subtle instinct Daisy raised her blue eyes to the clergyman's face— the wonder of it was that she did not fall down dead at Aleck's feet then and there — the same clergyman who had wedded her to that other one on that fatal night stood before her.

She did not cry out, she did not swoon, she would have turned and fled if she could, but already the doorways and passages were blocked with people— she must advance.

Would the man recognize her? Would he recoil in horror to great for words, crying out:

"I wedded this girl but a short time since, to another."

If he did not recognize her face she was safe, for he would not know the name.

A life- time of suspense was crowded in the moment that followed, for step by step she was advancing nearer and nearer, leaning heavily on Aleck's arm.

It was too late now to draw back from the awful step on the brink of the precipice.

Quietly they took their places, and the ceremony— such a cruel mockery— went on.

Aleck made his responses in a clear, distinct, happy voice.

Then the aged minister turned to the bride- elect, and the words were asked slowly:

"Wilt thou, Daisy Gordon, take this man to be thy lawfully wedded husband until death doth thee part?"

"I will," faltered Daisy, in a piteous voice.

There was a loud crash.

The minister's book had fallen from his nerveless hands to the floor.

He was leaning forward with breathless excitement, peering into Daisy's face, which was turned half toward him, as though by some uncontrolable magnet.

"That voice!" he muttered, in a low, hoarse voice, but not so low but what Daisy's strained ears caught the words, and her soul sunk within her.

She turned her wild, dilated blue eyes full of mute, beseeching agony upon him to read her doom in his face. Did he recognize her? Would he denounce her?

How Aleck, her love, would turn from her if he knew the truth.

How horrified and dismayed Hetty and Olive would be, to say nothing of the jest of the people; and her father, her poor old father, who idolized her so, and who was standing close by her, joy and happiness on his honest, rugged face. The blow would be sure to kill him.

He would fall on his face and never speak again.

Like a frightened, mesmerized bird, Daisy stood facing the man who held her fate in his hands.

"It was only my fancy, a wild, absurd fancy," she heard him murmur.

Then to her intense relief he picked up his book, and the ceremony went on.

They were soon gathered around her, calling her Mrs. Hamilton.

That was the first thing that brought her out of the dazed dream that seemed to infold her.

"You shall never regret giving yourself to me, my darling," she heard Aleck whisper; and the words smote her like a dagger's thrust.

Farmer Gordon was the last to turn away from the happy bridegroom and the death- white bride.

"Always be kind and tender with my little one, Aleck, my boy," said the farmer, huskily. "You have won the first love of a trusting young heart—a heart pure and guileless as a little child's. See how she clings to you, hiding her face on your breast. Heaven bless her and bless you, Aleck, who have won my treasure."

Ah! how quickly that blessing would be turned to a curse deep and mighty if her father knew what she had done.

But that terrible secret was hidden as deep as the grave for ten long years. Yes, and for ten long years she would put it from her and be happy, let the cost be what it might.

CHAPTER X.
Too Late For Love—When the Heart is Broken.

When Aleck found himself alone in the carriage with his pretty bride, he drew her face to his and kissed it a hundred times.

THE LONDON LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY

The twenty-seventh annual meeting of the London Life Insurance Company was held at the Company's offices, London, Can., March 10th, 1902.

The Vice-President, Mr. Albert O. Jeffery, K.C., LL.D., D.C.L., occupied the chair, and the Manager, Mr. John G. Richter, acted as Secretary.

The notice calling the meeting was read by the Secretary, after which the following Report and Financial Statement were submitted:

TWENTY-SEVENTH ANNUAL REPORT

The Directors of the Company beg to submit Annual Report and duly audited Financial Statement for the year ending December 31st, 1901.

During the year, 12,468 applications for insurance, amounting to $1,618,105, were accepted and policies issued therefor.

The net Premium and Interest receipts of the year were respectively $271,726.83 and $50,292.76, totaling $322,019.59, and being an increase of $24,770.47 over the previous year.

The sum of $59,606.32 was paid for Death Claims, $13,299.05 for Matured Endowments, and $8,141.09 for Surrendered Policies and Cash Profits, making a total of $81,246.46 paid Policy-holders or their heirs during the year.

The insurance in force on the Company's books at the close of the year, after deducting all re-insurance, amounted to $6,489,041.62, under 3,293 "Ordinary" and 43,294 "Industrial," or a total of 46,587 policies—an increase of 2,506 policies for insurance of $378,535.74 for the year.

The Assets of The Company, exclusive of uncalled but subscribed capital, amount to $1,126,190.40, an increase of $134,371.24 for the year. The interest and other payments falling due during the year were in the main satisfactorily met. No losses in respect of investments were incurred during the year.

The Liabilities of the Company under existing policies, and in all other respects, have been provided for in the most ample manner, the whole amounting to $1,026,133.79. The surplus on policy-holders' account, exclusive of uncalled but subscribed capital, is therefore $100,056.61, and after deducting paid-up capital, accumulating profits and contingent fund, there remains a net surplus, over all liabilities and capital, of $33,468.00.

JOHN McCLARY,
President.

To the Shareholders of the London Life Insurance Co.:

Gentlemen,—In discharge of my duty I have made a continuous audit in detail of your books for the year ending Dec. 31st, 1901, and find them accurately kept. The Balance Sheet is a true abstract from the books for the year. As will be seen, all outside liabilities, including the reserve fund, are fully covered, independently of the general surplus shown. I have carefully looked into the securities and find them in good shape. The clerical work is neatly done.

February 12th, 1902. JAMES McMILLAN, Auditor.

The Vice-President, in moving the adoption of the report, said:

In the unavoidable absence of the President, it devolves on me to move the adoption of the report under consideration.

The report and accompanying financial statement are, as usual, full and readily understood.

The results of the past year's operations show that steady and solid progress is being made in all essential particulars. The cash receipts from interest on investments and premiums show an increase of nearly $25,000 over the previous year.

The assets of the company increased by over $134,000, while the liabilities calculated upon a reserve standard of 4 per cent. interest as regards business in force prior to 1900, and 3 1-2 per cent. and 3 per cent. as regards business issued since then, and the inclusion of every known or ascertainable outstanding obligation of the Company at the end of the year increased less than $124,000.

The surplus security to policyholders has increased to over $100,000, and after deducting contingent fund, accumulating profits, and paid-up capital, there remains a net surplus over all liabilities and capital of over 33,000.

With these remarks, I beg to move the adoption of the report.

Judge Bell, in seconding the adoption of the report said:

As a policyholders' Director, it affords me pleasure to testify to the care and ability exercised in the handling of the funds of the Company. The investments are not only first-class in character, as evidenced by the fact that no losses whatever have been incurred during the past year, but yielding as they do an average return of over 5 1-2 per cent. interest, are more than ordinarily profitable.

I am also pleased with the liberal profits the Company is paying policy holders entitled to participate therein; and taking into account the fact that the net surplus is steadily increasing, there is every reason to anticipate a continuance of like satisfactory results.

I have much pleasure in seconding the adoption of the report.

The adoption of the report was carried unanimously.

A hearty vote of thanks was tendered the agents and other employes of the Company for the satisfactory manner in which they discharged their several duties during the past year.

The election of Directors resulted in the re-election of Messrs. John McClary, President; A. O. Jeffery, Vice-President; Wm. Bowman, Geo. C. Gibbons, W. F. Bullen, A. S. Emery, Judge Bell, T. H. Smallman and G. M. Harrison, for the ensuing year.

A True Nerve Tonic

acts not so much upon the nerves themselves, as upon the digestive functions, and the abundant formation of rich, red blood. The nerves cannot be fed on medicine. They can be fed and strengthened by digested and assimilated food. Ferrozone's marvellous action arises from its power over the digestive and assimilative functions of the body. You take it, the blood grows richer, redder. You feel strength and vigor, digestion ceases to be noticed, for it has become good. Work is easier, for you have the strength to do it. In a short time you have health. Use Ferrozone.

TO NURSE SMALLPOX PATIENT

Mr. W. H. Andrews will Perform the Duties in the Wood Family

Mr. W. H. Andrews, who nursed the smallpox patient at Jackson Park has been engaged to care for Mr. Ram. Wood, the smallpox patient in Otonabee. The patient is in the same house with his family but is not allowed to mingle with them. No new cases have been reported and it is thought the disease will be confined to the single patient. It is needless to say that the case will be well looked after, so far as Mr. Andrews is concerned, because he has had some experience already this winter.

Curious Bits of News.

A minister in a Kansas town recently adopted a novel scheme for bolstering up the church collection, which had been diminishing. He informed his congregation, just before the plates were passed around, that the members who were in debt were not expected to contribute. The collection that day was double the usual sum.

It really turns out that the population of France has increased three times more rapidly during the past five years than it did during the preceding five, and, consequently, the recent French census is regarded as unexpectedly favorable, notwithstanding that the rate of increase has been extremely low. It is important, if the decline has passed the deepest point of depression.

The oyster trade of England has fallen in ten years from an annual total of fifteen million dollars to two and one-half millions. Sewerage schemes carried out by town boards resulted in flooding the oyster beds with sewage, and several deaths ensued from eating poisonous oysters. The alarm became widespread, and the figures quoted show the disaster brought upon the trade.

It is evident that one of the popular superstitions had no hold on the designer of Uncle Sam's silver twenty-five-cent piece. In the words quarter-dollar are thirteen letters. Thirteen letters compose E Pluribus Unum. In the tail of the eagle are thirteen feathers, and in the shield are thirteen lines. There are thirteen stars and thirteen arrow-heads, while, if you examine the bird through a microscope, you will find thirteen feathers in its wing.

According to the Birmingham "Daily Gazette," an extraordinary character has just passed away in a Carmarthenshire gentleman named Evans. Mr. Evans devoted his life to witnessing hangings, making the acquaintance of executioners, and collecting relics of murderers. In the early days of public hangings he would travel any distance to see a man "turned off." He was so fascinated by the business that on the death of Calcraft he applied for his post. As this was not granted, he set up a gallows in his own house and invited his friends to test the noose.

Exploration, says "Science Siftings," has now revealed relics of Menes, the founder of Egyptian monarchy, fashioned more than sixty-five hundred years ago. Of Zer, the successor to Menes, it is astonishing to find the forearm of his queen still in its wrappings, with four splendid bracelets intact. This brilliant and exquisitely finished group of jewelry is two thousand years older than the jewelry of Dahshur, the oldest up to then known. The arm of the queen had been broken off by the first plunderers, and had lain hidden in a hole in the wall of the tomb.

Two curious cases of the use of the magnet in surgery are attracting some attention. Dr. Garel of Lyons, France, has drawn a nail about two inches long from the bronchial tube of a boy of eighteen months from Buenos Ayres. The nail had been there for some time, causing the child to cough much. Roentgen rays showed the position of it, and an electro-magnet drew it out. Another successful operation of the same kind has been performed by Dr. Piechaud of Bordeaux, on a child of three years. In this case the trachea was opened to get a projection from the pole of the magnet near the nail.

Too Great a Risk.

"I'm going to give up the business," said a life insurance agent with a sigh, whom the Detroit "Free Press" encountered. "I don't care whether they meant it for a joke or not. It's a hard life, and people have no business trying to be funny at my expense.

"I have always prided myself upon my ability to land a man when once I succeeded in getting his attention. But I had a new experience the other day. I was working hard to convince a party that it was his duty to take out some of our insurance upon his life for the protection of his family, and I saw that I had him wavering, when I had to pause for breath, and he broke in with:

"'By the way, how much do you carry on your life?'

"While I, taken unaware by the abruptness of the question, was stammering a reply, he escaped. The incident set me to thinking. I had induced hundreds of men to insure their lives for the benefit of their families, and yet I had never thought far enough to carry any insurance upon my own life. It didn't look consistent, now that I had come to consider the question, and I resolved to remedy it at once. To think is to act with me, and I sat down and filled out an application at once for a good round sum.

"I got the application back to-day marked, 'Refused—occupation too dangerous!' The next paper they get from me will be my resignation!"

Chollie—I stood on the corner this morning, and of all the hundreds of women that went by I didn't see more than three that I would marry.

Dolly—And I suppose the number that would marry you was a good deal smaller still.—Somerville Journal.

A MARVELLOUS MEDICINE

"No Cure, No Pay," is the Newest Proposal of the Proprietors of Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills

Editor Morning Times

Sir,—We make the following proposal to the readers of the Times: To any one who is a subject of rheumatism (no matter how long standing), or any blood disease, as enumerated below, and will give Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills a fair trial, and do not find a perfect cure, we will refund the money paid for the pills. If no substantial improvement is observed, we will in addition, pay $10 in cash on satisfactory evidence being supplied us to this effect.

We have yet to know of a single case where these wonderful pills have not been almost entirely successful in effecting a cure. CANADA CHEMICAL CO.

Ex-Ald. Bailey, St. John's, writes: I cannot speak too highly of Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills. They worked a miracle in my case, and cured me after many years of suffering. I do not think their equal is to be obtained.

Dr. Clarke's Little Red Pills are a positive and certain cure for la grippe, rheumatism, asthma, paralysis, catarrh, eczema, coughs, backache, indigestion, all stomach and liver troubles, female complaints, even when the diseases have been standing for many years, the most stubborn cases will yield. Price 50 cents per box. For sale by Ormond & Walsh. The Canada Chemical Company will forfeit $10 for any case that these pills do not help.

Dr. Clarke's Sure Cure for Catarrh, and Dr Clarke's Sure Cure for Eczema, same price. $10 will be paid for any case they will not permanently cure.

Don't Allow Operation for Cancer

There is a simpler, safer and more effective Method of Treatment.

Dr. J. C. Oliver, of Cincinnati, Ohio, U.S.A., in a paper he read before the Ohio State Medical Society, May 1896, said: "I have operated in a considerable number of cases of Cancer recently, and with one exception all have died within fourteen months after the operation."

This statement of a prominent Surgeon, should make any one suffering from cancer, hesitate before submitting to operation and consider carefully the evidence offered on behalf of the new Constitutional remedy, which cures Cancers, Tumors and all malignant growths, without the necessity of operation. It is a simple vegetable medicine that searches out and destroys the cancer growths, completely eradicates the disease, and at the same time, builds up and invigorates the system.

—There was no police court yesterday.

—The market to-day should be well attended.

—The water in the river is very high at present.

—The Finance, and Fire, Water and Light Committees met last night.

—Adam Forepaugh and Sells Bros. circus will arrive in Peterborough in June.

—The Otonabee smallpox patient has been isolated and the house quarantined.

—The brickwork in connection with the Cereal Co's. elevator, is being rapidly pushed forward.

—Mr. J. D. Tully has added a new show-case of the "silent salesman" type to his well-appointed store.

—When asked yesterday, how the new dam at the locks was progressing, Mr. Collins, the genial lockmaster, remarked, "It is out of sight."

—Farmers state that the fall wheat and clover has come through the winter remarkably well, and a large harvest is promised.

—A Montreal traveller says that Peterborough can boast of more pretty and attractive young ladies than any place in Canada, of twice its size.

—Mr. A. E. Micks has leased the store in the market block recently occupied by Gosella & Rose, and will open out in business in a few days.

—Miss Mearce, a returned missionary from Japan, will deliver an address to the Children's Mission Band of St. Luke's church, this afternoon at 2 o'clock.

—Hicks & Co. have secured a contract for supplying 100,000 feet of maple flooring to Mr. Langford for the Cereal Works. This is the largest contract of its kind ever given in town.

—Mr. Thos. Barrie, the popular furrier and gents' furnisher, believes in the ornamental as well as the useful, and has added an elegant new show case of the "silent salesman" style to his store.

—The Conservatives of West Peterborough are to meet in convention this afternoon in order to select a victim to lead the forlorn hope in this riding. Mr. J. W. Garvin, it is said, has been asked to run, but has declined. Fact is, John has learned a thing or two in the bitter school of experience, and is a wiser man than [illegible] four years ago.

—Miss Bessie Ward, who is leaving town in a few days, was the recipient of a beautiful cake dish from the members of Mrs. Stubbs' class in the Methodist Sunday school, of which she was an energetic member. The presentation was made by Miss Ethel Miller.

—A statement presented at a meeting of the Golf Colts showed that there was a surplus of about $20 after paying all expenses in connection with the ball given in the opera house on Tuesday night. The receipts were in excess of any previous ball given in the opera house.

—Mr. R. M. Roy has purchased the brick residence recently occupied by Mrs. W. C. McCrea, corner of Sheridan and Elizabeth streets, Ashburnham, and is having the place fitted up with all modern improvements. He will move into his new residence about May 15.

—A Toronto concern wants this great family journal to advertise and take fit medicine for pay. We might take cordwood, telegraph poles, or condition powders in exchange, but this g.f.j. won't have fits just to fill up the paper with advertising.

—Many residents are complaining bitterly of the damage done by boys who amuse themselves by stone-throwing. Several expensive windows have been wrecked lately, in this way, and the victims threaten to invoke the aid of the police unless the practice is stopped at once.

Organizer Goes Home

Mr. Hugh Stevenson, the genial organizer for The International Typographical Union, left for Toronto last evening. Mr. Stevenson won the respect of all with whom he came in contact, by the manner in which he performed his duties in connection with the settlement of the matters at issue between the employing printers, and the local typographical union.

The Fortnightly Club

Prof. Short, Professor of Political Economy, of Toronto University, will deliver an address on "Trusts" at the meeting of the Fortnightly Club in the Y.M.C.A. on the evening of Friday, April 11th. As Prof. Short is a good speaker and also well versed on these subjects his address will undoubtedly be very interesting and instructive.

Are Meeting with Success

Messrs. Kells and Knapman, promoter of the new skating rink are meeting with splendid success in their canvas for stock. Almost every one they approach is willing to subscribe for a small amount at least. At the way the stock is selling it will only be a short time until sufficient money has been promised to warrant the company in calling for tender for the erection of the building.

Funeral of the Late Mrs. Sprogle

The funeral of the late Mrs. Joseph Sprawle, took place yesterday afternoon at three o'clock from the residence of her son-in-law, Mr. John Haggart, Brock street. A large number of friends of the deceased lady attended the funeral as a mark of respect for one so highly esteemed and so widely known. Interment took place at the Little Lake Cemetery.

Nervous, Sleepless and Exhausted

Not sick enough to lay up, but you are out of sorts, blood is weak, nerves unstrung, kidneys deranged, vitality is low. You should take Ferrozone at once; it will enrich, strengthen and purify the blood, invigorate and pacify the nerves, and increase your energy, vitality and power. Ferrozone will renew your appetite and digestion, make you sleep soundly—in fact will make you well. Try Ferrozone. Price 50c., or six boxes for $2.50; at Ormond & Walsh's.

Lost

LOST—Red Cocker Spaniel pup, about four months old, answering to the name of "Tuck." Any person harboring him after this notice will be prosecuted.—T. H. G. DENNE.

LOST—A white Persian lamb collar, in the west end of the town. Finder will be rewarded by leaving same at the Times Office.

An Up-to-Date Jeweller

One of the brightest and most attractive windows in town is that of Mr. Alex. Gibson's elegantly appointed jewellry store at 388 George st.

Mr. Gibson may well feel proud of the success he has attained, and of his handsome and up-to-date place of business. His store is bright, excellently lighted, and furnished with all the appointments required in a first-class jeweller's store. His stock is new and complete, and comprises all the latest novelties in jewellry, both gold and silver, watches, clocks, rings, chains, vases, statuary, etc., the arrangement of the different articles being unique and artistic.

Mr. Gibson is a clear headed, energetic business man, courteous and obliging, and is decidedly popular with his many customers.

While his stock is of the very highest quality, prices are as low as possible, much lower in fact, than in much larger centres.

FLOWER BEDS IN THE CHOIR

To the Editor of The Times.

Dear Sir,—The question of a proper dress for mixed choirs has always been an interesting one. Mr. A. Blakeley an the authorities of Sherbourne St. Methodist Church seem to have solved the question in a very satisfactory manner. There the ladies and gentlemen are robed in black and the uniform effect obtained is most pleasant. Whether the ladies of Peterborough choirs would be willing to give up their "pictures" and other "creations" in the way of head gear is the is the question?

But those interested will be glad to inspect the large photographs of the above Toronto Choir, that are being exhibited in the windows of Madill's Drug Store, Salisbury's and Routley's Stores.

Yours Truly,
UNIFORMITY.

A PAINFUL ACCIDENT

Mr. Harry Cavanagh Met with a Serious Accident Yesterday

Mr. Harry Cavanagh, of the Phelan House, met with a very severe accident yesterday morning about seven o'clock. He was in the bar and was opening a bottle of Lemon Sour, when it exploded and caused severe injures. A piece of glass struck him in the eye and lodged there. Drs. McGrath and McCullough were summoned and after treating the patient to relieve the pain had him removed to St. Joseph's Hospital, where an operation was performed. It is thought the sight of the right eye will not be affected.

DISGUISED CATARRH.

A Stealthy, Insidious, Weakening Enemy to Women.

REV. HARRIET R. EDWARDS, CLINTON, IA.

Rev. Harriet R. Edwards in a recent letter from Mt. Pleasant Park, Clinton, Ia., writes:

"I have found that Peruna is a wonderful medicine to use in diseases peculiar to women. It quickly and permanently restores health and vigor and acts as a natural tonic to a worn-out system. I have so far never observed a case which was not greatly aided by its use."—REV. DR. H. R. EDWARDS.

THERE are a multitude of women, especially housewives, and all other women obliged to be on their feet constantly, who are wretched beyond description, simply because their strength and vitality is sapped away by catarrhal discharges from the pelvic organs. These women get up in the morning tired, drag themselves through their daily duties tired, only to go to bed at night as tired as before.

Peruna is such a perfect specific for each case that when patients have once used it they can never be induced to quit it until they are permanently cured. It begins to relieve the disagreeable symptoms at once. The backache ceases, the trembling knees are strengthened, the appetite restored, the digestion made perfect, the dull headache is stopped and the weakening drains are gradually cured. These results certainly follow a course of treatment with Peruna.

Jos. B. Crowley, Congressman from Illinois, writes from Robinson, Ill.:

"Mrs. Crowley has taken a number of bottles of Peruna on account of nervous troubles. It has proven a strong tonic and lasting cure. I can cheerfully recommend it."—Jos. B. Crowley.

Mrs. Wm. Hetrick, Kennard, Washington county, Neb., writes:

"I am fifty-six years old and have not felt well since the Change of Life began ten years ago. I was in misery somewhere most of the time. My back was very weak, and my flesh so tender it hurt me to lean against the back of a chair. I had pain under my shoulder-blades, in the small of my back and hips. I sometimes wished myself out of this world. Had hot and cold spells, dizziness, and trembling of the limbs, and was losing flesh all the time.

"After following your directions and taking Peruna I now feel like a different person."—Mrs. Wm. Hetrick.

Barbara Alberty, corner Seventh and Walnut streets, Appleton, Wis., writes as follows in regard to Peruna:

"For years I have suffered with backache and severe pains in the side. I doctored so much that I became discouraged.

"A school friend told me how very much Peruna had benefited her and I sent out for a bottle, which did more to relieve me than all the other medicine I had ever taken.

Barbara Alberty.

"I used it faithfully for two weeks and it completely cured me. I have not had any pains since, anywhere, but feel like a new woman. I am truly thankful for what Peruna has done for me."—Barbara Alberty.

Mrs. D. W. Mason, 502 Dauphine street, New Orleans, La., writes:

"I have been taking your Peruna and Manalin and can cheerfully recommend it to all those suffering with the same trouble that I was. I have been suffering for the past two years with female weakness, palpitation of the heart, stomach, kidney and liver disorder, and above all a dreadful cough with smothering spells. I was completely run down.

"After I had taken one bottle of Peruna and a few doses of your Manalin, I could sleep soundly, my heart was better, my cough left me, it acted immediately upon my nerves, and after taking four bottles according to your directions, I was entirely cured of all my troubles.

"I can truthfully say that there is nothing to equal your Peruna and Manalin. I was a different women after taking the second bottle. It is without a doubt the best medicine in the world. Language fails to express my gratitude for this cure. May God bless you."—Mrs. D. W. Mason.

If you do not derive prompt and satisfactory results from the use of Peruna, write at once to Dr. Hartman, giving a full statement of your case and he will be pleased to give you his valuable advice gratis.

Address Dr. Hartman, President of The Hartman Sanitarium, Columbus, Ohio.

Peruna can be obtained for $1.00 a bottle at all first-class drug stores in Canada. "The Ills of Life," which can be secured at all up-to-date drug stores and upon request is sent free to all, gives a short description of all catarrhal diseases. Address Dr. Hartman, Columbus, Ohio, U. S. A.

Machine weighs 17 pounds. It is more wonderful than a sewing machine, just as durable, and higher speed.

To Work at Their Homes
Under the Direction of The GLASGOW WOOLLEN CO.
37 MELINDA ST., TORONTO,

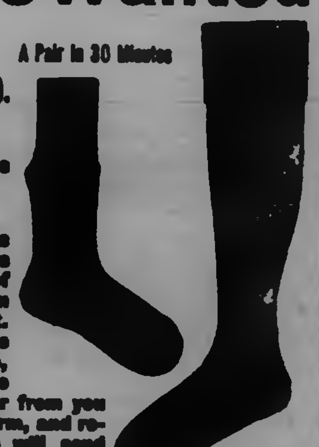
To Fill Large Contracts—Good Wages Easily Earned.

A Pair in 30 Minutes



We want a few more workers in this locality, at once, and in order to secure your co-operation without the delay of correspondence, we herewith explain our full plan in this advertisement. The work is simple, and the Machine is easily operated, and with the Guide, requires no teacher. If you wish to join our staff of Workers let us hear from you promptly with the Contract, order form, and remittance, as a guarantee, and we will send machine and outfit to begin work at once.

OUR METHOD OF DOING BUSINESS

We wish to secure the services of families to do knitting for us in their homes. Our method is the same as adopted in England. We are the introducers of this plan and the largest knitting concern in Canada.

After long experience, we have been able to produce an Automatic Machine by which all kinds of seamless knitting is now done by our Family Machine, thereby enabling anyone of ordinary intelligence to quickly learn to do the work from the Instruction Guide. All we require is that you use the machine according to directions. The Machine being made expressly for this purpose, and the operation so simple, it cannot possibly make a mistake in its work.

The great demand now is for Bicycle Stockings, Woodmen's Socks, and Motormen's Mittens, and as we are unable to supply the demand, have taken this method of advertising for more help.

The large export trade to the North-west Territories, British Columbia, and the British Colonies, furnishes an unlimited demand for our goods, and, with the combined cooperation of the many families we are employing, together with the large amount of knitting we are able to turn out, by which we save rents, insurance, interest on capital, etc., enables us to undersell any manufacturers of this class of goods, and we have sale for all the knitting we can have turned out.

The price we pay for finished bicycle stockings is $20.00 per hundred, or at the rate of 20c per pair; woodmen's socks, 1c, and motormen's mittens, 12c a pair. All other work in proportion to size.

The machine can be operated by any one of a family, and at our prices any energetic family should be able to sustain themselves comfortably, and in time be a source of independent comfort.

Our plan is to send out each machine to beginners with a sock or stocking partially knitted, and remaining in the machine ready to be continued, and also enough yarn to knit one pair of sample socks or stockings and a simple and complete Instruction Guide, showing how the work is to be done. When the samples have been finished and returned to us satisfactory, we send a quantity of yarn, which you knit and return likewise when finished. We prepay charges on all work one way, and our workers pay return charges. The work, as we have stated, is simple and rapidly done, the machine having a capacity of ten thousand stitches a minute. We have many persons now in our employ who can knit from twenty-five to thirty pairs of socks or stockings a day, and where the time of a family is devoted to the work, you can readily see that $15.00 or $20.00 per week can be easily earned.

We furnish our workers all the materials, yarn, etc., free, and everything that is necessary for the work. We are furnishing the machines only for the exclusive use of those desiring to take employment with us, who must, in order to become a member, send us this Contract Order Form, properly signed by them, and at least one good reference, and remittance accordingly, to give us the necessary assurance that the quantities of valuable yarn we may send from time to time will not be wasted or misappropriated. Our interests are mutual, and this confidence must be established if we are to succeed. We guarantee fair dealing and prompt payment for work, so do not ask us to deviate from our terms, as we cannot make a distinction with one and not another; besides, we are doing an extensive business, and must be governed by business principles.

The manufactured price of the machine is $15, and positively will not be sold to any others than those who will agree to do knitting for us.

If at any time after you commence, and have done an amount of work equal to the purchase price, and wish to discontinue, we will take back machine and refund the amount paid for same, after deducting cost of our expense only.

There is a Large Demand by the Trade for this class of work. Our workers can depend upon it year after year, and if you engage with us (whole or spare time) we will keep you supplied with work as long as you do it satisfactorily for us and return it promptly. We entrust our workers with large quantities of valuable yarn, and as we give references as to our honesty and integrity, we must ask you to do the same, in order that we may know with whom we are dealing.

We have, in as brief a manner as possible, endeavored to show you what our work is, and we simply say as to the machine, it is just what we represent it to be, and will positively do everything we claim for it, or refund the money. Each machine, securely packed with an outfit, is set up for work, thoroughly tested, and a sock or stocking partially knitted before boxing and shipping. Should you decide to engage with us, it will be necessary to send us Cash Contract Order Form, properly signed by you, and at least one good reference, together with the remittance, accordingly, upon receipt of which we will forward machine and outfit ready to commence.

Respectfully yours,

GLASGOW WOOLLEN CO., 37 Melinda Street, Toronto

Our References—Express Companies, Banks, or Toronto Business Houses.

If you wish to examine the machine and see the material before undertaking the work, you can do so by sending $3.00 as a guarantee of good faith, and to defray expense of shipping, and we will send everything to your nearest express company, leaving a balance of twelve dollars to pay the agent and 25 cents for the return charges on the money to us.

We are so frequently and unnecessarily asked if one can learn to knit without a teacher. We say, Yes; it requires no teacher; any person of ordinary intelligence who can read the Instruction Guide can learn to knit at once.

ORDER FORM

11 CANADIANS KILLED AND TWO REPORTED KILLED AND 40 WOUNDED

Pte. Milligan, of the Peterborough Contingent, and a Captain of the 46th Battalion, Slain in the Engagement

Ottawa, April 7.—This has been a day of anxious waiting. Not since the day of Paardeberg has such local interest been manifested in the news from South Africa. Every effort has been made by the Times to get the full details of the engagement and the list of wounded and killed. Despatches were received up until 4.30 this morning.

CANADIANS PROMINENT

Pretoria April 7.—The British losses in the engagement in the neighborhood of Hart's River (in the southwestern extremity of the Transvaal), March 31, were three officers and twenty-four men killed, and sixteen officers and one hundred and thirty-one men wounded. The Boers admit that they lost one hundred and thirty-seven men, killed or wounded.

The action occurred at Doornbelt Farm, a few miles south of the scene of General Delarey's defeat of General Methuen. The Boers, who were commanded by Generals Kemp and Potgieter, attacked with great determination, but the Canadian contingent, which was the last to arrive in South Africa from Canada, and two squadrons of Yeomanry, under Colonel Cookson, and the artillery and Mounted Rifles under Colonel Keir, presented such a stout front that the burghers were finally forced to retreat.

The casualty list shows that the Second Canadian Mounted Rifles had 4 officers wounded, 14 men killed and 40 men wounded.

Names of the Canadians Killed.

Special Despatches to The Times.

Ottawa, Ont., April 7.—

Chamberlain'S Message to Canada

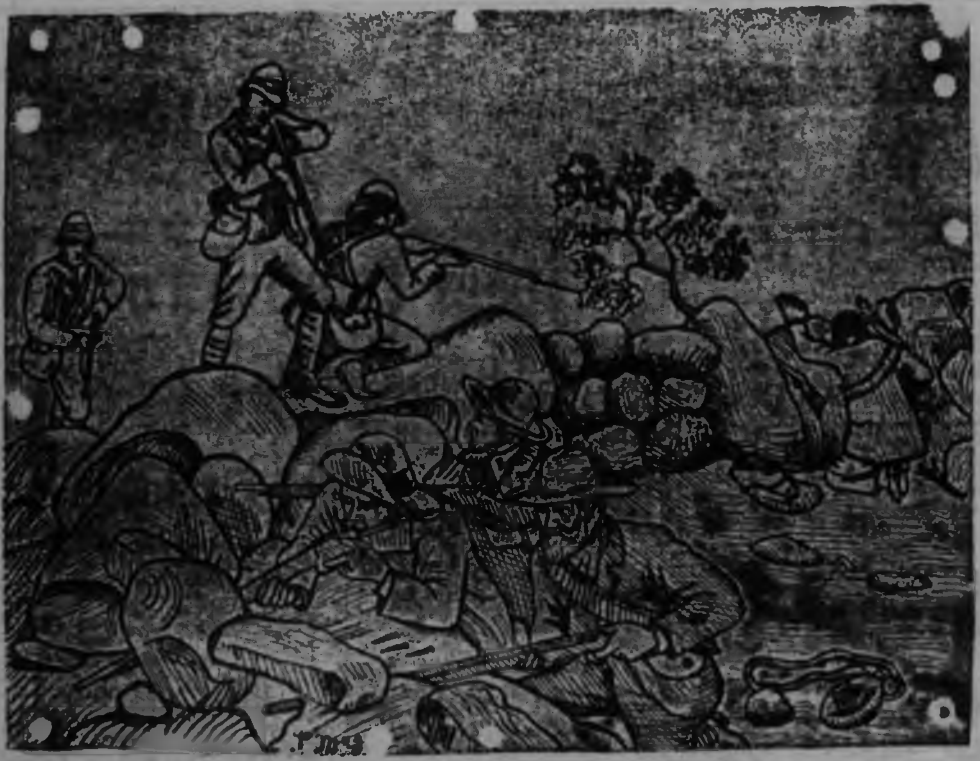
CHAMBERLAIN'S MESSAGE TO CANADA.

Ottawa, April 7.—His Excellency has received the following cablegram from the Colonial Secretary:

"Mr. Chamberlain to Lord Minto:

"London, April 7.—I congratulate Dominion on heroic conduct of Canadian Rifles in action with Delarey. Deeply regret heavy casualties, and desire to express heartfelt sympathy with relatives of those who have given their lives to maintain splendid traditions of Canadian valor.

(Signed) CHAMBERLAIN.



Canadians Forcing the Boers Back at Doornbalt Farm

CANADIAN GALLANTRY PRAISED.

London, April 7.—The gallantry of the Canadian troops at the engagement with the Boers near Hart's River, Southwestern Transvaal, March 31, attracts unstinted praise from the British press. These comments form a striking contrast to the recently printed notification that the attention of Lord Roberts, the Commander-in-Chief, had been drawn to various cases where colonials, who had been awarded commissions, were treated as inferiors by the regular officers and otherwise made to feel that they were only members of the mess by sufferance. Lord Roberts, it was semi-officially announced, was making an investigation, and intended to inflict the most serious penalties on any British officers found guilty of such conduct. Privately, and in letters to the press, many colonial officers have frequently complained that "they are good enough at the front, but are not wanted at a Cape Town hotel or in a London drawing-room

PAPERS APPRECIATE IT.

The newspapers publish the war news with headings in which the gallant conduct of the 2nd Canadian Mounted Rifles in the recent fighting at Hart's River is paid tribute. The Daily Telegraph describes it as the "Canadians' Valor"; The Daily Chronicle, "Splendid Canadian Valor"; The Standard, "Gallantry of the Canadians"; The Globe, "Bravery of the Canadians," and The Westminster Gazette "Death Rather Than Surrender."

A letter, written three weeks ago, was received in Toronto on Saturday from Frank Bushfield of the third contingent. He states that the regiment had received orders to go to the front in charge of "a very large convoy."

This explains how it was that the Canadian contingent was the defensive rather than the offensive party. The Boers seem to have made their attack, sidestepped, and got away.

ANOTHER SEVERE FIGHT

London, April 7.—The South African casualty list, issued this evening, shows that the losses sustained by the Second Dragoon Guards in their sharp rearguard action with the Boers, near Boschman's Kop, during the evening of March 31, were severe. Two officers were killed and five were wounded, and eighteen men were killed and fifty-eight wounded.

CRIMES OF AUSTRALIANS

Plymouth, Eng., April 7.—A correspondent to-day had an interview with a British officer who had just returned from the Cape.

The officer expressed the greatest surprise that the scandal, charging Australian officers in South Africa with the murder of inoffensive Boers, has been so long suppressed.

The officer told your correspondent that there are 21 distinct charges against Australian officers, including seven counts for murder of women and children.

DID SPLENDIDLY.

Ottawa, April 6.—General O'Grady Haly received a cable to-day from Col Evans, commanding the Second Canadian Mounted Infantry, stating that the Canadian troops at Kleinhardt's fight, behaved splendidly.

GREAT INDEPENDENCE DAY

The Greeks Will Celebrate the Occasion in Various Parts of the World

Special Telegram to The Times.

New York, April 7—To-day is the "independence day" of the Greeks, the anniversary of the defeat of the Turks, April 7, 1821, which resulted in Grecian independence, and will be observed by Hellenes in every part of the world. The Greek colony of New York will hold exercises in various public halls on the lower east side, which are lavishly decorated with Greek flags and emblems. The most important festival will be held at the Greek church, where high mass will be celebrated, and national anthems and patriotic addresses made by prominent Greeks of the city.

A Great Sufferer Cured

Mr. Benjamin Dillon, of Leeds, Ont., was cured of muscular rheumatism by Polson's Nerviline, and says: "I feel my duty is to proclaim Polson's Nerviline as an infallible cure for rheumatism; it cured me after 20 years suffering, and nothing I know of can equal its penetrating power. Nerviline simply has no equal in quickly relieving and curing rheumatism, neuralgia, sciatica, and lumbago. A trial will convince anyone. Price 25c.

ANARCHISTS AGAIN AT WORK

Caught Distributing Circulars Expressing Sympathy with Czolgosz

New York, April 6.—An attempt of Anarchists to distribute pamphlets at the Altgeld memorial meeting in this city brought prompt suppression at the hands of the police. Three men were arrested. When Acting-Captain Churchill arrived at the hall he saw men and women distributing Anarchistic pamphlets making excuses for the assassin of President McKinley, and attacking President Roosevelt. Captain Churchill drove these people from the hall. When Harry Hirshkoff and Solomon Heller persisted in distributing the circulars on the sidewalks they were arrested. Later when Solomon Willheim called at the station house and claimed to be a friend of Hirshkoff he was recognized as also having distributed pamphlets, and he was sent to join his friend in the cell room. Emma Goldman sat in the most prominent part of the hall, but was kept under surveillance, and did not speak during the meeting.

Weather Notes

Probs for to-day.—Fair and mild.

WILL BE RETURNED

The Provincial Secretary States That Mr. Ross Will Sweep Ontario

Hon. J. R. Stratton, Provincial Secretary, was in town on Saturday, and in conversation with The Times, stated that everything pointed to a return of the Ross Government. He believed that the province would be unwilling to make a change just now.

As regards East Peterborough, he had no fears as to the result. Mr. Anderson was very popular, and was gaining every day, while his own riding would no doubt keep up its past reputation.

Mr. Stratton leaves this morning for North Bay, where he will deliver an address.

BASKETBALL.

A good game of basketball was played at the Y.M.C.A. Saturday evening, between the Harriers and the Business College team. At half-time the score stood, 13-4 for Harriers, but in the second half B. C's reversed matters, and finished victorious by a score of 25—18.

BOER WAS SHOT IN RETALIATION

Australian Officer's Version of Alleged Shooting of Prisoners

VERY IMPRESSIVE CEREMONIES.

Funeral of Cecil Rhodes—Schalkburger in Communication with Steyn — Leaders Must Capitulate to Negotiate

London, April 7.—The War Office has issued no official statement regarding the court-martial and shooting of Australian officers for misbehaviour.

Lieut. Wilton, one of the Australians, said to have been concerned in the shooting of the Boers, arrived at Southampton yesterday. He is under sentence of imprisonment for life for complicity in the matter. His story of the affair differs materially from that published in The Morning Leader. He says that an Australian officer named Hunt was captured and murdered by the Boers. Later on, when a Boer was captured wearing Hunt's uniform he was tried by drumhead court-martial and shot. The Australians believed their treatment of the man just and equitable, under the circumstances, and Wilton is optimistic regarding the action of the War Office in his case, when it is duly considered. He denies the report of the indiscriminate slaughter of ten Boer prisoners.

TO HIS LAST SLEEP.

Cape Town, April 5.—The funeral cortege of the great financier and statesman, Cecil Rhodes, yesterday afternoon, was most impressive. The body was borne on the "Long Cecil" gun carriage, used in the defence of Kimberley, through streets lined with thousands of troops and spectators. All business houses were closed during the funeral, and the city generally draped in mourning.

Dr. Jameson, Sir Gordon Sprigg, and six other celebrities were the pall-bearers, Col. Frank Rhodes and his brothers were the chief mourners; they walked along bareheaded in rear of the gun carriage bearing the corpse.

The general service held at the cathedral on the arrival of the cortege was very imposing. The Archbishop made an address, during which he declared that Mr. Rhodes had faults, of which he probably, was as conscious as anyone, but, nevertheless, he was a great man. Though not a great church-goer, continued the Archbishop, Mr. Rhodes was essentially religious.

After the service the body was placed on a special train bound for Buluwayo, one thousand miles north. The family, the executors of the will, and others accompanied the remains to Rhodesia.

LEADERS COMMUNICATE

London, April 6.—Pretoria despatches indicate that Schalkburger is now in communication with former President Steyn. A report of the result of their meeting is now awaited.

LEADERS MUST CAPITULATE.

Amsterdam, April 6.—Referring to the reported conference of Schalkburger and Steyn the Boer Centre at Brussels says that the British demand that all the Boer leaders shall capitulate before the negotiations with Acting President Schalkburger are opened, will not be acceded to until England guarantees a basis upon which the negotiations will bear promise of success. The Boers will remain firm on the question of their independence.

LIVELY LAKEFIELD

The Steamers Getting Ready For Summer Work—Other Items of News

—The Strickland Canoe Co. has had a busy winter, and many orders are being received daily for their splendid boats. The Company shipped a lot of canoes to England last week.

—The Cement Works is running full blast, and turning out 400 barrels per day. It is said that the Company propose to develop more power at No. 6 dam, on which it has an option from the Government.

—Messrs. E. R. Tate and F. J. Lillicrap are erecting a new mill in the village, with a capacity of 15,000 feet per day. The mill will be ready for work in June.

—The Stony Lake fleet of steamers are being put in shape for the season. Work has commenced on the Empire, the Empress and the Alert. The Sunbeam has been sold to a Lindsay firm, and will be used on the upper lakes.

—There is a considerable quantity of wood to be brought to Peterborough when the canal is opened to Auburn.

—The popular steamer Majestic is being overhauled at Young's Point, and will be ready for work in a few days.

—The ice is out of the river between Lakefield and Young's Point, and is likely to disappear in Clear and Stony Lakes in a day or two.

PRESBYTERY OF PETERBORO

No Appointment Made to Keene Presbyterian Church

The Presbytery of Peterborough met on Thursday morning for the purpose deciding on a minister to take charge of Keene Presbyterian Church, rendered vacant by the death of Rev. Dr. Andrews. Some time ago Rev. Mr. Kennawin of Omemee preached in the church and he was asked to be an applicant for the pulpit. This he consented to do but afterwards withdrew his name. In the meantime the ballot had been distributed and the vote was taken. The Presbytery decided that as Mr. Kennawin had withdrawn his name it was not fair to the others and consequently a new ballot will be taken.

CONSERVATIVE COHORTS PREPARE FOR THE COMING BATTLE AT THE POLLS

Major J. W. Miller Nominated at a Meeting Saturday Afternoon--A Ratification Meeting in the Evening

The annual meeting of the West Peterborough Liberal-Conservative Association was held on Saturday afternoon in the opera house. The principal business before the meeting was the election of officers for the current year, and the selection of a candidate to contest the riding at the coming elections for the Legislative Assembly.

President T. E. Bradburn was in the chair. The attendance was very large and enthusiastic. Supporting the president were Messrs. J. W. Garvin, Jas. Kendry, M.P.; L. M. Hayes, J. W. Green, G. W. Fitzgerald, W. H. Moore, J. H. Burnham, A. P. Pousette, Jos. Milburn, J. W. Miller, Jas. Stevenson, ex-M.P.; R. Fisher, of South Monaghan; W. S. Robinson and a number of others.

On calling the meeting to order, Mr. Bradburn explained that the objects of the convention were to elect officers for the coming year and to nominate a candidate to contest the coming provincial elections.

ELECTION OF OFFICERS.

The first duty of the meeting would be to elect the officers of the association. The results were as follows:

President—Mr. T. E. Bradburn.
1st Vice-Pres.—Mr. H. LeBrun.
2nd Vice-Pres.—Mr. George W. Fitzgerald.
3rd Vice-Pres.—Mr. John W. Greene.
Township Vice-Presidents—
Smith—Mr. Joseph Milburn.
Ennismore—Mr. E. O'Connor.
S. Monaghan—Mr. R. Fisher.
N. Monaghan—Mr. G. W. Bennett.
Village of Lakefield—Mr. J. F. Lillicrap.
Townships of Harvey and Galway—Mr. Archie Johnston.
Sec.-Treas.—Mr. F. D. McKay.
Asst.-Sec.—Mr. C. H. Bradburn.

CONFIDENCE IN WHITNEY.

Mr. Geo. W. Fitzgerald moved the following resolution:

"That we, the Liberal-Conservatives of West Peterborough, in convention assembled, desire to take advantage of the opportunity to tender to J. P. Whitney, Esq., M.P.P., an expression of our continued confidence in him and his course as leader of the Liberal Conservatives of Ontario. We are fully aware that if he had received what was his own at that past general election if the verdict of the people had not been thwarted by the dishonest acts of an organized gang of conservatives and election crooks, he would have been the premier of the province during the past four years. The magnificent record he has made as the head of the conservative forces, the ability and power exhibited by him as the leader of the loyal opposition in the legislature, his fearless arraignment of the wrong doing and the evils which exist in connection with the management of provincial affairs, and in the systems that have been built up by a party too long in office, have won all our admiration and unqualified approval; we can give expression to this with the satisfaction of knowing that now the present provincial administration is compelled to go again to the people, nothing can stay the verdict, and that Mr. Whitney and his colleagues shall be placed in charge of our provincial affairs and in a position to promote the reforms so much needed in Ontario; and that he will be spared to take charge of this important task to serve his country for many years to come, is our earnest wish."

Mr. L. M. Hayes seconded the resolution, in a brief but forcible speech.

Speaking for the younger men, he said: "We have lived all our lives in the cold shades of opposition, not sharing in the good things that the government has had the disposal of. We can now look forward to a change, and confidently expect a Conservative victory in this great province."

THE NOMINATIONS

The nomination of a candidate was then taken up. Mr. J. W. Miller said he had great pleasure in again nominating Mr. J. W. Garvin.

Mr. Garvin contested the election four years ago, and had put up a clean, hard fight. The party had been unsuccessful, but nevertheless were undaunted.

In seconding the nomination Mr. A. P. Pousette said he had been actively engaged with Mr. Garvin during the campaign and could assure the electors that the work had been thoroughly done. Up to three or four days before the election, the Liberal candidate was a badly scared man. Considerable money had been sent to town, and the wavering were bought up. The corrupt practices in West Elgin, had been repeated here to such an extent that Mr. Stratton had been returned with an alleged majority.

Mr. Garvin thanked his mover and seconder, and the large and representative gathering for the enthusiastic manner in which his nomination had been received. It was impossible for him to accept the nomination, which he very much regretted. Had it not been for the corrupt practices at the last election he would have been elected by a large majority. (Cheers). During the last campaign the enthusiasm had been intense. The opera house was packed to the doors every meeting and large numbers had to be refused admittance. He regretted that there were so many voters who would sell their votes for a few dollars. The candidate who will stoop to buy votes can easily be elected. This he would not do. If he could not be elected by fair means he would not accept the election at all. "I am reluctantly obliged to refuse the nomination so enthusiastically tendered," he said. "I am comparatively a stranger in this riding and not as well known as many of those who are on the platform to-day. I believe Mr. Whitney will be returned to power at this election. At the last election Mr. Whitney was really elected but the ballot boxes were stuffed and the election stolen." He said the electors would hear from him again as he was going out on the public platform and work his best for the Conservative candidate.

MR. JAMES KENDRY, M.P.

stated that he came before them to propose a name that was a house-give the old boys the snake.' So they hold word in town. That name is Maj. Miller, better known perhaps as "Wes Miller." Major Miller had always taken a deep interest in the policy of the Conservative party. The policy of Mr. Whitney was the best policy for the country, and he felt sure that Mr. Whitney would be elected to lead the government. No government should be in power for 30 years as in that time they came to think they owned the country. In the Major they had a candidate whose career had been one of life long honesty and a man who should receive the hearty support of the electors. They have a hard fight before them, and he was sure the battle would be fought honestly and above board. The policy of abuse was one which resulted in more harm than good. He asked the young men to rally to the standard and the old men to stand by the colors as they had done in the past.

The nomination was strongly endorsed by Mr. Joseph Milburn.

MAJOR MILLER ACCEPTS.

Major Miller was given a very hearty reception. He thanked the nominator and seconder and the members for their confidence in him and said he would endeavor to deserve it. It is a time when such a nomination is an honor. He challenged contradiction when he said that the government has carried on a trade of money changing, and office mongering in Ontario. No man can look back over the thirty years of Liberal rule, and not say 'thank God, there is a party that says they shall be called to account.' The Ross Government is a government of expediency. It is anarchy to find fault with the party in power. With the history of the broad, open corruption of Mr. Ross in view, he is no much of a man who will not say he is proud to be a Conservative.

"It used to be thought that Jacques Cartier, had something to do with the discovery of Canada, but he hadn't. Sir Wilfred Laurier discovered this country, and Mr. Ross is his lieutenant. He went forth one morning on a voyage of discovery, and lo! he discovered New Ontario! True, it is not much of a place, but Mr. Ross said, 'We can make a few votes out of it.' So he decided to call on the old boys of '66 and to give them 160 acres of land each in New Ontario. The men of '66 didn't want their 160 acres. They didn't ask for it. The government said, 'we must keep the timber for some of our own pets, but we'll gave us 160 acres of rocks each, though they didn't give us gatling guns to shoot in the seed with. The men of '66 were brave and honorable men who gladly, freely left their vacations to defend their country.

"These were the men, who, in days of danger dark,
While ringed by hostile foes;
When every nation was an ark
To those who wished us woe,
Let traitors with their hate depart,
Disloyalty demur,
We were all Britain's, heart to heart
We would not part with her."

If some of them could come back among us to-day, and witness the extent to which corruption prevails in the government of the province, they would return to their graves in disgust.

The speaker asked for a square, clean, manly campaign. He would spread no scandals, but would put up a hot, hard fight. He wished to say that he knew, and could put his finger on the men who handled the money in the last election, and he would say to them that if they attempt to repeat their tactics in the coming contest he would see that they would "wear striped suits, and eat the king's skilly."

In conclusion Major Miller asked for the hearty support of the electorate He is a poor Irishman, he remarked, who cannot stand one defeat.

The major's remarks were received with loud and long continued applause.

Several others spoke, heartily endorsing Major Miller's candidature.

Mr. Pousette moved, seconded by Mr. J. W. Miller, that a hearty vote of thanks be tendered to Mr. T. E. Bradburn, who for a number of years had been the efficient president of the association, and for the policy he had pursued in advancing the interests of the party.

The meeting then adjourned until 8 p.m.

THE RATIFICATION MEETING.

The audience which assembled to hear the Conservative speakers in the Opera House, on Saturday evening, was certainly large and enthusiastic enough to satisfy the candidate and his immediate supporters. The hall was filled to overflowing, every seat being occupied, and the aisles and passages being held by late-comers, who were fain to be content with standing room. Every speaker was well received, Major Miller, the candidate, receiving an especially enthusiastic and cordial hearing, which augured well

THE RUSSIAN BEAR'S DESIGNS IN THE EAST

It Is Believed That Serious Trouble is Brewing Between the Great Powers

Special Telegram to The Times.

London April 7.—The outlook in the east is not brightening, according to late despatches.

The Post says:—The alacrity and unanimity with which the French Parliament voted an appropriation of half a million francs to defray the cost of the coming visit of President Loubet to St. Petersburg may be taken as an indication of the zeal manifested by the people of France in the alliance with Russia, and of a strong desire to cement the proclaimed friendship which binds the two nations. It is trite but true to say that "politics make strange bedfellows;" but this policy proves that in great affairs of state diplomatic relations may be cemented between nations whose normal political conditions would seem to prevent such a close union. Nothing, apparently, could be more incongruous, on its face, than an alliance between a free republic and one of the most autocratic governments in the world; and yet the material interests of both, which will be given mutual protection in emergency, are such that no one doubts that the Dual Alliance in Europe is based on absolute sincerity, and that the active foe of one nation will become the foe of both. Hence, in view of the present complications, when it is announced that a personal conference is to be held by the heads of these two great nations, the world's interest becomes aroused, and speculations naturally follow that it is safe to assume that extraordinary affairs of state have arisen to justify the long journey of the President of France to the Russian capital, in order that he and the Czar may formulate a policy in line with their interests that will fit in with the complicated situation in the Far East. All the signs seem to indicate that the Anglo-Japanese alliance, if it has been formed with a view of expelling Russia from Manchuria, will not bring about that result without a clash at arms. England has no army available for service in China, unless by ending the Boer war she releases her troops from South Africa, and it is hardly likely that Japan will undertake to measure swords single handed with Russia in the vast empire. The situation does not afford opportunities for a naval contest, in which the great fleets of England and Japan might make themselves effectively felt. It is true that such a contest as would follow the actual clashing of the two Dual Alliances might spread like a conflagration, and that fighting might be transplanted in part to Europe.

The impending crisis in the Orient has excited such worldwide interest that the attitude of the great nations, aside from those immediately involved, has become a source of much solicitude, and among these are the United States and Germany. According to a Berlin cable the American Government has been sounding Germany as to its probable policy in the Far East, and while the statement, issued on apparently "high authority" from the German capital, is diplomatically phrased, the admission is significant that Emperor William "would not, in a final instance, oppose something that Russia desired." It is perfectly apparent that the main "something" that Russia desires in connection with her Oriental aggressiveness is not to be disturbed in her development of the vast Manchurian Province, where she has planted her standard and intends to stay if she can.

Another late cablegram, giving the views of a Russian officer, declares that in his opinion the Anglo-Japanese alliance has settled the fate of Manchuria, and that it will remain in Russia's possession, with an augmented military force to enable the Czar to maintain the position he has assumed. These late developments, it may be observed, hardly coincide with the recent broader views expressed of an "open door" in the vast empire and a distribution of commercial privileges equally among all trading nations. What policy the Russian Emperor and the President of France may decide upon is not difficult to imagine, and it is evident that the outcome will prove to be of vast international interest and importance.

The persistent activity of Russia in antagonism to Great Britain's interests is again indicated by the report from Bombay, which states that 60,000 rifles have been landed by a Russian subsidized steamer at Bandar Abbas, the key to the entrance to the Persian Gulf. Under the recently formed compact, Persia is practically an ally of the Czar, and efforts are being made to persuade Afghanistan to join with Russia. Great Britain has been active in securing a foothold on Koweyt in order to strengthen her position in the Orient; but Turkey, which claims sovereignty over Koweyt, gave Germany permission to build a railroad across Persia and Asia Minor. Only recently England induced the native chief at Koweyt to proclaim himself independent, and in support of this move sent warships to the Persian Gulf to back the chief at Koweyt in forbidding Germany from constructing a railway line, in his dominions, inimical to the interests of Great Britain. Russian schemes in this part of the world, possibly backed by Germany, in time, it will be seen, jeopardizing British interests in India in a way that may lead to complications in the future.

SOME SPRING SUGGESTIONS

Why Not Plant Fruit Trees For Shade Purposes ?

Sanitary, Neat and Well Drained Back Yards a Necessity—Parks and Play Grounds for Citizens and Children

In the last issue of The Canadian Horticulturist there appears a paper written by Miss Jessie M. Good, of Springfield, Ohio, in which many excellent suggestions are made for the benefit of Improvement Societies, organized in many towns in the United States to secure the co-operation of citizens in beautifying the streets and home surroundings. We make the following extracts for the benefit of Peterborough citizens:

If your town is bleak and unshaded, plant trees, but give a thought to what and how you plant. Because you love elms you certainly show a selfish affection when you plant them twenty feet apart upon a street sixty feet wide, knowing, as you must if you love them, that the elm is one of the trees that needs great space and moisture for its full development. Few shade trees should be planted closer together than from twenty-five to thirty-five feet. Why not intersperse them with some ornamental flowering trees—redbuds, dogwoods, crab-apples, catalpas, etc. Why always plant forest trees for city shade. Why not plant fruit trees?

What is the condition of your back yard and alley? Is the latter an impassable mire in winter and a weedy lane in summer, or is it a well-graded, rolled and drained passageway? Is your back yard green with grass and gay with flowers, making it a beautiful and wholesome place in which your children may play? Or, is it a death-trap, adorned with a fragrant swill barrel, heaps of ashes and garbage, piles of old boards, an untidy fence, while the bare ground is soaked with greasy dishwater, making it a place abhorrent to your children as a playground, and as unsafe from a sanitary point of view as a sewer? If you have such a back yard, let me tell you the day is nearly over when educated people keep what some one has wittily called "Queen Ann fronts and Mary Ann backs." you wonder why Johnny and Willie prefer to play in the street instead of the yard? I think their preference for the street shows a proper instinct and good judgment.

Does your grocer and fruiterer expose the foods he expects you to eat in the dusty contagion of the street? If so, you should teach him that you never offer such contaminated foods to your family. If an organization of influential housekeepers speaks clearly upon this point, glass-covered boxes will be quickly provided that will show the goods quite as well.

How about your dairy supply? In a certain town a shocking infant mortality was traced to the milk. A weekly or fortnightly visit by a committee from an improvement association would have a deal to do with wholesome dairy premises. No educated woman of this age dares to be indifferent as to the source of the food with which she supplies her family.

Have you parks and open squares as breathing places for the people? Have you public playgrounds for your children? This one matter of public playgrounds in all towns is of vital importance. When the influence upon the character and morals of children of healthful play is fully understood, no money will be spared to provide such playgrounds.

A story of a "joke" played in Vienna on Mascagni, the composer, who is soon to visit the United States, is going the round of the newspapers in Italy, where it has created an extremely bad impression. The distinguished Italian was the guest of honor at a soiree given by the theatrical artists of the Austrian capital, and expressed regret that he was unable either to speak or understand German, whereupon an actor of comic parts arose and addressed him very solemnly, saying: "Most illustrious maestro, you have given to the world 'Cavalleria Rusticana,' which is a musical freak." At this point Mascagni also rose, and warmly shook the orator's hand. "You have no other talent than that of self-advertisement." Another effusion on the part of the composer. "In a word, you are merely a genial usage." Prolonged applause, at which Mascagni could scarcely master his emotion.

Adelina Patti is, as all the world knows, one of the most charitable women in the world, and nothing pleases her more than to do a good turn "on the quiet," as she herself laughingly puts it. Last winter she was staying for a few days in an isolated village at the extreme end of Yorkshire. To kill the monotony of the place, the great singer went one night to a concert got up in aid of a certain village institution. Not half the performers turned up. Seeing the difficulty in which the chairman and committee were placed, Madame Patti (incognito, of course) offered to oblige them with a song or two if they cared about it. After she had rendered, in her own glorious way, three of her sweetest ballads, the chairman approached her, and, in solemn tones, thanked her: "Well, Miss, you've done oncommon well; and, although 'Arry 'Ock, the juggler, who thinks nowt of takin' 'old of 'ot pokers and a-swallowin' needles, couldn't turn up, yet you've pleased us very considerable, Miss!"

Colonel Osio was the present King of Italy's "governor" for very many years, when, as Prince of Naples, his charge was a delicate lad. Colonel Osio's strict regime has been very severely criticised, but that the King remembers him with respect, if not with affection, is proved by his having conferred the hereditary title of count upon him on the occasion of the birth of the Princess Yolanda. One day a request came from a well-known personage for the young prince's autograph, to be added to a collection containing that of his grandfather and his father. The prince was about to comply, when the colonel said, sharply: "Certainly not; what value has the signature of an insignificant boy who does not even know how to write properly?" For some act of disobedience a little later the prince was brought before his "governor," who exclaimed: "If I were the King I would cut off your head." "And I will cut off yours when I am king," defiantly replied the lad. His punishment is unrecorded, but, instead of cutting off his tyrant's head when that day came, he has ennobled him.

During the famous Douglas and Lincoln debate and subsequent campaigns the point was frequently brought out by the supporters of "the Little Giant" that Mr. Lincoln had served only a single term in Congress, but that Senator Douglas had enjoyed for years a national reputation. This point, says a writer in "Lippincott's," was urged in a heated discussion between an ardent supporter of Douglas and a German voter who favored Lincoln. Finally the former, thinking to overwhelm his opponent, said: "Who is this Lincoln, anyhow? Nobody ever heard of him until Senator Douglas brought him into notice by holding a joint debate with him. Senator Douglas, on the other hand, is a great statesman. Why, he has had his eye on the Presidential chair for the last ten years!" "Vot is dot you say?" was the reply. "You say Meester Doogias have hat his eye on der Bresident chair for ten years?" "Yes, that is just what I said." "Vell, you shoost tell Meester Doogias if he vill keep his eye on dot chair shoost a leedle vile longer he vill see old Abe Lincoln sitting down in it." This closed the debate, amid a roar of laughter from the bystanders.

His Impression.

Dooley on the Medical Profession.

HENNESSY having expressed the opinion that Christian Science is all foolishness.

"Well, sir, who can tell?" said Mr. Dooley. "If it wasn't f'r progress, I'd be sure the Christyan Scientists was wrong. He says th' microbes is a vigitable, an' ivry man is like a conservatory full iv millyons iv these potted plants.

"Well, that sounds all right, an' I sind f'r a doctor. 'Dock,' says I, 'me vilets ar-re thinnin' out, an' I feel as though I was full iv sage brush,' I say. Th' dock puts a glass chube in me mouth an' says, 'Don't bite it.' 'D'ye think I'm a glass eater?' says I, talkin' through me teeth like a Kerry lawyer. 'What's it f'r?' I says. 'To take ye'er timprachoor,' says he. About th' time I'm r-ready to sthrangle he removes th' chube. 'How high does she spout?' says I. 'Ninety-nine,' says he. 'Good hivens,' says I. 'Don't come near me, dock, or you'll be sun sthruck,' I says. 'I've just examined ye'er blood,' he says. 'Ye're full iv weeds,' he says. Be that time I'm scared to death, an' I say a few prayers, whin he fixes a hose to me chest an' begins listenin'. 'Annything goin' on inside?' says I. ''Tis ye'er heart,' says he. 'Glory be,' says I. 'What's th' matther with that ol' ingine?' says I. 'I cud tell ye,' he says, 'but I'll have to call in Dock Vinthricle, th' specyalist,' he says. 'I oughtn't be lookin' at ye'er heart at all,' he says. 'I niver larned below th' chin, an' I'd be fired be th' Union if they knew I was wurrukin' on th' heart,' he says. So he sinds f'r Dock Vinthricle, an' th' dock climbs me chest an' listens, an' thin he says, 'They'se something the matter with his lungs, too,' he says. 'At times they're full iv air an' again,' he says, 'they ain't,' he says. 'Sind f'r Bellows,' he says. Bellows comes and pounds me as though I was a roof he was shinglin', an' havin' accidentally hit me below th' belt, he sinds for Dock Laporattony, an' th' Dock sticks his finger into me as far as th' knuckle.

"He shakes his head an' goes out iv th' room with th' others, an' they talk it over at tin dollars a minyit while I'm layin' there at two dollars a day—docked. Whin they come back, wan iv thim says, 'This here is a mos' inthrestin' case an' we must have th' whole class take a look into it,' he says. It means me, Hinnissy. 'Dock,' he says, 'ye will remove its brain. Vinthricle, ye will have its heart; an', Bellows, ye will take its lungs. As f'r me,' he says, 'I will add wan more vermiform appindix to me belt,' he says. ''Tis sthrange how our foolish predecessors,' says he, 'niver got on to th' dangers iv th' vermiform appindix,' he says. 'I have no doubt that that's what kilt Methusalem,' he says. So they mark out their wurruk on me with a piece iv red chalk, an' if I get well, I look like a rag carpet. Sometimes they lave things in ye, Hinnissy. I knowed a man wanst—Moriarty was his name, Tim Moriarty—an' he had to be hemstitched hurridly because they was goin' to be a ball game that day, an' they locked up in him two sponges, a saw, an' ice pick, a goold watch, an' a pair iv curlin'-irons belongin' to wan iv the nurses. He tol' me he didn't feel well, but he didn't think annything iv it till he noticed that he jingled whin he walked.

"That's what they do with ye nowadays, Hinnissy. Ivry time I go into Dock Cassidy's office, he gives me a look that makes me wish I'd wore a suit iv chain armor. His eyes seem to say, 'Can I come in?' Between th' Christyan Scientists an' him, 'tis a question iv whether ye want to be threated like a loonytic or like a can iv preserved vigitables. Father Kelly says th' styles iv medicine changes like th' styles iv hats. Whin he was a boy, they give ye quinine f'r whativer ailed ye, an' now they give ye sthrychnine, an' nex' year they'll be givin' ye proosic acid, maybe. He says they're findin' new things th' matther with ye ivry day, an' ol' things that have to be taken out, until th' time is comin' whin not more thin half iv us 'll be rale an' th' rest 'll be rubber. He says they ought to enforce th' law iv assault with a deadly weepin' again th' doctors. He says that if they knew less about pizen an' more about gruel an' opened fewer patients an' more windows, they'd not be so manny Christyan Scientists. He says th' diff'rence between Christyan Scientists an' doctors is that Christyan Scientists thinks they'se no such thing as disease, an' doctors thinks there ain't annything else. An' there ye ar-re."

"What d'ye think about it?" asked Mr. Hennessy.

"I think," said Mr. Dooley, "that if th' Christyan Scientists had some science an' th' doctors more Christyanity, it wudden't make anny diff'rence which ye called in—if ye had a good nurse."

"I understand that Frailman has come to the conclusion to contest his wife's will." "Well, what is there courageous about that? She's dead, isn't she?"—Richmond "Dispatch."

TOBACCO, LIQUOR AND DRUGS

Dr. McTaggart's tobacco remedy removes all desire for the weed in a few weeks. A vegetable medicine, and only requires touching the tongue with it occasionally. Price $2.

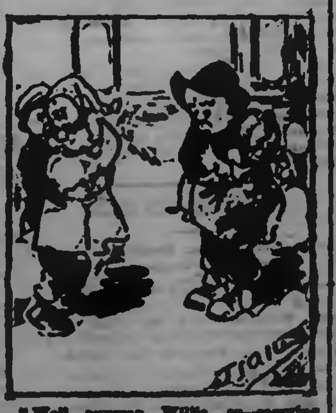
Simply marvelous are the results from taking his remedy for the liquor, morphine and other drug habits. Is a safe and inexpensive home treatment; no hypodermic injections; no publicity; no loss of time from business, and a certainty of cure.

Address or consult Dr. McTaggart, 75 Yonge street, Toronto.

The Undeserved Evil Repute of Paris.

AN interesting discussion as to the public morals of Frenchmen and "Americans" has recently been started by Jules Cambon, the French ambassador to the United States, who made a trip home not long ago, and was so much impressed by what he saw in the Paris streets, during the summer season, that he felt constrained to make an earnest protest against what seemed to him bad tendencies. He complained of the marked increase in the absinthe habit, and of the growing quantity of indecent pictures and cartoons to be seen in the public streets. Senator Berenger, another prominent Frenchman, who is at the head of the Society for the Prevention of License in the Streets, promptly admitted the justice of M. Cambon's censure, and said that the police have of late put hardly any restrictions upon the exposure, in the central parts of Paris, of engravings and cards which offend decency. He declared that this evil is always at its worst during the summer months, and that its unusual prevalence at this season is because it "springs up especially to meet the average foreigner's conception of the gay capital." Thousands of foreigners go to Paris every year for a short vacation, he adds naively, "intent on having a good time, and declaring their intention so loudly that the city takes on a particular hue for their benefit." This view has been emphatically sustained by the pastor of a French Protestant church in Paris, who asserts that Anglo-Saxon visitors are the foreigners most to blame in this matter, and Americans the worst offenders of all. He contends that the keepers of kiosks where quantities of "lurid photographs" are sold told him that "Americans" are their best customers, purchasing handfuls of vicious papers and cards, which they distribute widely in their own country.

According to the New York "Evening Post," striking testimony to the truth of all this has just been furnished by a member of the United States Congress. Representative Gillett of the Springfield (Mass.) district, a man of high standing and proved independence, has been traveling for some weeks, with Speaker Henderson of Iowa, in England and on the Continent. In a recent letter he remarked that the shops, the hotels, and, above all, the class of amusements which we call "Frenchy," and which "Americans" flock to Paris to see, seemed to him "artificial and made to order to meet the taste of American visitors." He frankly admitted that "it's no credit to us what they think our taste is," and bluntly declared that he had been "thoroughly disgusted to see not only American men, but ladies, too, trying to be amused by sights which they would think both stupid and low at home." He added that it seemed to him as though "quite a proportion of the Parisians were engaged in exhibiting as their natural life and recreations a pretense of high spirits and risky abandon which was all affected, a constant bore to the participants, and only interesting and endurable to strangers so long as they are deceived into believing it is the custom of the country." There is thus virtual agreement on the part of the French legislator, the United States congressman and the French clergyman that foreign visitors, and particularly "American" tourists, are giving Paris a worse reputation than it deserves—in fact, making the city worse in the summer months of their presence than it is during the rest of the year. The clergyman quoted clears the resident American colony of blame, pronouncing it exemplary, but he thinks it "impossible to deny that visiting Yankees do Paris far more harm than Paris does them."



"Well, anyway, Willie, er—carrying doze babies 'll help our muscle."—Harper's Bazar.

Discretion Better Than Valor.

A New Yorker, the owner of a magnificent yacht, had for his guests on a recent trip three very clever young men, all of them suitors for the hand of his beautiful daughter. The young woman could not determine which she liked the best, they were equally good looking and equally eligible as to wealth and position.

In her perplexity she sought the advice of the Old Salt, a kindly and generous old sea-dog, who sailed the yacht.

"I tell you what I'd do, Miss, if I were you," he said. "The next time we are in a safe place you fall overboard. I will stand by to see that no harm comes to you, and then you can see which is the best man of the lot."

The plan was agreed to, and a day or two later the young woman slid off the plank into the water. In a second two of the young men were in after her and she was heroically rescued. As soon as possible the heroine sought the captain.

"What am I to do now?" she asked. "I have two of them still left."

"Well, I would say this," replied the captain. "If you want a good, sensible husband, you take the one that did not jump after you."

Mrs. Scrappington (in the midst of her reading)—Here is an item which says that in Patagonia a wife can be purchased for a dollar. Mr. Scrappington—Well, there may be wives in Patagonia that are worth that much.—Harper's Bazar.

A noted London club man once laid a wager with a friend that the latter could not sell a given number of gold guineas at a penny a piece. He won his wager. The people refused to buy. They thought he was offering too much for too little.

It may be that the claims made for Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription seem almost too great to women who in years of suffering have found no help in doctors or medicines. But it is to be remembered that no claim is made for "Favorite Prescription" which is not substantiated by thousands of women cured by its use. Its effects are truly wonderful. It wipes out past years of pain as a sponge wipes a slate.

Favorite Prescription is the great medicine for women. It establishes regularity, dries enfeebling drains, heals inflammation and ulceration and cures female weakness. It is the best preparative for maternity, making the baby's advent practically painless.

"When I wrote to you in March, asking advice as to what to do for myself," says Mrs. Ella Reynolds, of Guffie, McLean Co., Ky., "I was expecting to become a mother in June, and was sick all of the time. Had been sick for several months. Could not get anything to stay in my stomach, not even water. Had mishaps twice in six months, and threatening all the time with this one. Had female weakness for several years. My hips, back and lower bowels hurt me all the time. Had numbness from my hips down. Had several hard cramping spells, and was not able to do any work at all. I received your answer in a few days, telling me to take Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. I took three bottles, and before I had taken it a week I was better, and before I had taken it a month I was able to help do my work. On the 27th of May my baby was born, and I was only sick three hours, and had an easy time.

"We praise Dr. Pierce's medicine for it has cured me."

The infant of the household was in its cradle. The head of the house was at home, peevish and fault-finding. At length he became unendurable. "You've done nothing but make mistakes tonight," he growled. "Yes," she answered meekly, "I begun by putting the wrong baby to bed."

One of his Majesty's inspectors stood before a class of seven-year-old boys. The subject of examination was Euclid. After failing several times to draw from the class the definition of parallel lines, he drew, by way of illustration, on the wall.

"Now, boys," said the worthy educational dignitary, "I've drawn two parallel lines on the wall. Will they ever meet?"

"Yes, sir," said the pick of the class.

"When?"

"If you draw them right around the room."—London Answers.

"Wherein lies the difference between photography and courtship?" he asked, softly.

"I don't know," she replied.

"In photography," he explained, "the negative is developed in the dark room, while in courtship that is where the affirmative is developed."

"Let us," he suggested, "proceed to develop an affirmative."

There being no objections, it was so ordered.—Chicago Post.

The French were so much interested in Mr. Kipling's observations on sportsmen that the poem has been translated into French and published in some of the Paris newspapers. Le Temps renders the famous lines, "with the flannelled fools at the wicket or the muddied oafs at the goals," as follows:—

"A void les imbeciles en complete de flanelle qui jouent au cricket.

"Et les cretins souillés de boue qui jouent au football.

He was a stranger cycling through the highly intellectual City of Oxford. You could tell it from the cautious manner with which he picked his way down the principal street.

It was evening. A gentleman approached the cyclist.

"Sir," said he, "your beacon has ceased its function."

"Sir?"

"Your illuminator, I say, is shrouded in unmitigated oblivion."

"Really, but I don't quite——"

"The effulgence of your radiator has evanesced."

DAISY GORDON'S FOLLY
—OR—
The World Lost for Love's Sake
By Laura Jean Libbey

Author of The Crime of Hallow-E'en, The Flirtations of a Beauty, Willful Gaynell, Little Leaby, Only a Mechanic's Daughter

He might well wonder why she fell on his breast with a great, gasping sigh, with a burst of passionate tears. She was praying from the depths of her heart that heaven would forgive her terrible sin.

He did not think it strange that she should weep—a wedding was a solemn, impressive scene; but he did wonder what were those murmurs passing over the white lips.

He was very patient with her, he let her weep some moments in silence, then he raised her bridal veil and kissed the tears away.

"There must be smiles, not tears, love," he whispered. "Remember from this hour you are all mine, not one cloud shall darken the sunshine of your life; give yourself up to joy and happiness, darling."

His—all his. How the words smote her. From among the wedding roses by the wayside, the dark, Satanic face of Harold St. John seemed to rise suddenly and confront her.

Would she never be able to forget? Would she be haunted ever by the cruel memory of the horrible past.

But for that what a lifelay before her? But for that how happy she might be now that she really knew what love meant. Her soul was awakened, she loved Aleck with a passion and intensity that almost frightened herself.

"There is one thing that makes me superabundantly happy," continued Aleck, caressing the lovely white face. "I am your first and only love, Daisy. I have always had an ideal — you realize it. My greatest desire has always been to be the first and only lover of her whom I should choose for my wife; I am your first lover, Daisy. The thought, image— the memory of no other man is in your heart. I thank heaven," he continued, reverently, "that I have my heart's desire."

The words were so full of faith and trust, the wonder is that they did not strike her dead.

Three weeks passed like a dream to Daisy—but for the one terrible drawback of her life, she would have been unutterably happy.

Wedded to the man she loved, beautiful, young, wealthy, the world at her feet, what fate could be more enviable? No wonder that in the first intoxication of her dream, the voice of conscience had almost ceased to make itself heard.

Aleck had been rather anxious over her at first. She had seemed dull, dispirited; he often found her in tears, and he could not imagine why. Perhaps it was because she was so young to be wedded and taken away from home care.

But the gloom and depression soon wore away, and Daisy was radiantly happy.

There came a cruel awakening to her, and in a strange way.

They had long since reached Sacramento —their destination, and were domiciled in an elegant suit of rooms at one of the fashionable up-town hotels.

Aleck had thrown himself down in one of the easy lounging chairs by the window one day to look over the morning paper, and Daisy had drawn up a velvet hassock by his side, and seated herself upon it.

"You seem so very much absorbed in your paper today, Aleck," she said, stealing one pretty white arm round his neck.

"You would prefer that I should be making love as usual to you, my dear, I suppose," he replied, tossing back his dark, handsome head with a happy debonnaire laugh.

"But the fact is, my darling, I am greatly interested in reading an account of a noted criminal—Harold St. John —whom I once knew."

She gave a terrible gasp, and her face grew white.

"Do not be so alarmed, my darling," said he complacently. "I said I knew him, but that was in our college days. I am sorry that he has turned out so badly," he went on, "for he was really a bright fellow —gay, handsome, dashing and winning; a clever friend, and a most desperate foe.

"There was quite a little rivalry between us for the favor of a pretty girl; and St. John never forgave me because she threw him over, as he phrased it, for me," Aleck went on, laughingly. "He vowed vengeance against me, and said he should get even with me if it cost him a lifetime. He was sent up for some crime, but I see by today's paper he is out of prison again."

No cry broke from the white lips of the girl crouching lower and lower on the velvet hassock at his side.

"Shall I read it to you?" he asked.

And a voice, hardly human in its terrible anguish, answered, "Yes," but he was so preoccupied he did not notice it.

"It is too long and tedious to read in detail. I will give you a brief account of it. It seems that he had been making a little too free with his employer's money, and becoming bolder after a time, resorted to forgery.

"As is usually the case, he was detected, convicted, and sentenced to state's prison.

"It seems that he made a bold dash for liberty while they were taking him there, by leaping from the lightning express. All search proved futile.

"A few days later the firm received in cash from him —dollar for dollar —the amount taken. This of course created the most universal surprise. It is hinted by the paper that no special effort will be made to find him.

"His career has been anything but a savory one," continued Aleck; "some time before he shot a young lawyer in a duel, wounding him so severely that the poor fellow died after. As it was claimed to be an affair of honor, nothing could be done with St. John."

"And this man walks the earth free?" asked Daisy in an awful whisper, so full of terror that for the first time Aleck noticed it.

He started and looked at her anxiously; her terrible pallor alarmed him.

"I should not tell you of such cases to alarm you, you are so sensitive, my darling," he cried.

He stretched out his arms quickly toward her, for she had risen suddenly to her feet, and was standing before him swaying to and fro like a leaf in the wind.

But he was too late; with a piteous gasp she threw up her white hands, and fell like one dead at his feet. Janet, her maid, was summoned in all haste.

"I don't think you have any cause for alarm, sir," she said, "or reason to call in a doctor; it is only a

Labor-Saving but Oath-Producing.

SPEAKING of the introduction in Eastern telephone exchanges of the "line-busy" phonograph attachments, the "Argonaut" remarks that in the effete East these innovations may possibly be tamely received, but they had a short life in San Francisco. When some bright telephone clerk conceived the plan of saving another clerk's wages by putting on a phonograph to say, "Line is busy," it was received with rejoicing by the telephone stockholders in San Francisco. But the telephone subscribers did not like it at all, and did not hesitate to say so. On the first day of the innovation the startled telephone subscribers listened in wonder to the mechanical moaning, squeaking and buzzing of the phonograph droning out: "We —will—call—you—line—is—busy — line—is—busy— we — will —call—you." The machine, naturally, was deaf to expostulation or enquiry. To polite dissent and to fiery oaths it returned the same monotonous groan: "We—will—call—you—line—is—busy." Goaded by this automatic barking, the most mild-mannered men became temporarily maddened. On that famous first day the telephone scenes in the various clubs were peculiar. From the telephone closets there would come at intervals wild bursts of oaths and sometimes maniac laughter. The attendants would hasten to the telephone temple, and assist forth congested millionaires, purple-faced, pop-eyed, apoplectic. They were speechless—all they could do was to shake their fists at the telephone. When a mining millionaire from Mexico, newly arrived that day, suddenly burst out of the telephone closet clamoring for an axe with which to attack the instrument, the club manager grew apprehensive. When, later in the day, an alcoholic millionaire could not wait for an axe, but demolished the telephone with a heavy, silver-headed cane, the manager concluded to take prudential measures and ask the telephone company to switch off the phonograph. Which was done. This was the end of the telephone-phonograph in the San Francisco clubs, and not long after it was disused throughout the city generally. This experience is respectfully submitted by the "Argonaut" for the consideration of Eastern cities.

Suicide Contagious.

Mayor Morse, of Emporia, Kan., asked the editors of Emporia papers recently to refrain from publishing details of suicides. He said that the publication of such details had caused an epidemic of suicides in that community in the last two years. He had consulted with the Board of Health, and thought that if the papers would not comply with his request he had a right to stop summarily the publication of suicide details under a law providing for the suppression of epidemics.

"If the paper," he said, "on which these local papers are printed had been kept in a place infected with smallpox I could demand that the papers quit using that paper or stop publication. If they spread another contagion, the contagious suggestion of suicide, I believe the liberty of the press is not to be considered before the public welfare, and that the courts would sustain me in using force to prevent the publication of papers containing matter clearly deleterious to the public health.

"However, no such steps need be taken. Mr. White, of the 'Gazette;' Mr. Strong, of the 'Republican,' and Mr. Yearout, of the 'Times,' are in sympathy with me in this movement and will suppress the details of suicides until the epidemic subsides."

Sunshine.

After a morn of dreary rain
The sullen clouds withdrew,
The summer sun shone forth again
From skies of dazzling blue;

Sorrow and suffering was my dole,
But you have banished pain—
Your love shone through my lonely soul
Like sunshine after rain!

Where There Is No Degeneracy.

A delightful article by Mr. Frank Beddard, of the London Zoological Gardens, in the "Pall Mall Magazine," makes one suspect that the only spot in civilization where degeneracy has not begun is the "Zoo." Mr. Beddard takes us through the great menagerie which is under his supervision, and shows us many distinguished inmates at dinner. The hippopotamus is an enviable gourmet. He has been thirty-seven years at the "Zoo," and has had only one attack of indigestion. On that grave occasion he was cured with forty (or eighty) drops of croton oil, administered in a bun. Happy beast! No visits to specialists at a guinea a visit! No anxious trials of patent medicines, advertised in the evening papers with portraits of the cures! Down went the bun, and Hippo was himself again! The Australian cassowary consumes everything (except the missionary and his hymn-book), and never knows what indigestion means. Excellent living (Mr. Beddard's statistics of the food are staggering) and leisured ease make astonishing longevity at the "Zoo." There was a Madagascar parrot who flourished in captivity for fifty-four years, and goodness knows how old he was when he retired to Regent's Park. Possibly he became a centenarian. The official records apparently neglect to state his views of life.

Incident at Pekin.

Probably the most amusing incident of the siege of Pekin, says Henry Savage Landor, occurred on July 22, 1900, when the Dowager-Empress sent a hundred melons, some cucumbers and egg-plant as a present to the Chinese soldiers at the barricades. The servants who brought them misunderstood the order, and handed over the whole lot to the foreign soldiers, also at their barricade. The vegetables were hauled in with due haste, as soon as the guards got over their first astonishment at the handsome gift; but no doubt the person most astonished of all was the messenger on his return to the Dowager-Empress. It is not improbable that the misplaced melons cost him his life.

Interesting to Smokers.

A New York Sun editorial the other day was of interest to smokers—even, possibly, to reformers who include in their list the "holy herb nicotian":—

A sacrificial fire has been burning in Clayton, N.J., and the savor of it still tickles Gloucester County nostrils. The Anti-Nicotine Club brought to its rooms all its idols, cigars, cigarettes, pipes, tobacco, and burned them up in the stove. So fierce for the moment is the rage in Clayton against the holy herb nicotian. The case of the Vice-President of the club, Mr. Samuel Turner, is especially glorious or sad, according to the taste and fancy of him who considers it. He is 75; he has smoked for 63 years; with reasonable prudence and longevity he might hope to hold the smokers' record, for this county at least, and puff away in peace and comfort for a whole green century. He throws away the laurel in his grasp. He makes fuel of the comrades of two generations. In the heat and fury of the Clayton anti-nicotine movement he gives up the charmer of pain, the consoler of sadness, the blameless companion of reverie, the silent partner of books, the lubricator of digestion, the fountain of philosophy, the mother of good temper, the nurse of sound old age, the old, faithful, harmless, constant friend.

A boy may toss away his cigarette and a youth his cigar or briarwood, worn for show and ornament rather than for use, and feel no loss. But wait till you come to forty year. Nobody really takes his degree in the first and greatest University of Virginia before that age. His bacon isn't really cured till then. Then he becomes entitled to the freedom of the city of Nicotia. Then, if he has eyes to pierce through the smoke, he begins to see how the world goes round. For instance, what made the Elizabethans great? Tobacco. What made Bismarck great? Tobacco. Take such a philosopher and let him come to sixty year, as he cannot fail to do unless you crush him with automobiles or dynamite. For twenty years more he has worshipped at the fragrant altar. Surely he will not be turned away from it now. Surely he will obey the voice at eve obeyed at prime.

The case of Samuel Turner of Clayton shows what capacity of self-renunciation exists in the bosom of the veteran smoker. But why do people leave off smoking? Well, one reason is that there is a lot of confounded doctors who make it their pleasure to knock yours in the head. They tell you point-blank: "You positively must stop smoking;" and all the time the rascals have cigar cases in their pockets. That's the worst pang of the condemned smoker.

The Guards' New Uniform.

The thirteen hundred Guards who left the other day for South Africa were accoutred in the new uniform which has displaced the khaki, which was the all-prevailing hue at the beginning of the war. Popular interest," said The Times in describing their inspection by the King, "in these ceremonies is as keen to-day as it was when the first contingent departed for the war. Long before noon the approaches to the barracks were crowded with spectators who had not the privilege of admission to the parade ground, and were content to look on from Birdcagewalk and the railings of St. James' Park. It was not an unfavorable morning for such a display. A sharp frost nipped the air and a light mist hung over the park. Within the enclosure was a scene of picturesque activity. Guardsmen, in long grey overcoats and busbies, moved about among the ever-increasing crowd of civilians; bands mustered, and men in the new campaigning uniform paraded for a preliminary inspection by their officers. Smart and serviceable is the judgment that will be passed on the new kit. The color is a blend of khaki and drab—drab tunic, drab breeches, drab puttles, and drab hat. The hat is a novelty in shape, being broader and more substantial in appearance than the ordinary soft felt with which we have become familiar. Rakishly looped up at the side—on the right for Grenadiers and Coldstreams, who wear the white and the red hackle; on the left for the Scots, who, instead of hackle, have the tartan badge of white and red—it is not merely a comfortable, but an effective and even picturesque head-dress. And it has this further advantage, that it is not uniform, and, therefore makes men less conspicuous objects for the enemy's rifles. In the early days of the war our soldiers were easily distinguished, even when lying scattered on the drab veldt, because of the uniformity of the helmet, though covered with khaki, whereas the Colonial troops in their soft felt hats were invisible from even a short distance. The accoutrements, however, have little of the quality of invisibility. The bandoliers are of light grey canvas, the belts are white, the haversack is white, the blanket is rolled in a white cover. Only the water-bottle and the cover of the "billy" or canteen which hangs from the shoulder over the blanket are of khaki color. The buttons, too, are of shining brass—buttons that are rarely seen after men have been once under the close fire of Boers. Yet there is this to be said—a few days on the African veldt will tone down the glaring whites to a neutral tint."

His Aplication for Cash.

One of the recent incidents in the invasion of England by the United States has to do with an American boy of the "smart" order. Arising out of an application in court to presume the death of one Alfred Richardson, who had been manager of some cycle works at Middlesbrough, and who had mysteriously disappeared, it was elicited that he had been advertised for in some American papers, and that one reply was received from H. C. Starnes of Virginia, U.S., a boy purporting to be nine years of age, who alleged that the deceased had married his mother in 1863. There were also two enclosures from a man represented to be a County Court Judge. Asked by the solicitors for particulars, the boy further wrote: "If there is a Estate over thear coming to Alfred Richardson, y of corse that is a coming to me, and I want to get just as I can." Another document came, said to be from a County Court Judge, which began: "This sertifies that Mr. H. C. Starnes has brought before me 20 good old citizens of Scott country—and proved that his father was Mr. Alfred Richardson." It was signed "Judge." The English Judge said it seemed impossible that a County Court Judge anywhere could have written this, and he granted leave forthwith to presume the death.

A Bad Guess.

The Shortcomings of Breadth.

WHEN I was a schoolgirl, with many definite opinions, I remember having a talk with a man of thirty, who happened to advance a theory—I forget about what—which aroused in me ardent dissent. I eagerly presented my view, which was the exact reverse of his, and paused for him to defend himself. He gave me a friendly look; then leaned back and gazed out of the window, with the remark, "Well, there's something in that, too."

I felt as if the bottom had dropped out of the room. For, I thought, if one really hold an opinion, how can he say there is "something in" the contrary view? But since then I have not only had many such experiences; I have myself become an offender. And I wonder if it is altogether a gain. It may be sheer contrariness, but I do get a little tired, sometimes, of broad-mindedness and tolerance, and long for good, bigoted narrowness that can be counted on. I should really like to be told: "No, you're totally wrong; what you have just said is false absolutely. The facts of the case are these, and if you don't believe it, so much the worse for you." How I should enjoy that! But I have not had the experience since my brothers grew up. Occasionally, in desperation, I have assumed the part myself, and taken my stand on positive assertion of a single half truth; but it does no good. I simply live over that early experience; again I am told, "There's something in that, too," and it gives me the feeling, to quote a figure used by a friend in another connection, of having come up against a soft curtain where I expected a wall.

"A plain categorical proposition," says Mr. Morley, "is becoming less and less credible to average minds. Or at least the slovenly willingness to hold two directly contradictory propositions at one and the same time is becoming more and more common." I do not think it is quite this. Men surely used to hold two directly contradictory propositions at one and the same time with the utmost ease. The point is that they did not know they were contradictory, whereas we do; and still we hold them —or rather, entertain them, as one would interesting guests. Our attitude toward every opinion we meet might be expressed thus: "Well, there's something in that, too. Come right in!" And the new opinion comes in, and draws a chair up to the hospitable fire, and finds a friendly circle of other opinions there; they shake hands all round, and each tells the others what good fellows they are.

This is amiable, but, in honesty, I don't like it. It is like the congress of religions, which I have never been able to understand, save on the assumption that each secretly hopes to convert the others by taking them off their guard, or that no one is in earnest about his religion except as regards its common moral basis. The old attitude used to be, "You think differently from me: therefore you're wrong, therefore you're bad, therefore I'll kill you." One by one these clauses have been dropped, beginning with the last one; thus reversing the system of "the House that Jack Built." First we stopped killing the other man, then we stopped thinking he was bad, and now we have nearly stopped thinking he is wrong. May this not be carried too far?—From the "Contributors' Club."

Defeated the Bicyclist.

"GO and hitch up the ostrich," is not at all an absurd command on an ostrich farm. There these great birds are often harnessed to a carriage, and make fairly good substitutes for horses. Although they cannot draw a heavy load, their speed is a recommendation.

At Jacksonville, Florida, there is a bird named Oliver W. that can run a mile in two minutes and twenty-two seconds. His owners claim that he is more satisfactory than a horse because he eats less, never shies at anything, never runs away, and goes steadily at a good pace without lameness or fatigue.

This particular ostrich appears to like his work. When the little carriage is brought out he comes running toward it at full speed, with both wings spread out, ready to have the harness put on.

On one occasion a cyclist tried to pass Oliver W. on a long, smooth stretch of road. He came up behind the carriage, thinking to get ahead and escape the dust. Oliver W. thought differently. He threw his head high in the air, gave a flap with his wings, and went forward with a speed that astonished the cyclist. Putting forth more effort, the latter made another attempt to pass the ostrich, but the faster the pedals of the bicycle moved the faster sped the long legs of the bird.

It so happened that the cyclist had a record as a fast rider, and to be distanced by an ostrich was not to his liking. For two miles he tried to pass his feathered rival, but was then obliged to give up the race, defeated.

Some fast horses have tried conclusions with Oliver W., who seems to like nothing better than testing their speed, starting slowly to make them think it easy to distance him, and then gradually increasing his pace.

Modest Fees.

LAWYERS do not usually get the small end of a bargain with their clients, but the "Green Bag" recalls two incidents where the clients had rather the best of it.

Sir Walter Scott's first client was a burglar. He got the fellow off, but the man declared that he hadn't a penny to give him for his services. Two bits of useful information he offered, however, and with these the young lawyer had to be content. The first was that a yelping terrier inside the house was a better protection against thieves than a big dog outside; and the second, that no sort of lock bothered his craft so much as an old rusty one.

Small compensation as this was, the first brief of the noted French lawyer, Monsieur Rouher, yielded still less. The peasant for whom Monsieur Rouher won the case asked how much he owed him.

"Oh, say two francs," said the modest young advocate.

"Two francs!" exclaimed the peasant. "That is very high. Won't you let me off with a franc and a half?"

"No," said the counsel; "two francs or nothing."

"Well, then," said his client, "I'd rather pay nothing."

And with a bow he left.

A Woman's Age.

Mr. Youngwed—Do you mean to say you are 24 years old to-day? Why, you told me six months ago, just before the wedding, that you were only 22.

Mrs. Youngwed—Yes, I know; but, my dear, I've aged so rapidly since we were married.

Mrs Crawford—How did you enjoy your ocean voyage? Mrs. Crabshaw—It was just lovely. The state-room seemed so comfortable after living in a flat.—"Town Topics."

A MARVELLOUS MEDICINE

"No Cure, No Pay," is the Newest Proposal of the Proprietors of Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills

Editor Morning Times

Sir,—We make the following proposal to the readers of the Times: To any one who is a subject of rheumatism (no matter how long standing), or any blood disease, as enumerated below, and will give Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills a fair trial, and do not find a perfect cure, we will refund the money paid for the pills. At the convention of West Peterborough Conservatives on Saturday, Mr. J. W. Miller, town, received and accepted the nomination as a candidate to contest West Peterborough in the coming campaign. That is about all that need be said. The matter is now in the hands of the electors; it is for them to say—and the matter is a very important one—whether the interests of Peterborough, town and county, will be best served, by the election of Hon. J. R. Stratton or by the election of Mr. J. W. Miller, no matter which occupies the position of premier of the province after the election—Hon. G. W. Ross or Mr. J. P. Whitney. The Times takes the view that the interests of the town will be best served by the election of Mr. Stratton. We want to have as our representative, the man who is best qualified in the way of position, disposition, ability and influence to do the most for our town and county. What do the electors say?

NOTES FROM THE T.A.S.

Items of Interest from a Worthy Society A Lacrosse Trophy Offered

Thirteen new members were initiated yesterday.

A committee has been appointed to secure as many new members as possible as it is intended to endeavor to win the banner at the convention in Dubuque Ia., in July.

The uniforms for the members of the Lacrosse Club arrived on Saturday. Each suit consists of red jersey with black band and black trunks. The uniforms are the nattiest ever worn by a local club.

The athletic section of the society will turn out on Wednesday next, to put the Separate School grounds in condition for practice, which will commence in the course of a fortnight.

The society's rooms have undergone considerable improvement during the past few weeks. A private sitting-room is being handsomely fitted up, two new lavatories have been put in, and a telephone has been installed. The number is 281.

Rev. Father Phelan of Lakefield, has offered a handsome silver cup for competition, at his pic-nic, to be held at Lakefield on May 24th. The T.A.S. and Y.M.C.A. teams of this town are specially invited to compete.

DAILY BLOWS

Brought on Appendicitis

If a person will continue to put a little poison in the body each day, for instance like a cup of coffee each morning when coffee acts as a poison, and it frequently does, the result will be an attack some day in one of the organs of the body. The little disturbances each day pile up and finally become a big disturbance.

Many cases of appendicitis have been brought on by coffee drinking. It first affects the nerves of the stomach, and the disorder travels on down through the bowels and results in some kind of bowel trouble, frequently appendicitis.

A lady at Fredonia, N.Y., says, "During my school life, both as a student and teacher I drank coffee regularly. Most of the time I knew the coffee Most of the time I knew the coffee was injuring me, but did not feel like giving it up. First my nerves felt the effect, and later on constipation developed, and after that, the last year I had a severe attack of appendicitis. My doctor and friends all agreed that these troubles were largely caused by coffee drinking.

While I was ill some Postum was sent me by friends. I supposed it was coffee and hesitated at the first cup, but when the difference was explained, and I drank as much as I cared for, with such good results, I concluded Postum was just what I wanted and have used it ever since. It greatly aids digestion, is nourishing and refreshing.

My food and nourishment while getting well from appendicitis were Postum and Grape-Nuts.

If I had known of Postum years ago I might have been saved a tremendous amount of suffering brought on by coffee drinking.

Rev.—— is one of my converts to Postum. He suffered greatly from dyspepsia but has entirely recovered since he quit coffee and began using Postum.

Dr.—— who suffered a long while from nervous troubles says Postum brought him out when he quit coffee, and he constantly urges it on his patients who are coffee drinkers."

Conservative Convention

for his chances in the approaching contest. The gallery held a large number of ladies, who testified to the popularity of the gallant Major with the fair sex, by the favor with which they received his remarks.

The chair was occupied by Mr. T. E. Bradburn. On the platform were Mr. Jas. Kendry, M.P., Mr. J. J. Foy, K.C., M.P.P., Major Miller, Dr. Ford of Norwood, and Messrs. J. W. Garvin, J. Jones, G. W. Hatton, L. M. Hayes, R. G. Strickland, A. P. Poussette, J. W. Green, J. H. Burnham, Wm. Croft, Thos. Rutherford, and many others.

President Bradburn opened the proceedings by stating his pleasure at presiding over such a large and representative meeting. He went straight to the point, and called on Mr. Jas. Kendry, M.P., who reminded his hearers that the party has a hard fight ahead. Major Miller, he said, is an old Peterborough boy, who has grown up with the town, and is worthy of the confidence of the riding. The province has been governed too long by one party. He believed it to be in the interests of the country that governments should be changed once in every ten or twelve years.

who was introduced as "the gentleman who will represent East Peterborough in the next parliament, said the presence of fair ladies and brave men is always an inspiration to a speaker, especially when he has the confidence of his audience. A party that had not the confidence of the people is unworthy of trust. He said he was full of confidence, optimistic, and enthusiastic over the coming contest. He congratulated Major Miller upon having such an enthusiastic ratification of his nomination, and urged the enthusiastic among his hearers to infect the less hopeful ones with confidence and enthusiasm.

He said objection had been made to his (the speaker's) candidature on the ground that it was not right for a professional man to represent an agricultural riding. Was it because he is a doctor, or because he is a Conservative, he asked. The Grit party did not think it unfair nor wrong to have Dr. Landerkin represent an agricultural riding, nor to pitchfork him into the senate at a salary of $15,000. It is Mr. Stratton who instigates this anti-professional cry, and he named several instances in which Liberal professional men have represented agricultural constituencies. "Oh, no, my friends," he said, "they oppose me not because I'm a doctor; it's because I'm a Conservative."

Dr. Ford thanked the editor of the Examiner for the character given him recently in that paper. He (the speaker), has always been a staunch temperance man, and a staunch Conservative, owing allegiance to the party and its leader on all purely political questions. But on those great moral questions that are above politics, he owes allegiance to no man, no body of men, but to his own conscience alone. He was glad to speak on behalf of his old friend, Major Miller, and on any and all occasions, he would be ready and willing to take a hand in the conflict on behalf of "the Major."

on rising to address the meeting, was received with the heartiest applause. He said,—Mr. Chairman, Ladies and Gentlemen,—There are occasions when a speaker can oblige his audience by not saying too much. This is one of the occasions, as we have here with us to-night, a leading statesman, not only in Ontario or Canada, but in the British Empire, in the person of Mr. J. J. Foy, who will address the meeting. The policy of the Conservative party has always been a straightforward, honest, intelligent policy in spite of Maybee's letters, assisted by local talent. We can look back to the honorable course of the Conservative party during the past thirty years. They had always striven for the best interests of the country in every way. At the time of the last election the saw-log bill was talked much of, and the Liberals wanted the people to believe that they had passed that bill after a hard struggle to overcome the objections that were raised by the Opposition. To state the matters in its true light, which party struggled to have the bill passed? It certainly was not the Liberals. Oh, no! had it been left to them it would not have been passed at all. Mr. Whitney and his party had more to do with the passing of the bill than the Liberals. The Conservatives pressed this bill on the government, and urged it so strongly that they had to pass it. What is the result of the bill—it is that now instead of our logs being taken across to Michigan, to be manufactured into lumber, they are cut in this country, cut in Canadian mills run by Canadian labor, and employment given to Canadians. Who was it that detected the corrupt practices of the Liberal party in ballot stealing, stuffing of ballot boxes and a number of election frauds? It was Mr. Whitney. Who refused a judgeship, offered as a bait? It was Mr. J. J. Foy, K.C., who claimed it was his right and privilege to vote and work for the party in whom he believed, and not be bought over by such a position. Such men as these are men whom we can admire for their sense of truth and honesty. When the government under John A. McDonald went out of power thirty years ago, they handed to the reform party a splendid cash surplus—the only cash surplus piled up by any governing body in Ontario. In addition to that large amount of money, they turned over the vast wealth of forest and mine. What has become of these? To-day our mines are being robbed, and our forests destroyed by an unprogressive policy. The party come to us with their garbled and unaudited accounts, and we believe their statements. Every year large sums of the peoples' money is spent to keep up an army of heelers and boodlers whose only vocation is at election time to distribute shekels to buy votes, and to draw their salaries with unfailing regularity. Where are the pine forests? Ask of the winds that whistle among the stumps of the denuded pine lands—all gone to Michigan.

Where are the products of our vast mines of nickel? Mr. Ross went to England a short time ago at a cost of $1500, and told the Englishmen that we had nickel to burn here in Ontario. He went to the Navy office and told them they must line the bulwarks on the war ships with Ontario nickel. The officers' cots must be mounted in Canadian nickel. He went to the War Office and told them that the fancy trappings on cavalry saddles must be made from Canadian nickel. The artillery harness and guns must be decorated with nickel, and what has been done. Our nickel mines are being robbed every day, and a revenue which should go to the province, is going into the pockets of rich capitalists. When he came back he told us he had arranged for cold storage in the transportation of our dairy products to the English markets. Where is it now? We have not got it, and Mr. Ross will never get it for us. At this time the people of Ontario are looking to the Conservative party to lead them. The experience of Liberal rule during the past thirty years has been very unsatisfactory. I do not wish to take up too much of your time, but I want to add a few remarks to what I have said. I am prepared to give you the history of both parties to-night, and I will say that if I was not a Conservative, I would be ashamed of myself. Yet, while I am a Conservative, I claim a certain amount of independence—on two questions, for instance. The first is on the great question of capital and labor, which has attracted so much attention during the past few years, and which has drawn forth opinions from eloquent speakers and great writers. The only way in which the question can be settled is by legislation. A fair share of the profits should be given to the laboring man who has worked so hard to earn large sums of money for his employer, when he (the laborer) is working for almost nothing. The children of the laborer have as much right to be educated as the children of the wealthy. Large sums of money are sent every year to China and India to educate the heathen, and why should not our children be educated as well. The labor party wish to have the question settled in a way fair to both parties, and so that there will be no trouble or hard feeling.

The other question is prohibition. The real question has not been placed before you. The government intended a bill that was only a make-shift affair. They wanted to ship the responsibility to some one else. The real agitation was started in the Dominion Government. Sir Wilfred Laurier promised the people legislation on the question, but in a few days three cabinet Ministers were out talking against the proposed legislation. One of them said,—"you will get the plebiscite but you won't get prohibition." Any level headed man who will take the trouble to read what the Ontario Government has done on the question will be disgusted with the measure taken. The referendum is no good. It cannot be carried because it is weighted down with impossible conditions. A large percentage of the votes cast must be in favor of the question, or then the bill is lost. Some are delighted with the bill given by Mr. Ross and point him out as a great and true Christian statesman. His life belies the title. The whole Cabinet are simply whited sepulchres. They simply talk prohibition to try and save Mr. Ross. Since 1864 I have lived in town, and I can say that my life and actions show that I have always been straightforward and honest temperance man. I am prepared to deal with the question when it comes before the party in Toronto and if elected I will deal with the subject in a fair open manner.

The Conservative party has done me a great honor in nominating me as their candidate. I have been told that I will be beaten, but I am out to fight and to beat the Liberal candidate, and I can do it. Honest effort on the part of the Conservative party will do this. We want the voters to vote on principle, and if you all do that I will be at the head of the polls on election day.

FREE CONSUMPTIVE HOSPITAL.

A local deputation of representative ladies and gentlemen interviewed the council on behalf of the National Sanitarium Association with a view to securing some substantial support toward the movement for restricting the spread of consumption.

Mr. J. Hampden Burnham introduced the delegation, and urged the necessity of confining within the narrowest possible limits this dread disease of consumption. He quoted statistics showing that more deaths are due to consumption than any other prevalent disease, and argued that it is in the interest of the public at large that consumption should be isolated, so that in course of time the disease might be effectively stamped out. Eminent medical authorities assert that consumption is transmitted by contact, and he hoped the town would take advantage of the power invested in municipalities by legislature, and give a substantial grant to the Free Consumptive Hospital at Gravenhurst. Forty cents a day would pay for one patient at the Sanatarium, and he besought council to look closely into the matter and treat it with every consideration.

Dr. Boucher explained that consumption is the most infectious of all diseases, so much that it is claimed the great white plague. This infection has only been brought to light within the past few years. A Consumptive Hospital requires to be on elevated ground, surrounded by sandy soil. In such an institution as that at Gravenhurst the patient breathes day and night a pure healthy atmosphere and has the benefit of the experience of medical men who have made the study of consumption a specialty. Should the town of Peterborough endow a cot at such an institution it would be doing a christian duty, and he felt confident that no christian ratepayer would object to paying an increased taxation for such a purpose.

Dr. McClellan, Mrs. Dr. Birnie and D. W. Dumble, also addressed the council and urged its active cooperation in this movement which is now so general in Canada.

Mrs. Jas Kendry did not approve of the movement in question being placed on a common footing with the word charity as generally defined in town. She thought the physicians should select the patients for treatment in the hospital; and they would be governed from a professional stand point. The whole movement is one of healing and self-preservation and not of charity.

Mr. J. Green opined that the only way to save others from consumptive contagion is by isolating those already affected.

To Ald. Shortly, Mr. Burnham explained that a little less than $150 a year would provide for one permanent patient at Gravenhurst.

This question was finally referred to a committee of the whole council.

ST. JOSEPH'S HOSPITAL.

An account from St. Joseph's Hospital for care of diptheria patients during the quarintine of Nicholl's Hospital, was ordered to be paid.

ALL SAINT'S CHURCH.

At the request of Mr. J. Green an electric light was ordered to be placed at All Saint's Church; also one at Charlotte street Methodist Church.

IMPROVEMENT OF PARKS.

The Property Committee was empowered to act on the request of Mr. J.L. Hughes for fencing in Charlotte St Park, planting trees and furnishing water connection "Providing Mr. Hughes takes care of the park in question."

Ald. Best moved in amendment, seconded by Ald. Corkery,—That the Property Committee be authorized to report on the cost of improving the various little parks in town,—Carried.

put in an appearance late in the evening and was cordially welcomed by the Mayor and Aldermen.

Mayor Denne publicly thanked Mr. Oke for courtesies extended him while in Glasgow last summer, and Mr. Oke replied that he felt it a duty to play the host to Canadian visitors at all times.

COMMUNICATIONS

Jos. Montgomery asked permission to erect a frame wood shed, covered with iron, within the fire limits.—Referred to Fire, Water & Light Committee, to consult with Engineer, with power to act.

From Edmison and Dixon, on behalf of W. H. Roberts, threatening legal proceedings against the town, if the long-standing obstruction on Bethune street, between Murray and McDonald streets, is not at once removed.—Legal Committee.

From George Pretley and a number of ratepayers in Auburn asking for a sidewalk from Brown to Smith street.—Board of Works.

From A. McMurrich, C.P.R. Solicitor, asking that he might have the privilege of looking over the form of deed to the company of certain lands on the water-front lots.—Town solicitor.

From Thos. McKee, W. Aldridge, T. B. McGrath and John Kincaid, asking to be appointed assessors for 1902 and requesting an increase in salary.—Committee on Appointments and Finance Committee.

From Robert Stuart, manager of the American Cereal Works, asking the town to try and induce the government to dredge the river from the C.P.R. bridge to Hunter or London streets, also offering to purchase from the town the waterfront lots, and asking to meet the council to discuss the matter.—Received.

From Thos. Gunn, complaining that the drainage at his place was bad and asking the council to take some action in having the drains put in.—Board of Works.

PTE MICHEAL MURPHY.

Among the list of Canadians wounded in the battle at Doornbalt on March 31st the name of one well-known town boy Pte. Micheal Murphy, late Col. Sergt. C. Company 57th Regt. appears. In December last Sergt Murphy enlisted for service in South Africa with the 2nd Canadian Mounted Rifles. Sergt. Murphy was one of the best-known non-coms in the regiment having served here for a number of years. He was a thorough soldier, born of fighting stock, his father, Patrick Murphy, of town, having served with the British forces during the Crimean war, also in India during the mutiny.

PTE. MILLIGAN.

Pte. W. P. Milligan was one of the best-known military men in Peterboro, district. He was a married man, and resided at Newtonville, Clark County, near Bowmanville. He was at one time a captain in the 14th Field Battery, but later was captain of the Bowmanville Company of the 46th Regiment, under Col. John Hughes and Major Ward, M.P. Previously he had served in the 48th Highlanders, Toronto. When the last contingent was being raised he resigned his commission in the 46th, and went to Peterboro and enlisted as a private. He was a noted rifleman, and distinguished himself at the D.R.A. and at Wimbledon and Bisley. Captain Milligan was a wealthy farmer, and leaves a widow (nee Robertson, Lindsay) and several children.

KNISELY'S BRAVE DEED.

Corp. W. A. Knisely, who is reported killed, was 24 years of age, a son of Henry Knisely, a farmer at Selkirk. He was a member of the Haldimand Rifles, and went to South Africa with the Royal Canadian Dragoons. At Lillefontein, Nov. 7, 1900, as related in Monday's Times, Knisely, during the sacrifice of the Canadians to save the guns, rode back in the teeth of the Boer fusilade to rescue Sergt. Price of Peterborough, who had been dismounted and wounded. Knisely carried Price away on his own horse, but finding the load too great for his animal, dismounted and caught a stray horse, while Price rode on on Knisely's mount.

Just as he mounted a bullet through the hips bowled him over, and he lay on the field all night and part of the next day before he was found. He received a medal for his heroism.

Knisely was a quiet fellow, and was very popular among his fellow troopers in the Dragoons. He was provisionally appointed a non-com, when recruiting took place here last fall.

TROOPER C. N. EVANS

Trooper C. N. Evans, though he enlisted at London, was a Port Hope man. He was 27 years of age and a school teacher by profession. He was born in Port Hope, and was a son of James Evans, harbormaster, who still resides there He taught school at Chatham and Amherstburg. Mrs. Hobart of King street west is a cousin of young Evans, and Mrs. Lloyd Wood of Isabella street is an aunt.

Col. Hon. F. W. Borden last night received the following message from Lieut.-Col Evans of the Second Mounted Rifles:

"Cape Town, April 2.—Regiment and Field Hospital under severe test. Have acquitted themselves creditable. Regret heavy casualties (Signed) Evans."

A reply was sent by Col. Borden, in the following terms: "Evans, commanding your regiment on its bravory, but deplore heavy losses."

Lord Dundonald, who will shortly be appointed to the command of the Canadian militia, lost no time in cabling his appreciation. In a message received to-day by the Minister of Militia from his Lordship, the latter says: "Many congratulations and heartfelt sympathy for glorious losses. (Signed) Dundonald."

TROOPER W. H. HUNTER.

Trooper W. H. Hunter is a son of G. Hunter of Philadelphia, but was born at Peterborough 24 years ago. He is a blacksmith, and enlisted at Winnipeg.

Your Breakfast Tells

The character of your breakfast to a large extent determines your condition for the day.

The use of Malt Breakfast Food will give you a full measure of energy, vitality and strength for mental or physical work and duty, and keep you free from distressing and depressing derangements of the stomach.

Mr. T. W. Dobbie, Provincial Land Surveyor and Conveyancer, of Tilsonburg, Ont., says: "I have been a constant user of your Malt Breakfast Food since last spring. Now, I never have a breakfast without it when I am at home. I find that I am not troubled with dizziness or biliousness while using Malt Breakfast Food."

This is the blessed experience of all who have made Malt Breakfast Food a regular morning dish. It regulates and fortifies the digestive organism, enriches the blood and builds up strength. Thousands of letters giving proof of banishment of stomach troubles by use of Malt Breakfast Food have been sent to the manufacturers of this noted cereal food. Grocers everywhere recommend the popular food.

SPEAKS FOR THE BOERS

Dr. Tillingham Says He'll Eat His Hat if His English Parish Does Not Support Him

Special Telegram to The Times.

New York, April 8—The Rev. Dr. R. C. Tillingham, an English clergyman who is carrying on a pro-Boer agitation in this country, addressed last night a half hundred sympathisers in the Assembly Hall of the United Charities building.

Mr. Tillingham made this answer to a newspaper correspondent who asserted that the minister was condemned by public opinion in England.

"If on my return to my parish at Helton I am not received with cheers and ringing of the church bells and if I am disciplined by the church authorities, then I promise, when I come back to this country next September, to swallow my hat publicly in the Fifth Avenue Hotel lobby."

The principal object of his visit, Mr. Tillingham said, after he had discussed the Boer cause, was to secure the intervention of the American people and Government in order to end the war and restore to the Boers their independence. To bring that about he advised the American people to refuse to vote for any Congressional candidate in the impending elections who did not declare himself in favor of intervention.

HOCKEY CHAMPIONS DINED

By Mr. J. A. Culverwell, at McCallum's Restaurant Saturday Evening

Mr. J. A. Culverwell gave a complimentary banquet to the Intermediate hockey Champions and a number of their friends, at McCallum's restaurant on Saturday evening.

A very jolly gathering assembled and did full justice to the abundance of good things provided. Among those present were Messrs. H. R. H. Kenner, President, and A. W. McPherson, Secy-treasurer of the Peterborough Hockey Club; Messrs C. H. Bradburn, Secretary to the Golf Club; H. Burnham of the Tennis Club; President R. F. McWilliams of the Lacrosse Club; A. J. McClellan of the "Coal-Heavers" B. B. Club; Geo. H. Giroux, of the T.A.A. B. B. Club; E. S. Clarry, Secy-treasurer Trent Valley Hockey League; J. C. McCabe; Dr. Scott; E. O. Bradburn, P. D. Kerr, the members of the club, and a large number of others.

The toast list was quite lengthy, and several hours were very enjoyably spent, in speech, song and story.

A noteworthy incident was the presentation by Mr. Culverwell, of the shares in the new rink stock, to the Champions in fulfilment of his promise.

The function closed with cheers for Mr. Culverwell, the Champions, and the King.

A CAMPAIGN OF ABUSE

Hon. J. R. Stratton Says That His Opponents Have Inaugurated one

In conversation with a Times reporter, just previous to his departure for North Bay, Hon. J.R. Stratton referred to the assertion made by the Conservative candidate, Major Miller, in his nomination speech on Saturday, to the effect that he desires, and will wage a clean, manly, fair fight, devoid of personalities and slander. "Why," said Mr. Stratton, "it seems to me to be plainly evident that the Conservatives have entered upon a campaign of abuse and vituperation already. Are the articles published in the local organ clean, fair and manly? Are they devoid of personalities?" "But," continued the Provincial Secretary, "I am aware of the tactics they intend to use, and the object they seek to attain, and, let me tell you, I shall take precious good care that, so far as I am concerned, they shall fail in accomplishing that object."

OUR WIVES, MOTHERS AND DAUGHTERS

Paine's Celery Compound

Reaches the Root of Every Female Trouble and Makes Our Women Strong and Vigorous

It is a most regrettible fact, and a calamity, too, that our women, young and old, are numbered amongst the most unhealthy of females in the civilized world. For delicacy of beauty, intellectual capacity, and for all graces that adorn the sex, they stand peerless; but it is doubtful if one in ten can be found who is functionally and organically well.

This absence of feminine health and vigorous vitality is due to a neglect of the nature's unerring laws. Immediate reformation is necessary if our nation would have women who will become true wives and mothers with an offspring that will prove a strength to the country.

For the special weaknesses to which women are now victims, Paine's Celery Compound is the surest and safest remedy. The wonderful strengthening and building up properties of this marvellous prescription devised by that eminent medical expert, Prof. Edward E. Phelps, M.D., LL.D., and its specific action in correcting disorders of the female organism are well known to the medical profession and to the tens of thousands of women who have been raised from weakness and disease to health and physical happiness.

Paine's Celery Compound quickly gives the true health tint to sallow and bloodless faces; it gives life and light to the eyes; it gives pure, clean blood to course through the body; it gives natural appetite, sweet sleep and that blessed cheerfulness which is the delight of men. Try a bottle or two of Paine's Celery Compound, dear suffering and rundown sister. Your condition, your family interests and the welfare of society demand this effort on your part.

THE ALASKA BOUNDARY DISPUTE

Nothing has been heard of the so-called Alaskan boundary dispute for several months, and a rattling of the dry bones of the discussion was, therefore, about due. The report that Canadian surveyors had invaded American territory and removed the ancient Russian boundary marks will be deprived of its terrifying aspect by the assurance of the Superintendent of the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey of the effect that monuments of the character described above had never been set up by the Russian Government. At any rate, no such boundary marks have ever been seen by anybody, and the commission of army officers which has been appointed to investigate the truth of the report will most likely go on in a vain hunt for the proverbial wild goose.

The delimitation of the boundary will be a matter of interpretation of treaties, and will depend mainly upon a determination of the meaning of the phrase, "the sinuosities of the coast." The Canadian authorities claim that the narrow and river-like fiords which run inward from the coast of the territory for hundreds of miles should not be classed with gulfs and bays, and that the word "sinuosities" in the Anglo-Russian treaty of 1825, conformably to which the boundary must be drawn, means the general contour of the shore line. The American contention is that every indentation, whether deep or of moderate concavity, must be considered a "sinuosity," so to speak, and when and arm of the sea—like the Lynn Canal, for instance—sweeps a hundred miles or so inward the boundary is pushed back correspondingly to a point ten marine leagues beyond the bottom of the fiord. It will be seen that the Russian monuments, if any should be found, would not greatly influence the decision of the controversy. Since the hinterland of Alaska was never effectively occupied nor the boundary officially determined by the two treaty powers, the marks would be only expressive of the possibly mistaken opinion of a Russian surveyor as to where the line ought to run. The framers of the treaty of 1825 imagined a mountain range to run parallel to the coast at a distance of about ten leagues, and agreed that the supposed Alaskan sierra should in a general way demark the line between British and Russian possessions, whereas the nearest elevations of land that would answer the description of a range are the Rocky Mountains. So much for the value of any geographical line that might have been drawn by Russian surveyors of the early times.

THE VALUE OF HEMLOCK

Of late years the production of hemlock timber has increased both in Canada and the United States, and with this increased production has come about an appreciation in the value. It is beginning to be realized that the difference between the price of hemlock and white pine is too great, and that the former has been selling below its real commercial value. A prominent lumberman made the statement at the recent meeting of the Ontario Lumbermen's Association that in a short time the position of hemlock would be where white pine is to-day.

In the year 1897 the production of hemlock in the States of Michigan and Wisconsin was 462,000,000 feet. This, with the growing scarcity of white pine, has increased each year until in 1901 it was 1,264,000,000 feet. In the States of Pennsylvania and New York, however, the production has declined from the maximum of twelve hundred million feet to six hundred million feet last year. Hemlock is cut for two purposes, for lumber and for bark. In most cases in this country the two operations are combined, and the person who cuts hemlock trees realizes from the lumber and from the bark. Frequently the timber is cut, however, owing to the necessity of obtaining bark, and the timber is accordingly sold below its market value. This has been a disturbing element in the lumber trade, and has also made it difficult for lumbermen to estimate the quantity of lumber in the market. In the face of this situation, however, remarks the "Canadian Lumberman," hemlock prices have advanced until sales of lumber have been made during the past winter at $10 at the mill. Lumbermen are recognizing its enhanced value, and timber limits of which the pine had been cut off have recently changed hands for the sake of the hemlock thereon.

EDITORIAL NOTES

Gravenhurst ratepayers have voted $15,000 to purchase a municipal lighting plant. Thus the good work goes on.

• • • •

Lindsay has recently given a ten years' contract to an acetylene gas company for street lighting by acetylene gas. Pipes have been laid on the principle thoroughfares, and the company has undertaken to supply 125 lights of 150 c.p. each at the rate of $25 per lamp per year, and 61 lights of 100 c. p. each, at $55.

• • • •

A Woodstock by-law submitted to the ratepayers got 740 votes to 208 against it, yet has defeated because 900 did not vote for it. The referendum proviso is not strange to Ontario electors.

A change is coming over the dreams of British workingmen, who have now a petition in circulation, started by Lord Masham, in favor of a protective policy. Forty-five thousand names were put on in Birmingham. The workingmen of Great Britain, says an English paper, are not all hypnotised by the "big loaf," and other fallacies of the Cobden Club. "They are also beginning to discover," it goes on to say, "that loaves, big or little, are cheap or dear according as a man has the wherewithal to pay for them, and that a "free breakfast table' is small compensation for decaying industries and diminishing wages. They evidently do not regard an increase, now amounting to nearly one hundred millions a year compared with fifty years ago, in the importation of foreign manufactured goods as quite such a proof of increasing prosperity as does the Coldenite. Under the daily pressure of facts like these, they are no longer in the mood to be solaced by the comfortable belief that 'imports can be paid only by exports.'"

Curious Bits of News.

The number of retail liquor dealers in the United States at the close of last year was 204,000. The total vote of the Prohibition party in the election of the same year was 209,000.

In the bottom of a strawberry-box opened at Hutchinson, Kan., the other day, the following note was found written on the smooth wood: "I am Cora Marsh, aged sixteen, of Logan, Mo. Never been kissed."

A man in Ray County, Mo., became convinced recently that he had incipient consumption. Every time he drew a full breath he heard a crackling sound. A doctor discovered that the crackling sound was made by a small buckle on his suspender.

A curious old custom was recently revived at Great Oakley, England, where parish lands were let by "pin in candle." The local clergyman presided. A pin is inserted in a burning candle, and so long as it remains in its tallow resting-place bids are taken. The last bidder before the pin drops is declared the tenant for the year.

A Paris schoolmaster has petitioned the French Chamber against kings still reigning on French playing cards. He suggests kings should be replaced by pictures of Thiers, MacMahon, Grevy, and Carnot; and queens by equally prominent women Republicans. The Parliamentary Commission sitting on the petition has replied that the change is impossible, since it would ruin quite a number of playing-card factories.

What is probably the most extraordinary plant ever discovered has now been found by E. A. Suverkrop, of Philadelphia, who, during trips to South America, has for some years been contributing to the collection of his friend, Professor N. E. Brown, of the Herbarium, Kew Gardens, London. The amazing plant which Mr. Suverkrop has now found is an orchid that takes a drink whenever it feels thirsty by letting down a tube into the water, the tube, when not in use, being coiled up on top of the plant.

Baltimore, Md., had a bulldog until recently, that made a practice of milking cows in the fields. Just how the dog formed the habit is not known, but it is thought he acquired it by following the example of calves. He had often been seen with the many cows in pasture about Mount Washington across a cow's back while she was lying down. His appetite for milk grew so strong that he was not satisfied with part of the supply, but wanted it all, and attacked a dairymaid who went into her barnyard to milk. He was despatched by a policeman with a revolver.

UNCONSCIOUS INFLUENCE.

SERMON BY

REV. GEO. H. HEPWORTH.

For none of us liveth to himself, and no man dieth to himself.—Romans, xiv., 7.

Somebody has said that thoughts are things. The phrase is unfortunate, because it is misleading and inaccurate. This world is made up of things and forces. Thoughts are more subtle than mere things and far more potential. They are forces which change a man's life for better or for worse.

If you apply the principles of wireless telegraphy to spiritual concerns you will see the full scope of my statement. We may safely do this, for there is a spiritual law running parallel to every physical law, and no man can discover a physical law without suggesting a corresponding spiritual law. In this way all thinkers stand shoulder to shoulder, lifting the world out of the old into the new.

The wireless telegrapher tells us that a word or its equivalent creates a vibration of the air, as a pebble creates a ripple in the pond, and this vibration speeds on its way to the destined terminus, however distant, and there makes itself known and felt. We are living in an age of miracles, or, in other words, an age of discovery, and this is one of the startling results.

In like manner a word of scorn or of praise hurled into the spiritual universe from a heart that hates or loves becomes a living force, not lost in the general confusion as a single note is lost in the multitude of sounds, but going straight to the man or woman against whom or in favor of whom it was directed. That other heart at the further end of the line, perhaps half broken by remorse or timidly hoping for better days, is the receiving station of this wireless telegraphy. Your thought, critical or gentle, strikes that other heart with an impact which either hurts or helps. You may not know that your thought has taken its flight, that other person may not know whence it comes, but all the same he is uplifted or oppressed by it.

This may seem strange and even incredible, but while it is to-day a possible fact, it may to-morrow become a demonstrated truth, and the next day it may change the whole outlook of the spiritual world. It has the appearance of a miracle, but profounder knowledge always seems miraculous, while in reality we only climb from the lower to the higher realm of law, see further and understand God better.

A spoken thought is even now recognized as a force when speaker and hearer are within earshot of each other. An oath, a compliment, a bit of vocal flattery go through the ear to the heart and kindle a flame of resentment or of happiness. What you say becomes part of another man's life and excites passion or stimulates friendship. Why may there not be a quicker transit than the slow and dull ear affords? Why may not the time come when we can convey our thoughts without the coarse medium of words? There are no words between us and heaven. A prayer is longing of the soul, "uttered or unexpressed." God speaks to hearts. The impression is instantaneous, as when the sun makes its mark on the photographer's plate. There are "unseen beings who walk the earth both when we wake and when we sleep," but they use no words. They make us feel their presence, and we are as sure that they are close by as though we heard a trumpet call. What they would say steals into the heart, for our poor ears cannot catch it. We hear nothing, but we know that they are giving us a helping hand. Is there any language in heaven except that of thoughts?

When the world grows older why may we not speak to each other without this cumbersome factor of spoken words? Progress is indefinite and infinite, and we are moving in that direction. We catch glimpses of the possible already. A look, a pressure of the hand, and contempt or sympathy is complete. Enlarge the circumference and you have a new truth. No one needed to tell the Christ what he thought. He read the heart as an open book. He looked at a man and the man's story was already told. Lips had nothing to do with it. The Master felt the woes and shared the joys of humanity. A subtler language than we can use was at His command.

A thought is the wireless message of soul to soul. Your neighbor's welfare is affected by your kind or unkind criticism of him. When we deal with subtle and far-reaching forces of this kind, then religion, which enjoins charity, is brought to the forefront as the most important factor in human life. If you would be at your best you must love your neighbor, for your thought of him will either lift him up or trip him to a fall. The whole trend and swing of the universe bid a man be honest, just and gentle, for we are so bound together that nobility in one kindles nobility in all, and one man's hurt is an injury to all. Since we are marching, one great company, from time to eternity, let us go as brothers, with a kindly word and a helping hand whenever opportunity offers.

STUCK TO IT.

In a school for colored children there was a little boy who would persist in saying "have went." The teacher kept him in one night and said: "Now, while I am out of the room you may write 'have gone' fifty times." When the teacher came back he looked at the boy's paper, and [illegible] "I have went home."

Huxley and the Reporters.

On his arrival in Baltimore, Professor Huxley was driven to the country seat of Mr. Garrett, who had offered him hospitality and had invited a large company to meet him in an afternoon party. There was but one intervening day between his arrival, tired out by a long journey in the interior, and his delivery of the address. He had hardly reached the residence of his host before the reporters discovered him and asked for the manuscript of his speech. "Manuscript?" he said. "I have none. I shall speak freely on a theme with which I am quite familiar." "Well, professor," said the interlocutor, "that is all right, but our instructions are to send the speech to the papers in New York, and if you cannot give us the copy we must take it down as well as we can and telegraph it, for the Associated Press is bound to print it the morning after it is spoken." This was appalling, for in view of the possible inaccuracy of the shorthand, and the possible condensation of the wirehand, the lecturer was afraid that technical and scientific terms might not be rightly reproduced. "You can have your choice, professor," said the urbane reporter, "to give us the copy or to let us do the best we can, for report the speech we shall." The professor yielded, and the next day he walked up and down his room at Mr. Garrett's dictating to a stenographer, in cold and irresponsive seclusion, the speech which he expected to make before a receptive and hospitable assembly.

I sat very near the orator as he delivered the address in the Academy of Music, and noticed that, although he kept looking at the pile of manuscript on the desk before him, he did not turn the pages over. The speech was appropriate and well received, but it had no glow, and the orator did not equal his reputation for charm and persuasiveness. When the applause was over I said to Mr. Huxley: "I noticed that you did not read your address; I am afraid the light was insufficient." "Oh," said he, "that was not the matter. I have been in distress. The reporters brought me, according to their promise, the copy of their notes. It was on thin translucent paper, and to make it legible they put clean white sheets between the leaves. That made such bulk that I removed the intermediate leaves, and when I stood up at the desk I found I could not read a sentence. So I have been in a dilemma—not daring to speak freely, and trying to recall what I dictated yesterday and allowed the reporters to send to New York." If he used an epithet before the word "reporters" I am sure he was justified, but I forget what it was.—Dr. D. C. Gilman in "Scribner's Magazine."

A Feat of Memory.

During a debate in the House, between Gladstone and Disraeli, when the latter in the course of his remarks had occasion to quote from a recent speech made by his rival upon some platform in the country, a dramatic scene was enacted, and is described by Harry Furniss in his recent book, "Confessions of a Caricaturist."

Suddenly Mr. Gladstone started up and exclaimed: "I never said that in my life!"

Disraeli was silent, and putting his hands behind his back, gazed apparently in blank astonishment at the box in front of him. Several seconds went by, but he never moved. The members in the crowded House looked from one to the other, and many imagined that Disraeli was merely waiting for his opponent to apologise. But Mr. Gladstone, who had a habit, which he developed in later years, of chatting volubly to his neighbor during any interruption of this kind in which he was concerned, made no sign. A minute passed, but the sphinx did not move.

A minute and a quarter, but he was still motionless.

A minute and a half of this silence seemed as if it was an hour.

When the second minute was completed the excitement in the House began to grow intense, Disraeli seemed to be transfixed. Was he ill? Was the great man sulking? What could this strange silence portend?

Two minutes and a half!

Some members rose and approached him, but Disraeli raised his hands as if to deprecate their interference, and they stole back to their places, conscious that they were forbidden to interrupt. Then at last, when the minute-hand of the clock had passed three times round its course, the most remarkable silence which the House had ever experienced within living memory was broken as the Tory leader slowly began once more to speak.

"Mr. Chairman," he said, "and gentlemen," and then word for word he repeated the whole speech of Mr. Gladstone from which he had made his quotation, duly introducing the particular passage which the Liberal leader had denied. Then he paused and looked across at his rival. The challenge was not to be avoided, and Mr. Gladstone bowed—he would have raised his hat did he wear one in the House, which, in the phraseology of the ring, was equivalent to throwing up the sponge. Mr. Disraeli afterward informed a friend that, working backward, he had recalled the whole of Mr. Gladstone's speech to his mind. Beginning at the disputed quotation, he recovered the context which led up to it, and so, step by step, the entire oration. Then he was enabled to repeat it from the outset exactly as he had read it.

Children

Have "eyes bigger than their stomachs," according to an old saying. They overeat themselves, and are tempted by all sorts of injurious and indigestible edibles. As a consequence the foundation of serious stomach trouble is often laid in childhood.

For children with "weak" digestion or whose stomachs are diseased, Doctor Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery may be confidently recommended. It cures diseases of the stomach and other organs of digestion and nutrition, so that the nourishment contained in food is perfectly assimilated and the puny child is built up by food into a condition of robust health.

Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery contains neither alcohol nor narcotics.

Accept no substitute for "Golden Medical Discovery." There is nothing "just as good" for diseases of the stomach and other organs of digestion and nutrition.

Mrs. Ella Gardner, of Waterview, Middlesex Co., Va., writes: "My little daughter is enjoying splendid health. I am glad I found a doctor who could cure my child. Whenever she feels badly I give her Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery and she is soon all right. She took twelve bottles of the 'Golden Medical Discovery,' eight bottles of 'Pellets,' and one bottle of of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy and she is well. We thank God for your medicine."

Curious Bits or News.

A minister in a Kansas town recently adopted a novel scheme for bolstering up the church collection, which had been diminishing. He informed his congregation, just before the plates were passed around, that the members who were in debt were not expected to contribute. The collection that day was double the usual sum.

It really turns out that the population of France has increased three times more rapidly during the past five years than it did during the preceding five, and, consequently, the recent French census is regarded as unexpectedly favorable, notwithstanding that the rate of increase has been extremely low. It is important, if the decline has passed the deepest point of depression.

The oyster trade of England has fallen in ten years from an annual total of fifteen million dollars to two and one-half millions. Sewerage schemes carried out by town boards resulted in flooding the oyster beds with sewage, and several deaths ensued from eating poisonous oysters. The alarm became widespread, and the figures quoted show the disaster brought upon the trade.

It is evident that one of the popular superstitions had no hold on the designer of Uncle Sam's silver twenty-five-cent piece. In the words quarter-dollar are thirteen letters. Thirteen letters compose E Pluribus Unum. In the tail of the eagle are thirteen feathers, and in the shield are thirteen lines. There are thirteen stars and thirteen arrow-heads, while, if you examine the bird through a microscope, you will find thirteen feathers in its wing.

According to the Birmingham "Daily Gazette," an extraordinary character has just passed away in a Carmarthenshire gentleman named Evans. Mr. Evans devoted his life to witnessing hangings, making the acquaintance of executioners, and collecting relics of murderers. In the early days of public hangings he would travel any distance to see a man "turned off." He was so fascinated by the business that on the death of Calcraft he applied for his post. As this was not granted, he set up a gallows in his own house and invited his friends to test the noose.

Exploration, says "Science Siftings," has now revealed relics of Menes, the founder of Egyptian monarchy, fashioned more than sixty-five hundred years ago. Of Zer, the successor to Menes, it is astonishing to find the forearm of his queen still in its wrappings, with four splendid bracelets intact. This brilliant and exquisitely finished group of jewelry is two thousand years older than the jewelry of Dahshur, the oldest up to then known. The arm of the queen had been broken off by the first plunderers, and had lain hidden in a hole in the wall of the tomb.

Two curious cases of the use of the magnet in surgery are attracting some attention. Dr. Garel of Lyons, France, has drawn a nail about two inches long from the bronchial tube of a boy of eighteen months from Buenos Ayres. The nail had been there for some time, causing the child to cough much. Roentgen rays showed the position of it, and an electro-magnet drew it out. Another successful operation of the same kind has been performed by Dr. Piechaud of Bordeaux, on a child of three years. In this case the trachea was opened to get a projection from the pole of the magnet near the nail.

Too Great a Risk.

"I'm going to give up the business," said a life insurance agent with a sigh, whom the Detroit "Free Press" encountered. "I don't care whether they meant it for a joke or not. It's a hard life, and people have no business trying to be funny at my expense.

"I have always prided myself upon my ability to land a man when once I succeeded in getting his attention. But I had a new experience the other day. I was working hard to convince a party that it was his duty to take out some of our insurance upon his life for the protection of his family, and I saw that I had him wavering, when I had to pause for breath, and he broke in with:

" 'By the way, how much do you carry on your life?'

"While I, taken unaware by the abruptness of the question, was stammering a reply, he escaped. The incident set me to thinking. I had induced hundreds of men to insure their lives for the benefit of their families, and yet I had never thought far enough to carry any insurance upon my own life. It didn't look consistent, now that I had come to consider the question, and I resolved to remedy it at once. To think is to act with me, and I sat down and filled out an application at once for a good round sum.

"I got the application back to-day marked, 'Refused—occupation too dangerous!' The next paper they get from me will be my resignation!"

swoon; I will have her out of it directly."

But Aleck was greatly perplexed despite Janet's comforting assurance.

"I knew she was very delicate, my pretty little wild flower," he murmured, bending his handsome head and kissing the lovely face lying against the white pillow; "but I did not know she was so fragile as this, my poor, pretty Daisy."

When Daisy opened her eyes she found herself alone with her maid.

She sprung from her couch with a wild, bitter cry, clutching frantically at the maid's arm.

"Is it a dream, Janet?" she wailed piteously. "Have I been asleep and dreamed a most horrible dream, or is it a reality?"

"Is what a reality, ma'am?" asked Janet, curiously, anxious enough to know what had caused her lady to swoon.

Daisy had turned her face to the wall, memory returning to her like a flash.

"Leave me to myself, Janet," she whispered, "let no one come near me, not even Aleck —my —my—husband."

Only heaven saw how wildly she wept when she found herself alone, pacing the floor, crying out that it was the hand of heaven that had taken just vengeance upon her by setting Harold St. John free.

Of course he had gone directly to the farm to claim her. What had he done when he found she was not there, that the farm had been sold, passing into the hands of strangers, and the family had gone none knew whither?

The neighbors would tell him how her father had suddenly acquired great wealth by the death of a relative; then, yes, then he would be eager to claim her as his wife. He would search the whole world over for her, and if he found her — what then?

"No, no, he must not —he shall not find me," she wailed madly. "I should fall dead at his feet. It would kill me to be parted from Aleck."

Then a great horror came over her as to what Aleck would think if he knew. He would spurn her from him with loathing and abhorrence, and one bitter word from him would slay her just as surely as the sun shone in the blue sky yonder.

From this moment as long as her life lasted she was never to know peace again.

She could never walk the streets with Aleck, never ride by his side, without the haunting dread of the sword which hung above her head falling.

She would have to laugh, be merry and gay, and all the while her soul would be in mortal terror, lest by the cruelty of fate she should come suddenly face to face with Harold St. John. The man would show her no mercy; he would claim her, now that she was heiress to a fortune, she well knew, for money was his god.

CHAPTER XI.
Harold St. John's Terrible Discovery.

As Daisy had supposed, Harold St. John lost no time in returning to the village in which he had wooed and won her, yet few would have recognized him as he stepped from the train, he was so disguised.

How would Daisy greet him, he wondered, as he walked up the well-remembered path that led to the farmhouse?

Something like pain and sorrow throbbed in his heart for the life which might have been so brilliant, and which had gone all wrong.

He did not realize how well he loved Daisy until he had been torn so rudely from her.

When he had effected that daring escape from the officers, he had promised himself that he would reform, for Daisy's sake.

Acting upon this impulse, he had refunded the money he had taken, making the first move in the right direction.

His hand trembled and his bronzed cheek turned pale, as he opened the wicket gate, and walked up the graveled path.

Would Daisy turn from him in horror, or would she forgive all for love's sake?

He would tell her how near that terrible leap from the swift running train, down into the swirling river, came to costing him his life. How he was rescued by an old fisherman in whose cot he lay ill unto death for two long and weary months, and how he had come to plead with her to pardon him, as soon as he was able to travel.

He expected to have a terrible scene with the old farmer, but he had determined to brave everything and claim Daisy.

What if she refused to go with him?

His brow darkened. He would force her to go with him. She was his wife —he would assert a husband's right to claim her and take her away.

What had she thought when the sunlit summer days came and went and brought him not; when the weeks had lengthened into months and yet no line from him had reached her? What had sweet little Daisy thought? Had she pined away and died through cold neglect?

Of course she must have heard that he had made his escape.

Had she watched and waited for him to come to her?

Ah, if he had met Daisy before he lent himself to such folly, life would have been different for him.

Hot, burning tears fell from Harold St. John's dark eyes. It was not yet too late to reform, he assured himself. From the moment he kissed those sweet pure lips a new life should begin for him. He was still young, accomplished. He would live down the past and build up for himself a future like other men.

He would take Daisy quietly away —he would take her to far-off California, where no one who ever knew of him would see or recognize him.

With face flushing and paling with emotion, he hurried up the rose-bordered path to the door of the farmhouse.

For a moment he drew back with his hand on the old -fashioned knocker.

How his heart beat! Strong man that he was, he trembled, his breath came hot and quick.

What if it were Daisy who opened the door for him?

Even though a hundred eyes were on him, how could he refrain from catching her in his arms, kissing her lovely face, crying out as he strained her to his heart?

Anecdotal.

After one of his trips to the Emerald Isle Foote was praising the hospitality of the Irish, when a gentleman asked him whether he had been at Cork. "No, sir," answered Foote, "but I have seen many drawings of it."

Disraeli once said of Sir William Harcourt in his affectedly cynical way: "He has the three essential qualifications of success in politics—a fine person, a loud voice, and no principles." To this, when it was repeated to him, Harcourt rejoined: "Leaving out the first two qualifications, it might almost be applied to 'Dizzy' himself."

Tradition ascribes to the second Pitt the dying words: "O, my country—my country! How I leave my country!" What, in fact, Pitt said was: "I think I could eat one of Bellamy's pork-pies." Which he did—and straightway expired, to the intense grief of the nation. This version is attested by the head-waiter of "Bellamy's" (likewise deceased), who told it to Mr. Disraeli.

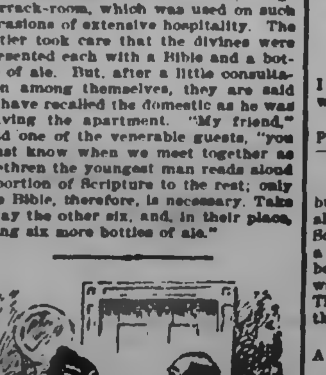
Louis XIV. was told that Lord Stair was one of the best-bred men in Europe. "I shall soon put him to the test," said the king; and asking Lord Stair to take an airing with him, as soon as the door of the coach was opened, he bade him pass and get in. The other bowed and obeyed. The king said: "The world is in the right in the character it gives—another person would have troubled me with ceremony."

When, a few years ago, the King of Portugal was a guest at Lord Salisbury's country seat, the Prince of Wales—now King Edward—asked King Carlos what had impressed him most during his stay in England. "English roast beef is very delightful," was the reply. "Oh," said the Prince, "surely something else has impressed you as well." "Ah, yes," returned Carlos; "of course, there is English boiled beef, which is also delightful."

A commercial traveler well known in the cycle trade adds this to the collection of jokes on newly made happy fathers: The hero is the manufacturer of the wheel which the narrator sells. Being compelled to go away on a business trip about the time an interesting domestic event was expected, he left orders for the nurse to wire him results according to the following formula: If a boy, "Gentleman's safety arrived." If a girl, "Lady's safety arrived." The father's state of mind may be imagined when, a few days later, he received a telegram containing the one word: "Tandem."

A certain Scotch caddie named Mathie Gorum was noted for his invariable remark after a poor shot by the person he was serving: "It micht hae been waur," which was meant to be consolatory and encouraging. His master, a clergyman, was wearied with this well-meaning flattery. Accordingly, to make sure that he would squash the remark for once, he told the caddie he had a terrible dream the night before. "Mathie, my man, I dreamt that I was in the place where the wicked are punished. I saw the wretched ones tortured; they were swimming in a lake of boiling pitch, and could not get landed for red-hot pitchforks thrust in their faces by demons." He halted a minute, with his tongue in his cheek, when, with perfect coolness, the caddie answered: "Aye, sir, that was a bad dream, jist awfu'; but it micht hae been waur." "Waur, you fool? How could that be?" "It micht hae been true."

It is a current story in Teviotdale that in the house of an ancient family of distinction, much addicted to the Presbyterian cause, a Bible was always put in the sleeping apartment of the guests, along with a bottle of strong ale. On some occasion there was a meeting of clergymen in the vicinity of the castle, all of whom were invited to dinner by the worthy baronet, and abode all night. According to the fashion of the times, seven of the reverend guests were allotted to one large barrack-room, which was used on such occasions of extensive hospitality. The butler took care that the divines were presented each with a Bible and a bottle of ale. But, after a little consultation among themselves, they are said to have recalled the domestic as he was leaving the apartment. "My friend," said one of the venerable guests, "you must know when we meet together as brethren the youngest man reads aloud a portion of Scripture to the rest; only one Bible, therefore, is necessary. Take away the other six, and, in their place, bring six more bottles of ale."



"Now, James, please remember: Left hand—Eggs, poultry, three yards of silk to match my skirt, lining for Mamie's dress, and a new reefer for George. Right hand—Nellie's ribbons, Harry's algebra, telephone message to Henry, a box of starch, and my new bonnet. Say them over as you go to town."—Harper's Weekly.

A visitor to a farm was especially struck by the great ruggedness and strength of one of the stalwart harvest hands, and said to the farmer: "That fellow ought to be chuck-full of work." "He is," replied the farmer, "or he ought to be, because I hain't never been able to get none out of him."—From "Success."

"I see that Mrs. Uptardeight is addressing the Mothers' Scientific Club this afternoon on The Care of Children." "Speaking of children, who was that youngster that broke into Snoop's candy store last night and robbed the till?" "That—why, that was Mrs. Uptardeight's youngest." — Baltimore "News."

Relics in Jerusalem.

The Greek Catholic monks, who are in possession of the chief portions of the Church of the Holy Sepulchre, are now going to build a bazaar opposite it, where pilgrims may purchase souvenirs of their visit to Jerusalem. During the process of clearing the site the foundations of an old mediaeval church, forty meters long and thirty wide, with three apses, were discovered. A number of fine capitals, fragments of basalt pillars, and bas-reliefs, with symbolic animals, were found, all these remains having doubtless belonged to the choir of the church. Last year a valuable silver shrine, containing a piece of the holy cross and relics of the Apostles Peter and Paul—according, at least, to the inscriptions on them—was discovered at the same place.

The Patriarch of Jerusalem, it is said, is keeping other discoveries secret, owing to his dislike of the Roman Catholic Church. Those mentioned above are all the more important, as it can be ascertained to what church they belonged. According to the statement of a mediaeval traveller, the hospice and the monastery which the citizens of Amalfi founded about the year 640, as a refuge for western pilgrims, was situated due south of the Holy Sepulchre, about a stone's throw away. The first church was built in honor of St. Mary de Latinis, and the second, the ruins of which have now been found, in honor of St. John the Baptist. The French monk Bernard, who lived there in 870, highly praised the hospitality and the large library of the hospice. A Mohammedan historian says it was destroyed by the Khalif Hakem, and rebuilt shortly afterwards, while, according to another account, it prospered down to the time of King Baldwin of Jerusalem, from 1100 to 1118, when the two communities of St. Mary and St. John adopted the latter as their joint protector. This was the origin of the Knights of St. John. The remains now discovered, therefore, are the ruins of the cradle of this order. It is most unfortunate that the preservation of these very interesting remains seems impossible, owing to the ill-feeling which exists between the Greek and Roman Catholics in Jerusalem.—London Standard.

A Defence of the "Old Maid."

A toast is offered to the spinster! We meet a great many pleasant people in the world, but nowhere do we find a more satisfactory person than that elderly unmarried woman generally and somewhat disrespectfully known as the "old maid," and supposed to be afflicted with "nerves" and a cantankerous disposition. As a matter of fact, she is frequently the sweetest, most self-forgetful of her sex. She usually walks, with tact and a loving heart, in other women's paths, lives in other women's homes, and rejoices in other women's joys, making them her own. The children adore her, for she becomes to them a sort of fairy godmother, one who possesses all the tenderness of a mother without the extremes of maternal discipline. She loves to give children a "good time," and does it with extraordinary success. In household details, what a treasure! How many dinners owe their success to her, who reaps no glory except the glory of doing! And in the ultimate trials of life, what a prop and solace she becomes! But it is to the young boy-lovers of the family that she exhibits the finest flower of her capacity for friendship. What a gift of understanding she seems to have! There is no difficulty she cannot dissipate, no fear she cannot lessen, no tender little half-scared hope that she does not encourage to bloom for the other woman. It is always for somebody else that she is working, and perhaps it is this which gives to her eyes the look that even the worst among us unconsciously associates with all that is best and fairest in life. Let them make fun of her if they will, but could we do without her?—Harper's Weekly.

Humor of the Hour.

When Tillie used to cross my path,
  Afoot, or riding on a wheel,
Her passing by an aftermath,
  A breath of violets, would reveal.

But in her auto, she, to-night,
  So fast that it could not be seen,
Rushed by me; and though failed my sight,
  I knew she passed—by gasolene.

The Veal Age.

This is assuredly the Veal Age in literature. People no longer ask about an author, How old is he? but How young is he—or she, as is usually the case. Of the writers on the staff of Josh, Gosh & Co. 65 per cent. are under the age of twenty-one, and 25 per cent. are under sixteen years. Sixty-eight per cent. of these write historical romances and 32 per cent. write in the colonial style.—"Book Reader."

A SIMPLE FAITH.

SERMON BY
GEORGE H. HEPWORTH.

Ye believe in God, believe also in me.—St. John xiv., 1.

What is absolutely essential in religion, so far as doctrine is concerned, is very little and very simple. The church has for a long time had a strange notion that in order to be saved a man must believe a long list of dogmas, whereas the only condition imposed by the Christ is that a man shall have a heart and a life full of love which lifts someone's burden whenever the chance occurs, and seek the strength to do it from Him who is Father to all alike.

There is this difference between what is called "a body of doctrine" and a spiritual principle, namely, that not everybody can either understand or accept the doctrine, while no man is so unlettered or so obtuse that he need fail to do what is right because he is in doubt about it. The road to heaven is not a tangled maze of statement about Christ or God, but a straight and open path from the trusting human heart to the immortal life, a path in which the little child and the grave philosopher may hand in hand wend their way with equal pleasure and profit.

You need corner-stones if you erect a building, and for a like reason you need certain beliefs if you make for yourself a character. Faith in a God who will never desert you stands first. It must be an unflinching faith, however, or it will give way in the time of emergency. You begin well when you begin with that, and you begin ill if you begin in any other fashion.

I have a queer suspicion that the faith in the ability or willingness of God to see us safely through all earthly experience is clouded by more or less doubt. It is a matter which we keep to ourselves, but deep down in the heart is a wonder whether this beautiful something which we call religion can be relied upon as firmly, for instance, as the sea captain relies on his compass in a storm. Hence the despair which we find when death comes into the house, and hence our weakness when a bold and insolent temptation assails us. We are not thoroughly convinced, and, though we hope that God is there and does hear us when we cry, we have a doubt which seizes us like a sudden throb of agony.

That is not religion; it is only the simulation of it. It is a staff of willow, not a staff of oak. It serves in good weather, but in the tempest it fails us. When Davy invented his wire gauze lamp as a protection against the explosive fire damp in mines the workmen looked at it and shook their heads. It was too simple to be worth much. But Davy had faith in his lamp. He lighted the candle, went into the bowels of the earth, sought the spot where fire damp lay in ambush and exposed himself to the danger. He had not only a theory, but a conviction. He would trust his life to it. No test could be too severe. He felt absolutely safe with that lantern in his hand.

That is the kind of faith we want if our lives are to become heroic. And when we are possessed of it we have something else besides. Faith in God produces faith that our earthly experiences are our discipline and our preparation. The moment you see God as your Father duty becomes not only clear and distinct, but easy. Alone you can bear but little, but with the infinite reservoir of power and love to draw from you are equal to whatever your position may be. If God is with you, then the angels who do His bidding will be your companions. You become one of the great family and will be consciously helped by unseen hands over the rough places. And this consciousness will grow clearer as your faith increases, until in the end there will be only a thin veil between you and the other world. You will live in the friendship of the departed as you live in that of the dear ones in your household. The Christ realized this, but we are yet dull of hearing and dim of sight.

Immortality will become not a vague hope or even a reasonable belief, but a demonstrable certainty, and you will live in the two worlds at the same time. Your last hour will find you with a smile on your lips and a great gladness in your heart. You will eagerly step out of a tired body to be welcomed by those who await your coming.

That is the kind of religion which men long for, and which they will have when they wake up from this half belief and this make believe to a realization of the glorious truth. It was Christ's religion, and it is our own fault if we do not make it ours.

—A couple of merchants who have been transgressing by depositing wrapping paper and other refuse on the market square, received a visit from the Chief of Police yesterday afternoon, and were notified to remove the objectionable matter, and warned not to repeat the offence.

A Letter from the Front

Mr. D. McCabe received a letter, last evening, from Pte. Craig, of the 2nd Regt. Canadian Mounted Rifles. Pte. Craig was well and hearty, when the letter was written and stated that the indications were that the regiment was then on the eve of going into action.

Ashburnham Civic Association

The regular monthly meeting of the Ashburnham Civic Association, April 8, in the Council Chamber, at 8 o'clock.

The question of "Tree Planting" will be considered, also other means of beautifying the village. Mr. R. B. Rogers and Mr. J. W. Garvin, who represented the School Board at the Ontario Educational Association meetings in Toronto, will give a report of the proceedings of that body. The question of "Domestic Science and Manual Training in the Schools" will also come up for consideration. A very profitable meeting is expected, and all are cordially invited to be present, whether members or not.

SOCIAL AND PERSONAL

Events Under This Head Transpiring in and around Peterborough.

NOTE—The Times requests its readers to furnish its paper with items of a personal and social nature, either by phone or in writing.—Ed. Times.]

—Miss (nurse) Mulcahy has returned to town, from Otonabee.

—Mr. T. Laing, of Toronto, spent Sunday at his home in this town.

—Mr. Herbert Armstrong, Millbrook, was a welcome visitor to his Peterborough friends on Sunday.

—Master E. Clarke, of Lindsay, spent the Easter vacation at the home of his uncle, Dr. Morrow, town.

—Mr. and Mrs. J. Rorke, of Norwood, are visiting at the residence of Mr. Thomas Rorke, Hunter street.

—Miss Lena Gray, of Barrie, who has been paying a pleasant visit to Miss Beatrice Dutton, has returned home.

—The Conservative candidate in East Durham, Mr. J. J. Preston, attended the Conservative meeting in the Opera House, Saturday evening.

—Captain Breen arrived in town from Port Hope yesterday, to assume charge of the str., City of Peterborough.

—A very welcome Ashburnham visitor is Mr. W. Harrigan, of Williamsport, Pa., who is visiting his cousin, Mr. James Harrigan.

—Miss A. Sherrin, of Barrie, spent the Easter holidays at her parents' home at Lakefield. She returned to Barrie on Saturday.

—Mr. Harry King, brother of Dr. D. C. King, has passed the first year examination at Saginaw Valley Medical College, Saginaw, Mich.

—One of Bowmanville's popular young ladies, Miss Beatty, has returned to her home after a pleasant visit to Mrs. J. Jeffreys, of Aylmer street, town.

—The Times had a pleasant call yesterday from Mr. Conrad Strewing, of Toronto. Mr. Strewing represents the well known firm of J. B. Ford Co., Wyandotte, Mich., the makers of the celebrated Wyandotte washing soda.

—The Montreal Star of Saturday published a portrait of Mrs. J. R. Stratton, with the following remarks:

Mrs. Stratton, wife of Hon. J. R. Stratton, Provincial Secretary of Ontario, a daughter of Mr. J. R. Ormond, now of Winnipeg, was born in Peterborough. She was married to Mr. Stratton in 1881. The marital relationship thus happily begun has since happily continued, and from the fact of its not having been blessed by children, has had a character of camaraderie more than usually intimate. Mrs. Stratton, has, therefore been closely associated with, and in no small degree contributory to, the success in public life her husband has achieved, and equally and deservedly shares the large personal popularity he enjoys. Mrs. Stratton's social popularity is easily explained by her charming personality, her genial affability, and genuine cordiality, which can come only from a warm and kindly heart, and by her success as a liberal entertainer and dispenser of hospitality. Her receptions and other social functions, whether at "Maplehurst," her cosy Peterborough home, or at the Parliament Buildings, at the Provincial capital during the session, are marked with elegance and taste. In these ways, indirectly, and directly by her sympathy and appreciation, Mrs. Stratton has been and is a "help-mate" to her husband in both his private and public career.

Knocked Down by a Rig

A lady was knocked down by a rig, in which two men were seated, on Saturday evening, at the corner of George and Hunter streets. She sustained no serious injury but was pretty severely shaken up, and thoroughly frightened. She was taken into McDonald's drug store where she soon recovered. The occupants of the rig drove away evidently caring little whether the lady was seriously hurt or not.

A Typographical Mistake

In our report of the Conservative meeting on Saturday, which appeared in our issue of yesterday, a serious mistake was made. In the resolution which Mr. Fitzgerald moved, the following words appear: "An organized gang of 'Conservatives' and election crooks." The word "Conservative" should have read "corruptionists." The two words are not synonymous, so far as Peterborough is concerned, at least.

His Farewell Sermon

The sermon delivered by Rev. George Yule, in St. Paul's Presbyterian Church on Sunday morning was the last the congregation will hear from the esteemed assistant pastor. His discourse, on the text "Saved by Hope" was an excellent one, and was listened to with deep attention by the large audience.

Rev. Mr. Wilson, of Knox College, Toronto, will succeed Rev. Mr. Yule, whose departure is sincerely regretted by the congregation.

Diarrhoea Weakens the System and if not checked becomes a chronic condition. No remedy compares with Nerviline, which is prepared specially for stomach and bowel troubles. As a radical cure for cramps, colic, gas in the stomach, summer complaint, Nerviline excels everything in the medical line, is an indispensable household staple, and costs only 25c. Y. M. C. A. Banquet

Arrangements for the Y.M.C.A. banquet to be held on Thursday 17th inst., are being rapidly completed. The sub-committees of the local Committee met on Saturday evening and reported progress. Invitations will be issued early this week. They will be sent to the senior members only. Mr. R. T. Colville, of Toronto, formerly Secretary of the Association, during whose term of office, the bequest for the new building was made, will be asked to attend also.

Lazy Livers and Sluggish Kidneys

When these organs fail to perform their proper functions, the blood becomes poisoned and suffering and disease commence. This can be avoided by keeping your vitality at high-water mark, the blood rich and pure by taking one Ferrozone tablet after each meal.

Ferrozone has a mild but rapid action on the liver and kidneys, and is certainly the greatest producer of red vitalising blood known to science. Morning tiredness, languor, dizziness, pain in the back and sick headache disappear at once when Ferrozone is used. Get it to-day. Price 50 cents, at Ormond & Walsh's.

MINISTERIAL ASSOCIATION.

The Local Ministerial Association Met Yesterday Forenoon

The local Ministerial Association met yesterday forenoon, the President, Rev. Mr. Bastow, in the chair. There were present Rev. Dr. Torrance, and Rev. Messrs. Crossley, Bennett, Kilgour, Hannah, Potter, and Armitage; Mr. Robert Harrison was in attendance also, and read a letter from the Field Secretary of the Lord's Day Alliance urgently requesting that the work and objects of the Association be brought more prominently before the public.

In this connection it was decided that sermons shall be delivered in the different Churches on either the 13th or the 20th inst.

Rev. Mr. Potter read a very interesting and instructive paper on "Commercialism in the Church" which occasioned considerable discussion.

MARINE NOTES

The steamer yacht, Rob Roy, is receiving her new spring coat of paint, and undergoing various improvements. She was taken from her winter quarters, and successfully launched on Saturday.

It is interesting to note that this staunch little vessel was launched on April 6th, last season, just one day later than this year. Her first trip in 1901 was commenced in a heavy snow storm, and she completed her final trip of the previous season, in a fierce gale of snow.

Capt. Roy expects to be able to take the yacht out for a run in the course of a week.

ST. MARK'S TO BE CLOSED

Two weeks' Suspension of Services to Prevent the Spread of Smallpox.

Very strict precautions are being taken by the Medical Health Authorities, to prevent the spread of smallpox in Otonabee. Dr. Shaw, Medical Health Officer, for the township sent a notice, on Saturday, to Rev. E. A. Langfeldt, to the effect that services in St. Mark's Church Otonabee, must be suspended for two weeks, as a precautionary measure. The notice will, of course, be strictly complied with.

The Conservative Ratification Meeting

J. J. FOY, M.P.P.

for South Toronto, received an enthusiastic and thunderous reception. The applause was repeated again and again and lasted for several minutes.

Mr. Foy said he would give his audience a plain fair talk on the political questions of the day. He congratulated West Peterborough on having nominated so earnest, sincere, enthusiastic and intelligent a candidate, and the candidate upon having such a magnificent riding behind him. He believed Major Miller will win. The magnificent nomination meeting during the afternoon was but a specimen of those taking place all over Ontario wherever Conservatives are being nominated. There has been a re-awakening in the province, and at the coming elections the Conservative party will win a sweeping victory.

Mr. Stratton's majority at the last election was a majority given him by the returning officer. Throughout Ontario corruption and boodling won the victory for the Ross Government. In 1898 the Conservatives were not warned and did not know that such crimes would be committed by the enemy. This time they are warned. There have been trials, and revelations of rascality that show how the trick was done. The tactics resorted to a few days ago in Montreal, to defeat Mr. Bergeron, were known. A Conservative scrutineer was bought for $15.00 and the ballot box stuffed in his presence. In one division where only one vote was recorded for Mr. Bergeron, several men testified that they had voted for him. The grit party appears to have grown so hardened that they are not afraid to openly commit such crimes as these.

"There is something rotten in the state of Denmark," and something wrong and unclean in the government at Toronto, and in the speaker's opinion a doctor was the man to cure it. Therefore Fr. Ford is the proper man to represent East Peterborough.

"There are,— said the speaker, thousands of honest, manly, upright men in the Reform party, who abhor and decry the misdeeds of their leaders just as keenly as Conservatives do. These thousands of Reforms will be with us at election time and by supporting the Conservative candidates will help to bring about the much needed house-cleaning at Toronto.

"Formerly the Reform party claimed to be the party of economy. We never hear them make that claim now. They have been increasing the taxes, subsidising railways and otherwise wasting the public money so long that they no longer claim to be the party of economy.

"Neither do they call themselves the party of purity, now, as they once did. The revelations of rascality in connection with the last general elections have silenced that cry. They formerly said they were Reformers. But Sir Wilfrid Laurier said, when he went into power that he found nothing to reform. They used to talk of law reform. Two sessions ago they introduced a bill purporting to provide for reform in law procedure. But the bill was dropped and has never been revived. The government has had to admit that street railways, and various other corporations pay only about one-tenth of their rightful taxation. They should have at once introduced a bill to remedy this great wrong. But they refused to do so. Instead they got out of the difficulty, by appointing a commission to investigate the matter. The commission did nothing and these rich corporations were allowed to get off by paying only a fraction of their rightful assessment.

Mr. Ross in his speech in North York on Friday night sets forth 39 articles showing why he should be returned. It is extraordinary what claims he makes. If all he sets forth were true, and if the Conservative party had done nothing, if he had done all he claims to have done he would have a good claim to be returned. But his claims will not catch any but the unwary and thoughtless. Some of these claims made by Mr. Ross I meet by simply denying their truth. For instance, he says that only for his party we would have no ballot. Well that's not true! The Conservative party does not object to vote by ballot. But we want an honest, fair and just ballot, that cannot be tinkered with and turned to evil purposes.

Mr. Ross coolly says that if the Conservatives had been in power there would have been no trial of election petitions by judges, yet in the next breath he admits that Hon. Sandfield Macdonald introduced a bill to this effect.

Mr. Ross says that only for his Party we would have no School of Practical Science, nor no efficient Agricultural College. I simply deny the truth of that statement. The Conservative party may have different views regarding educational matters, to those of Hon. Mr. Ross and his party, but we have never opposed education, nor the founding of educational institutions. I will read what a prominent Reformer, Hon. Mr. Mills, of the Agricultural College at Guelph, says on this point.

The speaker here quoted Mr. Mills to the effect that to Sir John Carling belongs the credit of instituting the College of Agriculture in Ontario, and also for the experimental farms, at a later date.

"Thus," continued Mr. Foy, "Mr. Ross' claim is confuted out of the mouth of one of the most prominent Reformers in the country. He says there would be no reformatories for females if the Conservatives had been in power. This is a mere assumption.

He claims great credit for the manner in which he has defended the rights of the provinces. Well, what does this amount to? The boundary of Ontario was a subject of dispute. The Province said it was in one place, the Dominion claimed it was in another, and they agreed in a friendly way to leave it to the courts to decide. The courts decided in favor of the Province. If the reform party had been in power at Ottawa, they would have done exactly as the Conservative Government did. They would have had to appoint a lawyer to argue the case for the Dominion, just as the Conservative government did, and that the decision of the Privy Council was in favor of Ontario, was simply because the Province was right in its contention as to the location of the boundary.

"The contention that the Conservatives would not have given the province a Minister of Agriculture, nor an Insane Asylum at Brockville, are equally baseless. If there had been inmates for an asylum who dare say the Conservatives would not provide proper care and keeping for them. Regarding the taxation of corporations they claim to have introduced a bill in 1899, to tax corporations which Conservatives opposed. This is not true. The truth is that while they were taxing banks and other rich corporations a small tax, they put in a clause enacting that street railways, gas companies and other corporations, were after February 1st, 1899, to pay taxes on only one-tenth of the value of their plant as scrap iron, instead of as rails, etc. The Conservatives opposed the bill on these grounds, but the statement that we opposed the taxation of corporations for the benefit of the Province, is not true.

"Then Mr. Ross says we would have given no grant to the Algoma Central Railway. This perhaps, may have been the case. This road is one of the Clergue works. Part of it runs to the Helen mine, one of the richest in the world, carries the ore from the mine to the docks to be loaded on Mr. Clergue's boats, from Mr. Clergue's mine. Mr. Clergue would have built the road himself, if this good, kind government had not helped him to build it. Mr. Clergue was given a charter for the road on condition—on the verbal condition—that he would ask no subsidy. He got the charter. Next session he appeared and asked for a grant of 7,400 acres of land per mile for building it. The Government agreed to give him what he asked. We, the Conservative Opposition, voted against doing so because we thought it wrong to give away all this land for such a purpose. (That is how we stood regard to the grant to the Algoma Central Railway."

He further censured the Government for granting subsidies to railways that had already received large grants from the Dominion government. On a number of occasions the government had put these grants through at the close of a long and arduous days' work, when a number of the members were absent, the others tired, and paying no attention to the speakers. This was a very wrong way to deal with the people's money. To vote away millions at such a time was a breach of trust. The opposition had insisted on a change in the policy. Some trifling changes had been made. In their pamphlet they give reasons why they should be sustained, but the truth of the thing is not told in the book. They take a great deal of credit to themselves that is due to the Opposition. On the question of a referendum they are silent, because they cannot please two parties. They had the liquor men on one side and the temperance party on the other. Mr. Ross and Mr. Stratton will not say anything on the question. I do not know whether they will vote on the question or not. They should say what legislation is in the interest of the people or say that the time has not yet come for prohibition. In every other bill they have introduced, they take the responsibility of handling it but in this case they do not. They are trying to shift it from one to another and will not say whether they want it carried or lost. They are in a very awkward position with the people and will have a difficult time in getting straightened up. After thanking the audience for their attentive hearing he invited everyone to carefully study the position and cast their votes in the best interests of the country and for themselves. If they would all do this he felt sure that the Conservative party would be returned by a large majority.

The meeting closed with cheers for the King, Mr. Whitney, and the candidate, Major Miller.

DANISH KING'S BIRTHDAY.

The Aged Sovereign Attains the Age of Eighty Four

Great Gathering of Royal Personages to Celebrate the Event

Special Telegram to The Times.

Copenhagen, April 8 — The 84th birthday of King Christian was celebrated to-day throughout Denmark. During the forenoon officials, diplomats and other dignitaries called at the palace and tendered their congratulations. The streets of the capital were crowded and in the square fronting the Amalienborg palace several thousand people constantly cheered the king, who in response appeared on the balcony with his daughters. There was the usual family gathering at the palace in celebration of the anniversary. The party included the Dowager Empress of Russia, Queen Alexandra of England, the Hereditary Grand Duke Michael, the Grand Duchess of Luxemburg, the Duke and Duchess of Cumberland, and Prince George of Hanover, and the Princesses Alexandra and Olga, the Landgravine of Hesse, Prince and Princess Max of Baden and Prince Hans of Glucksburg.

President Marroquin States This is Almost Equal to End of Revolution

Special Telegram to The Times.

Panama, Colombia, April 9 — This city was the scene of wild enthusiasm on the part of the Conservatives last night when Governor Salazar made public the contents of a despatch received from President Marroquin to the effect that General Gonzalez Valencia at Bogota had defeated and completely destroyed the armies of General Pecion Soto and Juan McAllister near Bogota and that General Uribe-Uribe, who invaded Colombian territory via Medina, in the department of Boyaca, was also defeated by General Nicholas Pardamo.

Governor Salazar stated that both victories were of great importance, because they meant practically the end of the revolution, leaving only the isthmus to be pacified.

The governor had received advices from Cauca announcing the approaching departure of 8,000 men from that department to begin operations against the Liberal general, Herrera, who will be attacked by 10,000 government soldiers.

Should Herrera attack Panama the Governor said that the Liberals would lose every man they had, because the intrenchments of Panama were the strongest ever built here, and could not be stormed except by a numerous army with heavy artillery, which the Liberals do not possess.

Washington, April 9—Senor Concha, the Colombian Minister, has received a cablegram from President Marroquin of Colombia, confirming the press despatches from Panama of the victories of Generals Valencia and Perdomo over the insurgents. It is believed at the legation here that this will end the insurrection in Colombia.

RUSSIA AND FRANCE UNITED

And Say There Can be no One-Power in China or Corea—The French Presidents' Visit to the Czar of Russia

Special Telegram to The Times.

Paris, April 8.—Figaro, in commenting on the proposed visit of the French President to St. Petersburg, says that the object is to come to an understanding regarding the Eastern question. That France and Russia are deeply hurt over the British-Japanese alliance, is only natural. Russia's cherished plans in China will not be relinquished without a struggle.

The proposed visit of President Loubet of France, to St. Petersburg, is not reassuring. At this juncture the meeting of the President and the Czar is most significant.

Items of Interest

London, April 9.—A despatch from Moscow to The Times says the United States Consul in that city has received a communication from the mothers and sisters of the students imprisoned on account of the recent riots, asking him as representative of a free and enlightened people to protest against the cruel treatment to which the prisoners are subjected. It is said the students are refusing food until assured that they will be brought to trial.

RUSSIAN RAILWAY CONSTRUCTION.

London, April 9.—A despatch from Odessa to The Times says that a Russian engineer from Siberia says that the construction of the great railroad is faulty. The Trans-Baikal section furnishes a good example of everything that the railroad ought not to be. More than forty locomotives and many trucks have been wrecked over this section, the ballasting of which is so that trains cannot run more than fifteen miles an hour. The engineer says many portions of the road must be entirely relaid.

MANCHURIAIAN CONVENTION SIGNED

London, April 9.—The London Times, on information received from a trustworthy source, says,—The Manchurian convention was signed at Pekin last Friday. Russia waives the question of special privileges for the Russo-Chinese Bank, and undertakes to evacuate the province of Manchuria in eighteen months. During the evacuation the Chinese are not to increase their forces in Manchuria without Russia's consent, and afterward China will only be required to notify Russia of any proposed increase in the forces. Only Chinese or Russians are to be employed on the railway.

Washington, April 9.—The Alaska boundary controversy has assumed a new phase, which may develop into a much more serious state of affairs between Great Britain and the United States. Reports have reached the State Department that a monument erected by Russia, to mark the boundary between Alaska, which until 1867 was a Russian possession, and the adjacent British territory has been arbitrarily removed by a Canadian official surveying expedition, and in view of this, Secretary Hay, by direction of the President, has ordered a personal investigation to be made by a commission of American officers to ascertain the truth of the reports. Capt. Wilds P. Richardson of the 8th Infantry and Lieut. George Thornton Emmons, U.S.N., retired, have been appointed as members of the commission. Capt. Richardson is stationed at Vancouver barracks, Washington. Lt. Emmons, since his retirement for disability, in January, 1899, has been connected with the Museum of Natural History in New York.

According to the information received here, Richard Frasier, a civil engineer in the employ of the Canadian Government, is the head of the party accused of having removed the boundary monument. The location of the boundary monuments is of the most vital importance to the United States in the controversy. To find them means that the boundary lines of the territory purchased by this Government from Russia will be determined, thus probably ending the question that has given so much trouble to Great Britain, the United States and the Dominion of Canada. For many years this Government has been attempting to find the monuments. Russia insists that they were actually erected, and that they mark the true limits of Alaska.

Since the discovery of gold in the Klondike country the boundary question has become very important, and there was danger for a time of armed conflicts between American and Canadian miners and others who had located claims near the supposed boundary line. Alarmed over the prospect of disturbances which might bring about international hostilities the Governments of the United States and Great Britain appointed what was known as the Joint High Commission, which met in Washington to endeavor to settle the dispute. They failed to agree, however, it was then proposed that an arbitrary temporary line should be determined by agreement. This proposal was adopted by the commission after much controversy, and a temporary provisional line was agreed to, its defination being laid down in the famous modus vivendi now in force.

Meanwhile Canadian surveying parties have been busy continuing their work of attempting to locate the boundary. Great Britain and Canada claim that according to the terms of the Alaska Cession Treaty between Russia and the United States the southern boundary between Alaska and the British Northwest Territory is a line thirty miles from the coast, but not following the water indentations. This Government contends that the thirty miles must be measured from the shore line of the indentations. Under the modus vivendi Great Britain has no tidewater outlet from the Klondike, but despite this a British custom house has been established at Skagway, an American town and on the American side of the provisional line laid down by the modus. Danger of a conflict at Skagway is therefore very great.

If this Government can locate the Russian monuments, and they should be, as is confidently believed here, within the territory at present occupied by Great Britain, the British case would fall to the ground and it would be necessary for British subjects to remove farther inland. The question of whether Great Britain is entitled to a port on deep water would also be settled adversely to that country. It will, therefore, be seen, that the removal of any Russian boundary monument by Canadian surveyors is a serious affront to the United States and requires explanation and redress. Should the accusation which Capt. Richardson and Lieut. Emmons are to investigate, prove true, it will be tantamount to proof that the Canadian authorities acknowledge the justice of the American boundary claim, and have resorted to sharp practive to prevent the United States Government from obtaining possession of territory rightly belonging to it.

Otto H. Tittman, Superintendent of the Coast and Geodetic Survey, has always maintained that no monuments were ever established by the Russians to mark the boundary, and his opinion is shared by many distinguished authorities. Mr. Tittman was appointed by this Government in 1899 to visit Alaska, with a representative of the Ottawa Government, to locate the provisional boundary line according to the terms of the modus vivendi. He has never been called on for an official expression of opinion regarding the alleged Russian monuments, but in many private letters to individuals, he has scouted the idea that such monuments ever existed.

THE NEW ORLEANS CAMP

The Station Below New Orleans, Where Horses are Shipped the Complaint

Boer General Pearson Declares Men Are Recruited There—The Governor of the state Compels Action to be Taken

Special Telegram to The Times.

Washington, April 9 — The report made by the Governor of Louisiana declaring that a British camp is established below New Orleans for collecting supplies for the British forces in South Africa was discussed at today's Cabinet meeting. It was determined to make an investigation of this charge, although Gov. Heard's report contains no details. The fact that the matter has been brought officially to the attention of the Federal authorities makes it incumbent upon the President to take notice of the charge. Secretaries Hay and Root will conduct the investigation, and issue such orders as may be required to put a summary stop to any violation of the neutrality laws of the United States.

General Pearson, of the Boer army, has returned to Washington from New Orleans, whither he went to learn the facts in regard to the collection of supplies by the British military authorities and their methods of operation. It was General Pearson who made the charge through Governor Heard that the State of Louisiana was being used to recruit the British army both in men and supplies.

General Pearson declares that America has contributed at least 42,000 men to aid England in her fight against the Boers, and has furnished the British Government with 291,107 horses and mules. The men, he says, consist of muleteers shipped from New Orleans, some of whom have been compelled to enlist against the burghers, and paid agents and men who are sent throughout the country to buy up horses and mules. He said there are one British general, two colonels and sixty captains and lieutenants in this country now, with headquarters at New Orleans. The General said that, although men are engaged with the understanding that when they reach Cape Town they may return on the first ship leaving for the United States, their passage is refused or long delayed, and every influence brought on them to enlist in the British army. With every ship load of mules sent to South Africa, the disguised British officers in charge of the transport and cargo, he claims, employ a small army of men to take care of these animals, securing enough men to assign one to every two or three mules. The men who hire as muleteers or stable hands, the General states, are of the lowest class, and care little what they do or where they go. He claims the British also have failed to keep some facts with the men, leaving them penniless in a strange land.

A resolution was presented in the House to-day requesting the Secretary of State to transmit to the House copies of the reports and communications in his possession relating to the matter.

SOUTH AFRICAN WAR MAPS

Places Marked Where Fights Have Occurred Between Boers and British

Special Telegram to The Times.

New York, April 9.—The General Dutch Alliance, which is conducting a propaganda for the Boers, has recently sent out from its press bureau in Dordrecht a map of South Africa on which all the places where fighting between the Boers and British forces which occurred in the months of November, December and January last are marked, the purpose being to show the activity of the Boers in those months and dissipate the idea that the war is over.

There is a set of maps for each month and the places marked are those mentioned in the British casualty lists. The map shows that in November the British suffered loss at 226 places, in December, 310 and in January 234. The British line of blockhouses is shown by crosses on the maps and one can thus easily see how often they were ineffectual in keeping the Boers from penetrating the inclosures.

Of the 310 places where fights took place in December 130 were in the Transvaal, 161 were in the Orange Free State as it is called on the maps, 19 in Cape Colony and 9 in Natal. In January there were 104 fights in the Transvaal, 141 in the Free State, 82 in Cape Colony, and the others in Natal and Swaziland. Three places where fights were mentioned by the British, the Alliance says, could not be found on the maps.

The Alliance says in connection with the map for December that in the northwest of the Orange River Colony, as the English call the Free State, the Boers seemed to be in undisputed possession, and the same appeared to be true of the west and northwest of the Transvaal. In the other parts of the latter country the Boers and British were disputing every inch of ground.

Pleasant Cure for Weak Lungs

The best remedy for sore, weak lungs, is the soothing vapour of Catarrhozone, which traverses every air cell and passage of the breathing organs. It treats remote parts that cough mixtures and sprays cannot approach, and kills thousands of germs at every breath. Immense Increase in the Production of Pig Iron in Canada

Special Telegram to The Times.

Montreal, Que., April 9.—The bounties paid by the Dominion government for the production of pig iron during the last year amounted to $551,250, which is $117,962 in excess of the bounties paid in the preceding year. The Canadian production of pig iron in 1901 was 244,957 gross tons, compared with 86,090 tons in 1900. The production during the current year is expected to reach 750,000.

PILGRIMS OFF FOR ROME

Annual Catholic Pilgrimage to the Pope Sails From New York

Special Telegram to The Times.

New York, April 8—The annual Catholic pilgrimage to Rome conducted by Bishop McDonnell of Brooklyn, sailed from this city to-day. Because of the fact that this is the jubilee year of Leo's pontificate the number of pilgrims this year is larger than usual, and includes about fifty priests in addition to a number of prominent laymen. After spending ten days in the Eternal City the party will make a short tour of the continent before returning home.

William R. Redmond Talks at a Reception for Freedom

Special Telegram to The Times.

Chicago, April 9—A reception was given at the Palmer House yesterday to the friends of the Irish Nationalist league in the city by William P. Redmond. The object of the meeting was to stir up enthusiasm for the nationalist cause and to have a committee appointed to solicit subscriptions.

Mr. Redmond addressed the meeting and made a strong appeal for financial aid to be sent to Ireland to enable the leaders in that country to push more rapidly the cause of free Ireland. A letter from Archbishop Feehan to Mr. Redmond was read in which he pledged his support to the cause.

A PAPAL MISSION

At Coronation—The Pope, is Determined to Keep in Favor with Great Britain

Rome, April 9.—In spite of the opposition of Cardinal Rampolla, the Papal Secretary of State, the Pope has decided to send important special missions both to the coronation of King Edward and to the festivities in Spain attendant upon the coronation of King Alfonso. The Cardinal's opposition to the sending of the mission to England was based on the fact that the British Parliament did not change the anti-Catholic formula of the accession oath, and Mgr. Merry del Val, whom the Pontiff designed to be chief of the mission, openly refused to go while the present wording of the oath is maintained. Nevertheless, the mission will be sent, and will probably arrive in London a few hours after the religious ceremony. This will be a repetition of the diplomatic manoeuvre carried out at the coronation of Czar Nichols II. at Moscow.

LEOPOLD IS SIXTY-SEVEN

The Ruler of the Belgians Celebrate His Sixty-Seventh Birthday

Brussels, April 9—The sixty-seventh birthday of King Leopold is to-day observed as a holiday throughout the kingdom. Since his return here from the Riviera, King Leopold has been very ill, and on account of his advanced years and the irregular life he has led his intimates fear he may be near his end. His doctors say little except that he is suffering from throat trouble, but there may be a hint of anxiety in their remark that they have earnestly enjoined the king to follow strictly certain directions in order to avoid complications. It is further reported that the king has been much disquieted by the political unrest in Belgium, which manifested itself last week in no less a manner than the public hooting of Prince Albert, heir to the throne.

It would seem that the gallantry of the Canadian Mounted Rifles, at Hart's River, on March 31st, has deeply impressed the War Office authorities with a sense of the great value of Canadian troops, as the following despatch will show:

(Special) Ottawa, April 9.—Hon. Dr. Borden received a cable message from the War Office last night asking that four regiments of mounted infantry be furnished by Canada for South Africa.

Special Telegram to The Times.

Washington, April 9—The following resolution was introduced in the house by Representative Sulzer of New York:

"That we sympathise with the heroic Boers in their struggle to maintain their liberty and independence, and protest in the name of humanity and civilisation against the continuation of a war which outrages the feeling of all liberty-loving people, and that the congress of the United States being committed to the principle of arbitration for the settlement of international disputes, the president is hereby respectfully requested to urge upon the government of Great Britain the wisdom of adopting this policy for the purpose of stopping the awful atrocities now going on in South Africa, and that the president is hereby directed to maintain strict neutrality between the contending forces and prevent the shipment of contraband goods from ports in the United States to aid the British soldiers in South Africa, and respectfully inform the British Government that the war in Africa must be conducted in accordance with the rules of civilized warfare and the provisions agreed to and adopted by the Geneva convention and The Hague peace convention."

A DEPRESSING VIEW OF SOUTH AFRICAN WAR

The Real Condition of Things Only Commencing to be Revealed

A CRITICAL TIME FOR THE BRITISH ARMY.

The Great Problem of How to Catch the Why Boer Yet Unsolved—A Fresh Complication Said to Have Been Created

Special Telegram to The Times.

New York, April 9.—On Jan 1 of the present year there were in South Africa, in round numbers, about 217,000 British troops of all arms drawn from Great Britain, Ireland, and the Colonies other than South Africa. Since then there has been a considerable reduction in the fighting strength from death, wounds, and invaliding, which has not been made good either in the numbers or quality of the reinforcements sent out from England or the Colonies. The blockhouse system and lines of communication absorb quite one-half of the effective fighting force; and after the necessary garrisons for the towns and military depots are provided for, there remain at the very most not more than 45,000 men for the mobile columns. The area to be operated over is nearly as large as that covered by the States of New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio, the two Virginias, Kentucky, Indiana, and all New England, with nearly every local source of supply wiped out so far as the two republics are concerned, and partially so in Cape Colony. The impolicy of the wholesale devastation that was carried out in the territory north of the Orange River is now making itself felt, and unless the British Government can induce the republican burghers and the Cape Colonists now in the field to accept some kind of terms, the winter which is coming on will be a critical time for the British army.

The real condition of things in South Africa is only beginning to be revealed. As far as it has been able, the British Government has kept back almost everything that could throw light on the situation, but the development of events has exposed the truth. From the very beginning of the campaign in 1899 the insufficiency of horses and mules for the mounted troops and transport has hampered operations, but at no time more than the present. The British War Office has poured animals of all kinds, good, bad and indifferent, into South Africa in one continuous stream to meet the demands of its Generals; but it was like pouring water on the sands of the Sahara. They were used up as fast as sent out, so fast indeed that at last the Secretary for War began to remonstrate with the military authorities in South Africa. In September of last year, according to the recently issued Blue Book, a telegram was sent to Lord Kitchener asking if it was really necessary to keep up existing monthly supplies. The correspondence that followed was evidently not satisfactory, for in November the following message, which speaks for itself, was sent:

"The question of resting horses seems to us of the first importance. We will certainly send officers to help you. But no change of hand will be effective unless you lay it down authoritatively that columns must rest till horses are in proper condition. We cannot continue indefinitely to send 10,000 to 12,000 remounts per month to be used up by column commanders in a few days."

This was followed up by a telegram dated Dec. 23, in which the War Office expressed the hope that during that month, January, and February 40,000 horses would be landed in South Africa, and asked at the same time if this would meet requirements, as it was desirable to reduce numbers as soon as possible.

In these despatches may be read the causes of the recent disasters to the British arms and of the failure of the British commanders to make any perceptible impression on the Boer resolution to continue the war. The political exigencies of the Government at home compel them at one and the same time to urge a speedy termination of the war and economy in horses, which are the instruments most required to bring about the desired end.

In the account of the rout of Gen. Methuen's force it seems that only about half of it was mounted, and that half made the best time it could in leaving the field to the Boers and the infantry to take care of itself.

The hunt after De Wet has been fruitful in the capture of Boer non-combatants and the recapture of rifles and guns with ammunition previously taken from the British, but in nothing else. How unreliable the British official reports are about the operations against De Wet and President Steyn, and of the way in which they are being hard pressed, may be seen in the fact that the latter carries a portable printing press about with him on which he prints periodically the "Official Gazette of the Orange Free State," containing news and extracts from European papers. It is the size of a sheet of foolscap, and copies of recent date have been found by British patrols in abandoned laagers.

The latest news seems calculated to dispel the optimism indulged in for a moment that the war was nearing its end. The Boer situation is by no means so desperate as it has been represented, and so far from the fighting force being diminished it is augmented by the Cape Colonists, not all of Dutch origin, whom the executions of Louw, Lotter, Coetzee, Scheepers and others, and the arbitrary enforcement of martial law against all the neutral Dutch colonists, have driven into rebellion. The casualty lists issued by the British War Office show that in the month of January alone, encounters of greater or lesser importance took place at no fewer than 234 points, the greater number being on the ground where Botha and De Wet are operating, while fifty-four were in the Cape Colony. The blockhouse lines with their wire fences appear to offer but an indifferent obstacle to the Boers, while the provisioning of the long lines of posts away from the railways will, as the winter progresses be very difficult. It is doubtless that this consideration which will impel the British to make a great effort to finish the war before the end of June, and the Boers to force the British to use up their animals in fruitless chases and drives.

If it is true that De Wet has been located near Boshof in the western Orange River country, the Boers have begun new tactics, and are seeking to force Lord Kitchener to operate at long distances eastward and westward from his line of communications with Cape Colony, and to exhaust his horses and transport while the eastern commandos menace his connections with Natal and Lorenzo Marques. A very moderate success in this policy would prove dangerous in the extreme for the British, whose forces would be compelled to scatter, and be exposed at all points to such blows as the genius of Delarey contrives and De Wet knows how to deliver. The inefficiency of the raw material sent out from England, added to the demoralization among the older troops remarked by the Boer leaders in the field in their reports to their agents in Europe, appear to make it more desirable than ever for the British Government to end the war by concessions, rather than in the face of other dangers threatening, to continue a policy that nerves the Boers to continue a resistance that must be fatal to one side and exhausting to the other. Already the natives are raising their heads. A deputation of those in the Bloemfontein district waited on the Deputy Administrator on March 13, and among other things asked for the same political rights as are enjoyed by other British subjects: the right to own land; equal educational facilities with the whites, and the representation of the natives by men of their own race. With a want of tact almost incredible, the Deputy Administrator not only bluntly expressed himself opposed to these requests, but in reference to the question of flogging went out of his way to express his opinion that the character of the native required that the use of the lash should be maintained. It is stated that the deputation withdrew in ominous silence, and thus a fresh complication in the South muddle has been created.

THE TREATMENT OF THE CONSUMPTIVE POOR.

A deputation waited upon the Town Council on Monday evening to ask a grant in aid of indigent persons, who, though afflicted with a worse disease that leprosy or smallpox, were yet unable to secure treatment. The theory generally accepted amongst scientists now is that consumption may be easily stamped out by isolating consumptives, just as we do with smallpox patients. In addition, if we would cure them, we must provide them with pure country air. Peterborough is one of the last places to take the matter up, but it can make amends for this by acting promptly. We can do without physique for one summer to utilize the money in a much better way. Many a life surely needed in a family might in this manner be saved, and those also which the patient may by contact infect.

Great Gathering of Royal Personages to Celebrate the Event

Special Telegram to The Times.

Copenhagen, April 8 — The 84th birthday of King Christian was celebrated to-day throughout Denmark. During the forenoon officials, diplomats and other dignitaries called at the palace and tendered their congratulations. The streets of the capital were crowded and in the square fronting the Amalienborg palace several thousand people constantly cheered the king, who in response appeared on the balcony with his daughters. There was the usual family gathering at the palace in celebration of the anniversary. The party included the Dowager Empress of Russia, Queen Alexandra of England, the Hereditary Grand Duke Michael, the Grand Duchess of Luxemburg, the Duke and Duchess of Cumberland, and Prince George of Hanover, and the Princesses Alexandra and Olga, the Landgravine of Hesse, Prince and Princess Max of Baden and Prince Hans of Glucksburg.

President Marroquin States This is Almost Signal to End of Revolution

Special Telegram to The Times.

Panama, Columbia, April 9 — This city was the scene of wild enthusiasm on the part of the Conservatives last night when Governor Salazar made public the contents of a despatch received from President Marroquin to the effect that General Gonzalez Valencia at Bagota had defeated and completely destroyed the armies of General Pecion Soto and Juan McAllister near Bogota and that General Uribe-Uribe, who invaded Colombian territory via Medina, in the department of Boyaca, was also defeated by General Nicholas Pardamo.

Governor Salazar stated that both victories were of great importance, because they meant practically the end of the revolution, leaving only the isthmus to be pacified.

The governor had received advices from Cauca announcing the approaching departure of 3,000 men from that department to begin operations against the Liberal general, Herrera, who will be attacked by 10,000 government soldiers.

Should Herrera attack Panama the Governor said that the Liberals would lose every man they had, because the intrenchments of Panama were the strongest ever built here, and could not be stormed except by a numerous army with heavy artillery, which the Liberals do not possess.

Washington, April 9—Senor Concha, the Colombian Minister, has received a cablegram from President Marroquin of Colombia, confirming the press despatches from Panama of the victories of Generals Valencia and Perdomo over the insurgents. It is believed at the legation here that this will end the insurrection in Colombia.

Paris, April 8.—Figaro, in commenting on the proposed visit of the French President to St. Petersburg, says that the object is to come to an understanding regarding the Eastern question. That France and Russia are deeply hurt over the British-Japanese alliance, is only natural. Russia's cherished plans in China will not be relinquished without a struggle.

The proposed visit of President Loubet of France, to St. Petersburg, is not reassuring. At this juncture the meeting of the President and the Czar is most significant.

Items of Interest

London, April 9.—A despatch from Moscow to The Times says the United States Consul in that city has received a communication from the mothers and sisters of the students imprisoned on account of the recent riots, asking him as representative of a free and enlightened people to protest against the cruel treatment to which the prisoners are subjected. It is said the students are refusing food until assured that they will be brought to trial.

RUSSIAN RAILWAY CONSTRUCTION.

London, April 9.—A despatch from Odessa to The Times says that a Russian engineer from Siberia says that the construction of the great railroad is faulty. The Trans-Baikal section furnishes a good example of everything that the railroad ought not to be. More than forty locomotives and many trucks have been wrecked over this section, the ballasting of which is so that trains cannot run more than fifteen miles an hour. The engineer says many portions of the road must be entirely relaid.

MANCHURIAIAN CONVENTION SIGNED

London, April 9.—The London Times, on information received from a trustworthy source, says,—The Manchurian convention was signed at Pekin last Friday, Russia waives the question of special privileges for the Russo-Chinese Bank, and undertakes to evacuate the province of Manchuria in eighteen months. During the evacuation the Chinese are not to increase their forces in Manchuria without Russia's consent, and afterward China will only be required to notify Russia of any proposed increase in the forces. Only Chinese or Russians are to be employed on the railway.

Washington, April 9.—The Alaska boundary controversy has assumed a new phase, which may develop into a much more serious state of affairs between Great Britain and the United States. Reports have reached the State Department that a monument erected by Russia, to mark the boundary between Alaska, which until 1867 was a Russian possession, and the adjacent British territory has been arbitrarily removed by a Canadian official surveying expedition, and in view of this, Secretary Hay, by direction of the President, has ordered a personal investigation to be made by a commission of American officers to ascertain the truth of the reports. Capt. Wilds P. Richardson of the 8th Infantry and Lieut. George Thornton Emmons, U.S.N., retired, have been appointed as members of the commission. Capt. Richardson is stationed at Vancouver barracks, Washington. Lt. Emmons, since his retirement for disability, in January, 1899, has been connected with the Museum of Natural History in New York.

According to the information received here, Richard Frasier, a civil engineer in the employ of the Canadian Government, is the head of the party accused of having removed the boundary monument. The location of the boundary monuments is of the most vital importance to the United States in the controversy. To find them means that the boundary lines of the territory purchased by this Government from Russia will be determined, thus probably ending the question that has given so much trouble to Great Britain, the United States and the Dominion of Canada. For many years this Government has been attempting to find the monuments. Russia insists that they were actually erected, and that they mark the true limits of Alaska.

Since the discovery of gold in the Klondike country the boundary question has become very important, and there was danger for a time of armed conflicts between American and Canadian miners and others who had located claims near the supposed boundary line. Alarmed over the prospect of disturbances which might bring about international hostilities the Governments of the United States and Great Britain appointed what was known as the Joint High Commission, which met in Washington to endeavor to settle the dispute. They failed to agree, however, it was then proposed that an arbitrary temporary line should be determined by agreement. This proposal was adopted by the commission after much controversy, and a temporary provisional line was agreed to, its defination being laid down in the famous modus vivendi now in force.

Meanwhile Canadian surveying parties have been busy continuing their work of attempting to locate the boundary. Great Britain and Canada claim that according to the terms of the Alaska Cession Treaty between Russia and the United States the southern boundary between Alaska and the British Northwest Territory is a line thirty miles from the coast, but not following the water indentations. This Government contends that the thirty miles must be measured from the shore line of the indentations. Under the modus vivendi Great Britain has no tidewater outlet from the Klondike, but despite this a British custom house has been established at Skagway, an American town and on the American side of the provisional line laid down by the modus. Danger of a conflict at Skagway is therefore very great.

If this Government can locate the Russian monuments, and they should be, as is confidently believed here, within the territory at present occupied by Great Britain, the British case would fall to the ground and it would be necessary for British subjects to remove farther inland. The question of whether Great Britain is entitled to a port on deep water would also be settled adversely to that country. It will, therefore, be seen, that the removal of any Russian boundary monument by Canadian surveyors is a serious affront to the United States and requires explanation and redress. Should the accusation which Capt. Richardson and Lieut. Emmons are to investigate, prove true, it will be tantamount to proof that the Canadian authorities acknowledge the justice of the American boundary claim, and have resorted to sharp practive to prevent the United States Government from obtaining possession of territory rightly belonging to it.

Otto H. Tittman, Superintendent of the Coast and Geodetic Survey, has always maintained that no monuments were ever established by the Russians to mark the boundary, and his opinion is shared by many distinguished authorities. Mr. Tittman was appointed by this Government in 1899 to visit Alaska, with a representative of the Ottawa Government, to locate the provisional boundary line according to the terms of the modus vivendi. He has never been called on for an official expression of opinion regarding the alleged Russian monuments, but in many private letters to individuals, he has scooted the idea that such monuments ever existed.

THE NEW ORLEANS CAMP

The Station Below New Orleans, Where Horses are Shipped the Complaint

Boer General Pearson Declares Men Are Recruited There—The Governor of the State Compels Action to be Taken

Special Telegram to The Times.

Washington, April 9 — The report made by the Governor of Louisiana declaring that a British camp is established below New Orleans for collecting supplies for the British forces in South Africa was discussed at today's Cabinet meeting. It was determined to make an investigation of this charge, although Gov. Heard's report contains no details. The fact that the matter has been brought officially to the attention of the Federal authorities makes it incumbent upon the President to take notice of the charge. Secretaries Hay and Root will conduct the investigation, and issue such orders as may be required to put a summary stop to any violation of the neutrality laws of the United States.

General Pearson, of the Boer army, has returned to Washington from New Orleans, whither he went to learn the facts in regard to the collection of supplies by the British military authorities and their methods of operation. It was General Pearson who made the charge through Governor Heard that the State of Louisiana was being used to recruit the British army both in men and supplies.

General Pearson declares that America has contributed at least 42,000 men to aid England in her fight against the Boers, and has furnished the British Government with 201,107 horses and mules. The men, he says, consist of muleteers shipped from New Orleans, some of whom have been compelled to enlist against the burghers, and paid agents and men who are sent throughout the country to buy up horses and mules. He said there are one British general, two colonels and sixty captains and lieutenants in this country now, with headquarters at New Orleans. The General said that, although men are engaged with the understanding that when they reach Cape Town they may return on the first ship leaving for the United States, their passage is refused or long delayed, and every influence brought on them to enlist in the British army. With every ship load of mules sent to South Africa, the disguised British officers in charge of the transport and cargo, he claims, employ a small army of men to take care of these animals, securing enough men to assign one to every two or three mules. The men who hire as muleteers or stable hands, the General states, are of the lowest class, and care little what they do or where they go. He claims the British also have failed to keep contracts with the men, leaving them penniless in a strange land.

A resolution was presented in the House to-day requesting the Secretary of State to transmit to the House copies of the reports and communications in his possession relating to the matter.

SOUTH AFRICAN WAR MAPS

Places Marked Where Fights Have Occurred Between Boers and British

Special Telegram to The Times.

New York, April 9.—The General Dutch Alliance, which is conducting a propaganda for the Boers, has recently sent out from its press bureau in Dordrecht a map of South Africa on which all the places where fighting between the Boers and British forces which occurred in the months of November, December and January last are marked, the purpose being to show the activity of the Boers in those months and dissipate the idea that the war is over.

There is a set of maps for each month and the places marked are those mentioned in the British casualty lists. The map shows that in November the British suffered loss at 226 places, in December, 310 and in January 234. The British line of blockhouses is shown by crosses on the maps and one can thus easily see how often they were ineffectual in keeping the Boers from penetrating the inclosure.

Of the 310 places where fights took place in December 120 were in the Transvaal, 161 were in the Orange Free State as it is called on the maps; 19 in Cape Colony and 9 in Natal. In January there were 104 fights in the Transvaal, 141 in the Free State, 53 in Cape Colony, and the others in Natal and Swaziland. Three places where fights were mentioned by the British, the Alliance says, could not be found on the maps.

The Alliance says in connection with the map for December that in the northwest of the Orange River Colony, as the English call the Free State, the Boers seemed to be in undisputed possession, and the same appeared to be true of the west and northwest of the Transvaal. In the other parts of the latter country the Boers and British were disputing every inch of ground.

Pleasant Cure for Weak Lungs

The best remedy for sore, weak lungs, is the soothing vapour of Catarrhozone, which traverses every air cell and passage of the breathing organs. It treats remote parts that cough mixtures and sprays cannot approach, and kills thousands of germs at every breath. Catarrhozone drives away pain, congestion and inflammation; it makes breathing easy and regular, and exerts a marvellous influence on coughs, colds, sore throat, bronchitis, catarrh, deafness and lung trouble. Catarrhozone cures at once, is delightful to inhale, and simple to use. Price $1; small size 25c. Druggists, or Polson & Co., Kingston, Ont. Dr. Hamilton's Pills cure constipation.

DOMINION IRON BOUNTIES

Immense Increase in the Production of Pig Iron in Canada

Special Telegram to The Times.

Montreal, Que., April 9.—The bounties paid by the Dominion government for the production of pig iron during the last year amounted to $551,259, which is $113,962 in excess of the bounties paid in the preceding year. The Canadian production of pig iron in 1901 was 244,967 gross tons, compared with 86,090 tons in 1900. The production during the current year is expected to reach 750,000.

PILGRIMS OFF FOR ROME

Annual Catholic Pilgrimage to the Pope Sails From New York

Special Telegram to The Times.

New York, April 8—The annual Catholic pilgrimage to Rome conducted by Bishop McDonnell of Brooklyn, sailed from this city to-day. Because of the fact that this is the jubilee year of Leo's pontificate the number of pilgrims this year is larger than usual, and includes about fifty priests in addition to a number of prominent laymen. After spending ten days in the Eternal City the party will make a short tour of the continent before returning home.

William R. Redmond Talks at a Receptio for Freedom

Special Telegram to The Times.

Chicago, April 9—A reception was given at the Palmer House yesterday to the friends of the Irish Nationalist league in the city by William P. Redmond. The object of the meeting was to stir up enthusiasm for the nationalist cause and to have a committee appointed to solicit subscriptions.

Mr. Redmond addressed the meeting and made a strong appeal for financial aid to be sent to Ireland to enable the leaders in that country to push more rapidly the cause of free Ireland. A letter from Archbishop Feehan to Mr. Redmond was read in which he pledged his support to the cause.

A PAPAL MISSION

At Coronation—The Pope, is Determined to Keep in Favor with Great Britain

Rome, April 9.—In spite of the opposition of Cardinal Rampolla, the Papal Secretary of State, the Pope has decided to send important special missions both to the coronation of King Edward and to the festivities in Spain attendant upon the coronation of King Alfonso. The Cardinal's opposition to the sending of the mission to England was based on the fact that the British Parliament did not change the anti-Catholic formula of the accession oath, and Mgr. Merry del Val, whom the Pontiff designed to be chief of the mission, openly refused to go while the present wording of the oath is maintained. Nevertheless, the mission will be sent, and will probably arrive in London a few hours after the religious ceremony. This will be a repetition of the diplomatic manoeuvre carried out at the coronation of Czar Nichole II. at Moscow.

LEOPOLD IS SIXTY-SEVEN

The Ruler of the Belgians Celebrate His Sixty-Seventh Birthday

Brussels, April 9—The sixty-seventh birthday of King Leopold is to-day observed as a holiday throughout the kingdom. Since his return here from the Riviera, King Leopold has been very ill, and on account of his advanced years and the irregular life he has led his intimates fear he may be near his end. His doctors say little except that he is suffering from throat trouble, but there may be a hint of anxiety in their remark that they have earnestly enjoined the king to follow strictly certain directions in order to avoid complications. It is further reported that the king has been much disquieted by the political unrest in Belgium, which manifested itself last week in no less a manner than the public hooting of Prince Albert, heir to the throne.

A DEPRESSING VIEW OF SOUTH AFRICAN WAR

The Real Condition of Things Only Commencing to be Revealed

A CRITICAL TIME FOR THE BRITISH ARMY.

The Great Problem of How to Catch the Wily Boer Yet Unsolved—A Fresh Complication Said to Have Been Created

Special Telegram to The Times.

New York, April 9.—On Jan 1 of the present year there were in South Africa, in round numbers, about 217,000 British troops of all arms drawn from Great Britain, Ireland, and the Colonies other than South Africa. Since then there has been a considerable reduction in the fighting strength from death, wounds, and invaliding, which has not been made good either in the numbers or quality of the reinforcements sent out from England or the Colonies. The blockhouse system and lines of communication absorb quite one-half of the effective fighting force; and after the necessary garrisons for the towns and military depots are provided for, there remain at the very most not more than 45,000 men for the mobile columns. The area to be operated over is nearly as large as that covered by the States of New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio, the two Virginias, Kentucky, Indiana, and all New England, with nearly every local source of supply wiped out as far as the two republics are concerned, and partially so in Cape Colony. The impolicy of the wholesale devastation that was carried out in the territory north of the Orange River is now making itself felt, and unless the British Government can induce the republican burghers and the Cape Colonists now in the field to accept some kind of terms, the winter which is coming on will be a critical time for the British army.

The real condition of things in South Africa is only beginning to be revealed. As far as it has been able, the British Government has kept back almost everything that could throw light on the situation, but the development of events has exposed the truth. From the very beginning of the campaign in 1899 the insufficiency of horses and mules for the mounted troops and transport has hampered operations, but at no time more than the present. The British War Office has poured animals of all kinds, good, bad and indifferent, into South Africa in one continuous stream to meet the demands of its Generals; but it was like pouring water on the sands of the Sahara. They were used up as fast as sent out, so fast indeed that at last the Secretary for War began to remonstrate with the military authorities in South Africa. In September of last year, according to the recently issued Blue Book, a telegram was sent to Lord Kitchener asking if it was really necessary to keep up existing monthly supplies. The correspondence that followed was evidently not satisfactory, for in November the following message, which speaks for itself, was sent:

"The question of resting horses seems to us of the first importance. We will certainly send officers to help you. But no change of hand will be effective unless you lay it down authoritatively that columns must rest till horses are in proper condition. We cannot continue indefinitely to send 10,000 to 12,000 remounts per month to be used up by column commanders in a few days."

This was followed up by a telegram dated Dec. 23, in which the War Office expressed the hope that during that month, January, and February 40,000 horses would be landed in South Africa, and asked at the same time if this would meet requirements, as it was desirable to reduce numbers as soon as possible.

In these despatches may be read the causes of the recent disasters to the British arms and of the failure of the British commanders to make any perceptible impression on the Boer resolution to continue the war. The political exigencies of the Government at home compel them at one and the same time to urge a speedy termination of the war and economy in horses, which are the instruments most required to bring about the desired end.

In the account of the rout of Gen. Methuen's force it seems that only about half of it was mounted, and that half made the best time it could in leaving the field to the Boers and the infantry to take care of itself.

The hunt after De Wet has been fruitful in the capture of Boer non-combatants and the recapture of rifles and guns with ammunition previously taken from the British, but in nothing else. How unreliable the British official reports are about the operations against De Wet and President Steyn, and of the way in which they are being hard pressed, may be seen in the fact that the latter carries a portable printing press about with him on which he prints periodically the "Official Gazette of the Orange Free State," containing news and extracts from European papers. It is the size of a sheet of foolscap, and copies of recent date have been found by British patrols in abandoned laagers.

The latest news seems calculated to dispel the optimism indulged in for a moment that the war was nearing its end. The Boer situation is by no means so desperate as it has been represented, and so far from the fighting force being diminished it is augmented by the Cape Colonists, not all of Dutch origin, whom the executions of Louw, Lotter, Coetsee, Scheepers and others, and the arbitrary enforcement of martial law against all the neutral Dutch colonists, have driven into rebellion. The casualty lists issued by the British War Office show that in the month of January alone, encounters of greater or lesser importance took place at no fewer than 234 points, the greater number being on the ground where Botha and De Wet are operating, while fifty-four were in the Cape Colony. The blockhouse lines with their wire fences appear to offer but an indifferent obstacle to the Boers, while the provisioning of the long lines of posts away from the railways will, as the winter progresses be very difficult. It is doubtless that this consideration which will impel the British to make a great effort to finish the war before the end of June, and the Boers to force the British to use up their animals in fruitless chases and drives.

If it is true that De Wet has been located near Boshof in the western Orange River country, the Boers have begun new tactics, and are seeking to force Lord Kitchener to operate at long distances eastward and westward from his line of communications with Cape Colony, and to exhaust his horses and transport while the eastern commandos menace his connections with Natal and Lorenzo Marques. A very moderate success in this policy would prove dangerous in the extreme for the British, whose forces would be compelled to scatter, and be exposed at all points to such blows as the genius of Delarey contrives and De Wet knows how to deliver. The inefficiency of the raw material sent out from England, added to the demoralization among the older troops remarked by the Boer leaders in the field in their reports to their agents in Europe, appear to make it more desirable than ever for the British Government to end the war by concessions, rather than in the face of other dangers threatening, to continue a policy that nerves the Boers to continue a resistance that must be fatal to one side and exhausting to the other. Already the natives are raising their heads. A deputation of those in the Bloemfontein district waited on the Deputy Administrator on March 12, and among other things asked for the same political rights as are enjoyed by other British subjects: the right to own land; equal educational facilities with the whites, and the representation of the natives by men of their own race. With a want of tact almost incredible, the Deputy Administrator not only bluntly expressed himself opposed to these requests, but in reference to the question of flogging went out of his way to express his opinion that the character of the native required that the use of the lash should be maintained. It is stated that the deputation withdrew in ominous silence, and thus a fresh complication in the South muddle has been created.

THE TREATMENT OF THE CONSUMPTIVE POOR.

A deputation waited upon the Town Council on Monday evening to ask a grant in aid of indigent persons, who, though afflicted with a worse disease than leprosy or smallpox, were yet unable to secure treatment. The theory generally accepted amongst scientists now is that consumption may be easily stamped out by isolating consumptives, just as we do with smallpox patients. In addition, if we would cure them, we must provide them with pure country air. Peterborough is one of the last places to take the matter up, but it can make amends for this by acting promptly. We can do without [illegible] for one summer to utilize the money in a much better way. Many a life sorely needed in a family might in this manner be saved, and those also which the patient may by contact infect.

THE PROHIBITION CANDIDATE

Major Miller, although nominally the Conservative, is, in his own declaration, the Prohibition and Labour candidate for this riding. As his policy on the great question of the day is diametrically opposed to that of Mr. Whitney, it is stretching a point for the Conservatives to claim that he is their candidate. Whether he is the authorized Labour candidate or not, is yet to be seen. We think it will be found that Mr. Stratton is the Labour candidate. However, no good can come of belittling Mr. Miller, as a mere shoemaker. This style of criticism is contemptible, and will do more harm to the Liberals than it will do good. Fault was found with the Conservatives for bringing out a butcher in our old friend and popular fellow citizen, Mr. Harry Winch, but we are not aware that this assumption of social superiority of the Liberals injured the Conservatives. That Mr. Stratton will be returned is everywhere admitted, but his majority may not be so large as heretofore. Dr. Ford may have paved his way by his admirable and candid statement of Saturday night, for a victory in the East Riding. He is a man of long standing in temperance circles, and the liquor interest in the East is so small that it will not be considered worth rescuing. The Government will probably be returned again, notwithstanding the diversity and activity of the elements of opposition.

CHINA'S STUPIDITY

China is rapidly going back to her old policy of opposition to progress. The government is absolutely powerless to develop anything of China's vast natural resources, and it will not allow foreigners to help with this work. The so-called "concessions" are not concessions at all, for the demands of the Government are for a fourth part of the profits, and to this is added a further demand for from 5 to 25 per cent. of the output of coal, iron and precious stones. Such demands are practically prohibitory.

Recently the Chinese Minister at Tokio has protested against the sending of Chinese students to the military schools of Japan on the ground that they might imbibe "revolutionary ideas." There is no hope for a nation that cannot learn even in the hard school of experience, and when China refuses to learn the art of self-defence from Japan after her expensive experience in war, it is useless to hope for anything from the present dynasty. In the interest of humanity, China ought to be opened to the world, and the cruel and crafty old she-devil, who dominates the Imperial court, should be put out of the way of doing further harm. It would be an act of mercy to the Chinese themselves to force upon them some of the civilization of the west.

BOARD OF HEALTH

The Ashburnham Board of Health Held Their Annual Meeting Last Night

The annual meeting of the Ashburnham Board of Health was held in the Council chamber Monday. Those present were, Mr. J. Smith, Chairman, Messrs Wood, McCarthy, Adams, Wright, Dr. Bingham, Village Health Officer.

After the reading of the minutes of the last meeting of the Board, the election of chairman of the Board resulted in the re-election of Mr. J. H. Smith.

The report of the Medical Health Officer was presented which showed that in the year 1901 there were 22 deaths. Several cases of scarlet fever and diphtheria broke out but were of a very mild type. During the year several manure heaps and hog pens were removed to a safe distance from dwelling houses. Very few wells were complained of as containing impure water. No complaint was made during the year relating to the bone yard. The citizens generally seem to take great interest in complaining with the requirements of the health act.

Diptheria is largely due to sleeping in damp unventilated rooms, defective plumbing, and bad sewerage. These defects should be carefully looked into. Taking the year all through the authorities are to be congratulated on the very healthy condition of the town.

On motion the report was adopted.

There being no other business to be taken up by the board the meeting adjourned to meet again at the call of the chair.

TROOPER TRUSLER IN SOUTH AFRICA

Interesting Letter From Member of Canadian Mounted Rifles

A LOVELY VOYAGE OF 34 DAYS

Arriving at Durban on February 11th—How the Boys Put in Their Time on Route

The following letter reached The Times on Monday from Trooper A. Trusler, of the Canadian Mounted Rifles, and will prove interesting reading:

Newcastle, Natal, South Africa,
March 2, 1902

After a lovely voyage of 32 days we arrived at Durban on the 11th of February. Some of the boys thought they were going to land at Cape Town, but on our arrival there we got orders to proceed to Durban, which is 800 miles farther up the coast. The scene was lovely, we being in sight of land all the way from the Cape. It was very hot, however, especially in the Indian ocean, and an ice cream or cream soda would have been very acceptable. On our arrival at Durban, we were very busy unloading horses, luggage, etc., but I was lucky; I happened to be on guard and had a snap. I just sat down eating pineapples and peaches, and roasted the other fellows.

We did not get a chance to see much of Durban, for as soon as our horses, saddles, etc., were unloaded, we entrained for Newcastle, our present camping place. We passed several historic places, such as Pietermaritzburg, Estcourt, Ladysmith, and crossed the Tugela river at the spot where Lieut. Roberts lost his life. We had two hours at Ladysmith, and our curiosity led us to examine some of the holes in buildings caused by the Boer shells, and it was very interesting to see the boys look and talk. It must have been a very trying time indeed for the besieged, for it is surrounded by hills and kopjes all around, and Ladysmith is in a valley, and a beautiful spot.

We arrived at this place tired and hungry, for we got no sleep on the train, and none on the night previous to disembarking. We took our horses off the train and had to lead them about three miles. The heat was terrible, and lo and behold when we got to our camp we found our line ropes had been left behind, consequently we had to stand up with our horses all night and hold them, but they were as tired as we were and did not bother us. Our line ropes came next day and we got a rest that night, and we slept soundly and dreamt of home and friends. We came for hardships and we must submit.

Yesterday morning we sounded reveille at 3 a.m. and in a deluge of rain saddled up and went out for a couple of miles. We got back at 6 o'clock and after coffee and punk we again saddled and were inspected by Lord Kitchener, but we were a nice looking lot, wet to the skin, and everything soiled with mud, but of course out here we are not expected to shine up. Lord Kitchener was well pleased with us, however, and complimented us on the fine shape our horses were in and hoped we would soon be able to take the field and help keep the enemy on the move, and we expect to be on the move in a day or two.

Natal is a fine country, very fertile, and fine grazing for horses everywhere. Fruit is plentiful, and we are always chewing a pineapple or a peach or bananas. This is the wet season and it is raining as I write, and the boys are all in the tent and we are very crowded, 17 men being in one tent. We are well supplied with rations and taking everything into consideration we are as comfortable as could be expected. Major Merritt is kept very busy, as Col. Evans' detachment is not with us, as the party who came on the Victorian have several cases of smallpox and are camped about three miles from us and isolated completely, but there are no new cases since landing.

Dundas and Hubbs are having a chewing match just as I write and we are trying to choke Putty off, but he is all right every other way. All the boys are getting their drill down fine, and enjoy riding.

Well, I guess I will have to close this time. Kindly remember me to the boys at home, and hoping to hear from you soon I am dear Sir, yours respectfully, (218) TROOPER A. TRUSLER.

LINE BEING DRAWN AROUND MURDERER

That is the Conviction of Those Who Ought to Know

DETECTIVES WORKING QUIETLY

And Believe the Murderer Will Be in Custody in a Few Days—Excitement Dying Out

Brantford, April 8.—Nothing new has appeared on the surface in regard to the murder mystery, but the police authorities have not been idle and the lines are being drawn tighter around the supposed murderer. Although they will not say anything about the matter, they have had a man under suspicion for some time, and have succeeded in working up considerable evidence against him.

More importance is being attached to the fact of the bars of the front gate being found down after the murder was committed. Notwithstanding what Detective Murray says in regard to it, the impression is growing that the man who committed the crime made his escape in that way. A prominent veterinary surgeon living on Dalhousie street states that about 12 o'clock on the night of the murder he heard a man running quickly eastward down the street. Another gentleman who lives a few blocks farther east asserts that he also heard the footsteps passing his house. This would go to show that the murderer made his escape before the crime was discovered, and circumstances favored him as no one seems to have seen him leaving the vicinity of the crime.

The impression continues to grow that the act was committed for purposes of robbery. It will be remembered that about $200, which was known to be in Quirk's possession at the time, has not yet been found.

Another theory as to the motive of the deed that finds much support is that it was inspired by hatred arising from a chicken deal of some time previous.

The whereabouts of Detective Murray are not known, but he is expected back in the city this week. It is generally understood that he is still hard at work on the case, and that he has been tracing up the antecedents of at least one suspected party.

NEW INAUGURATION DAY.

An Effort Being Made to Change the Date of Inauguration

(Special Telegram to The Times)

Washington, D.C., April 7.—In response to the invitation of the District Commissioners the Governors of several states will gather in Washington to-day to further consider the proposition to change Inauguration Day from March 4 to a date later in the spring, when there is likely to be fair weather. Those Governors who were unable to accept the invitation in person have sent their views in writing so that the conference will bring out a full expression of opinion.

The resolution which passed the Senate recently set the last Thursday in April as the day for inauguration. There is some following for the proposition to name April 30, as that is the date on which President Washington was first inaugurated. A majority of the Governors, however, seem to favor the last Thursday in April, and will support the Senate resolution.

ASHBURNHAM COUNCIL

Large Amount of Business Transacted—Union Scale of Wages Adopted

The regular meeting of the Ashburnham village Council was held in the Council chamber Monday. Those present were Reeve Smith, Councilor Johnston, Sheridan, Pollock, Adams.

The minutes of the last meeting were read and confirmed.

ACCOUNTS.

The following accounts were presented and ordered to be paid,—

Peterboro Hardware Co	$ 9 40
Harry Thompson (stamps)	1 00
Dr. Bingham	12 50
A. H. Stratton	95
J. E. A. Fitzgerald	5 35
Pay sheet 5	63 85
Pay sheet 6	10 75

RECEIPTS AND EXPENDITURE.

The statement of Receipts and Expenditure presented by the Treasurer showed the Receipts from March to April 5, to be $193.75 and Expenditure to $1,718.39.

COMMUNICATIONS.

From the Ashburnham Civic Association asking that the village council take steps to number the houses in the village,—Received.

From the Mother Superior, asking the village to assist in keeping a poor woman in the House of Providence, the woman having been in the house during the greater part of the winter. Mr. Pollock was instructed to look into the matter. A sum of $3.50 was granted.

The tenders for street watering brought out five tenders ranging from $215.00 to $360.00. The tender of Mr. Martin Kylie at $215.00 was accepted.

The communication from the Civic Association was referred to a committee to enquire into.

The sum of $100.00 being the proceeds from the sale of a gravel lot was voted toward the sinking fund.

A By-law authorizing the Village Treasurer to borrow the sum of $5000 to meet the expenses for the current year was passed.

Mr. O'Connell was refunded the sum of $11.90, being price paid at Treasurers sale of lands for taxes as no proper title could be obtained for the property.

A large deputation from the American Federation of Labor interviewed the Council of the village regarding the notice given by the Union and asking that the scale set be paid by the village. The Reeve stated that neither Mr Fitzgerald or he himself had any power to pay more than $1.25. He did not consider it fair to the corporation paying $1.50 to all comers. He was willing to sanction a maximum wage of $1.50, this would be for a first class man, other laborers to be paid according to their ability. Considerable discussion arose over the subject. It was decided that the council pay $3.00 per day for teamsters for a day of nine hours. Laboring men to be paid $1.50 to date from 7th day of April 1902.

The Council adjourned.

Sudden deaths on the increase.—People apparently well and happy to-day, to-morrow are striken down, and in ninety-nine cases out of every hundred the heart is the cause. The king of heart remedies, Dr. Agnew's Cure for the Heart, is within reach of all. It relieves in 30 minutes, and cures most chronic cases.—98

It came to us, so white and pure,
A visitor we rarely see,
It stayed with us, to play with [illegible]
'Twas welcomed by us royally.
It stuck to us, it would not go,
But gradually its paleness left
Until it scarcely seemed the same—
Of all its beauty 'twas bereft.
And now, as black as soot, it strews
The streets and pavements where we go,
We tramp it under foot and hiss—
"'Tis not the snow we used to know!"

Mr. Youngwed—Do you mean to say you are 24 years old to-day? Why, you told me six months ago, just before the wedding, that you were only 22.

Mrs. Youngwed—Yes, I know, but, my dear, I've aged so rapidly since we were married.

Mrs. Crawford—How did you enjoy your ocean voyage? Mrs. Crabshaw—It was just lovely. The state-room seemed so comfortable after living in a flat.—Town Topics.

TOBACCO, LIQUOR AND DRUGS

Dr. McTaggart's tobacco remedy removes all desire for the weed in a few weeks. A vegetable medicine, and only requires touching the tongue with it occasionally. Price $2.

Simply marvelous are the results from taking his remedy for the liquor, morphine and other drug habits. Is a safe and inexpensive home treatment; no hypodermic injections; no publicity; no loss of time from business, and a certainty of cure.

Address or consult Dr. McTaggart, 75 Yonge street, Toronto.

Not Getting Everything.

An English correspondent writes:—Apropos of the frequent announcements going the rounds of the newspaper press regarding the capture of machinery orders by American firms in markets which the British manufacturers had previously dominated (certain identical reports being frequently repeated "ad nauseam" in the same journals in different forms), it is refreshing to get a glimpse of the other side of the question, and to find that one, at least, of the representatives of our chief staple industry requires not the admonition to "wake up."

An old-established firm of English flour mill engineers have just secured the contract for the supply and erection of a large flour mill on the most modern system in North China. More than one firm of American makers were competing for the work, and, although they claimed to produce by their process better qualities and higher percentages of flour, the English firm in question was able to satisfy the buyers as to the superiority of their machinery and its ability to produce qualities and percentages equal, or superior to, the Americans.

This English house takes the contract at a price below any of the American houses, and has undertaken to ship the whole plant in ten weeks from date of acceptance of order. The firm in question is an Ipswich concern, which some months since shipped a similar complete flour mill to China, the order for which was also secured in competition with America.

About Britain's Food Supply.

To the discussion on the food supply of Great Britain in war time Mr. J. Holland Rose has lately made a contribution, which involves a curious point in the history of the Napoleonic war. Mr. Rose, it may be stated, is a competent historical critic, and the author of several works upon modern history. Recently he published a life of Napoleon, which has attracted a good deal of attention. In this work he examined at length Napoleon's commercial war with Britain, and in the current issue of The Monthly Review he places before the public in concise form some of the results of his investigations. The remarkable fact is set forth by Mr. Rose that Napoleon never attempted to starve England out, and that his famous continental system was directed to checking British exports to, but not to checking British imports from, the countries to which it was applied.

At that time Great Britain had a population of about 12 millions. In ordinary years the home harvest yielded grain enough for 49 weeks' supply of this population, and a quantity of wheat amounting to three weeks' supply, or about 5 per cent. of the total consumption, had to be imported. The Baltic countries, more particularly East Prussia and Russia, and New York were the sources from which Great Britain drew this 5 or 6 per cent. of her wheat supply. From 1809 to 1812 the harvests were bad, and the quantity of grain needed amounted to twenty weeks' supply, or about 40 per cent. of the total amount consumed. The chief grain route was from the Baltic through the North Sea, and French privateers to get at it had to slip through the Straits of Dover; the British navy always had a heavy preponderance, and after Trafalgar was the only navy on the sea.

In 1799 the fact that war with France—which was not a source of grain supply—had not affected the price of wheat caused some comment, and William Pitt drew from this the conclusion that war in general did not affect the price of food. Almost immediately afterwards the Armed Neutrality League of the Baltic powers was formed, and 1801 found Great Britain at war with the countries which constituted her European grain supply. By March the price of wheat was $4.75 a bushel! But Nelson won the battle of Copenhagen, and the Tsar Paul was murdered; the Armed Neutrality fell to pieces, peace was restored, trade was resumed—and in June wheat was down to $3.85 a bushel, and in December it was $2.25 a bushel.

In 1809 two things happened. The harvest was bad, and Napoleon had gained virtual control of the Prussian and Russian grainfields, the Baltic counties entering the continental blockade. The close of the year found wheat at 103 shillings a quarter, or about $3.10 a bushel. But in this and the following year an extraordinary turn was given to the situation. Napoleon allowed, and even encouraged, the export of wheat from France and Italy to England. In 1810 sixteen million bushels of wheat were shipped from that part of Europe to England. Yet the price of bread in England was thirty cents a four-pound loaf, and nearly half of the traders of England made compositions with their creditors.

In 1812 the harvests were bad all over Europe, so that the strange windfall from France and Italy was cut off, Napoleon finding it necessary to import wheat into France. Simultaneously war broke out with the United States, the other source of grain supply for England. Wheat rose to $4.90 a bushel, and the best Dantzig wheat fetched $5.45 a bushel. But at the end of 1812 Napoleon's Russian campaign collapsed; in 1813 the eastern Europe granary was open to English ships; there was at last a good harvest at home, and by August, 1813, the price was down to $3.35 a bushel. There had been a fearful social crisis, and the Luddite riots had shown signs of passing into a conflict between the industrial and agricultural portions of the population. The extraordinary price of wheat had greatly increased the area devoted to wheat-growing in England, and this probably furnished the margin which enabled the country to get through the lean years. On the high seas British warships seized neutral ships laden with grain, and forced them to go into British ports.

Why did Napoleon send wheat to his bitterest enemy, which at the moment was, for want of bread, on the brink of a civil war? His idea of crippling England's commerce was to prevent her from exporting, and to encourage her to import. He seems to have believed that the loss of the gold she would pay for the wheat would hurt her more than its incoming would benefit her. His definite, precise instructions to Eugene, Viceroy of Italy, to encourage the export of food to England and elsewhere are quoted by Mr. Rose. A more singular passage of history could scarcely be conceived—the arch-conqueror feeding the starving foe who confronted him!

"Is your mamma cross? Mine is awful cross! Does your mamma say 'Hush!' when you laugh or make a little bit of a noise? My mamma does. She has nerves, papa says."

The mother who overheard this account of herself would feel heart-broken to think of the shadow cast by her misery on those she loved. Yet her condition is real. Her nerves are strained to the point of torture. Lack of appetite and loss of sleep increase her weakness.

Such a condition may, in general be traced to disease of the delicate womanly organism, a cure for which is found in the use of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. It establishes regularity, heals inflammation and ulceration and cures female weakness. It tranquilizes the nerves, encourages the appetite and induces refreshing sleep.

"I had been a constant sufferer from uterine disease for five years," writes Mrs. J. A. Stearts, of Yankee Dam, Clay Co., West Virginia, "and for six months previous to taking your medicine I was not out of my room. Could not walk or stand, as there was such pain and drawing in left side and bearing-down weight in region of uterus, accompanied with nervousness. I suffered constantly with headache, pain in back, shoulders, arms and chest; and could not sleep nor lie down. When I had taken three bottles of the medicine the periods were regulated, I was not so nervous, could sleep well, and the pain in side and bearing down had vanished. My health is better at this time than it has been in five years."

DAISY GORDON'S FOLLY

—OR—

The World Lost for Love's Sake

By Laura Jean Libbey

Author of The Crime of Hallow E'en, The Flirtations of a Beauty Willful Gaynell, Little Leahy, Only a Mechanic's Daughter

"My darling, I have come back to you—at last!"

A voice broke the horrible stillness. It was a stranger's from within, sharp and discordant.

He touched the brass knocker with a trembling hand, and it seemed to him the length of eternity before the door was opened.

He knew that he must call for the farmer; he could not trust himself to call for Daisy just yet.

The door was opened at length, and the woman started back at the white face of the stranger standing there.

"I should like to see Mr. Gordon," he said, raising his hat courteously with a low bow; but, even as he spoke, his yearning eyes roved past her to see if he could discern a glove, a hat, a bit of ribbon —anything that would be likely to belong to Daisy.

It had been a ludicrous mistake, imagining her to have been Lillian Ruthven, the heiress, yet, after all, he would not give up Daisy, penniless though she was, for a thousand Miss Ruthvens.

After he and Daisy were far away he told himself that he would write back and clear Miss Ruthven from all knowledge of that marriage in which her name had figured so prominently.

He repeated his question, for the woman was looking at him curiously —could he see Mr. Gordon?

"You don't seem to know, sir," she answered, "that Mr. Gordon does not live here any more."

The shock was so great that Harold St. John fell back against the casement of the door like one who had been dealt a heavy blow.

"Where have he and his family gone?" he asked, and the voice which asked the question was scarcely human in its agonized intensity.

"That no one seems to know hereabouts," she replied. "They left very suddenly, and very secretly, too, sir, leaving no address behind them."

"He took his daughters with him —all of them, I suppose?" interrogated St. John, hoarsely.

"Of course, sir," assented the woman; "Farmer Gordon set great store by his girls, and the youngest one, Daisy, was dearer to him than the apple of his eye."

"Did she —did Daisy want to go?" he asked breathlessly.

"I couldn't answer that," she replied, eyeing him curiously. "I should rather imagine not, though, for she was always in tears; and she grew so pale and thin that people who used to know her would never have recognized her."

The handsome stranger turned about with a muttered imprecation.

"I see how it is," he muttered fiercely, as he turned away. "Daisy has confessed our marriage to her father, but to no one else, and when the old farmer learned of my escape from the fate that awaited me, knowing I would come here to claim my bride, he has spirited Daisy off; but I will follow him to the end of the world, and take her from him. She is mine! No one shall part us!"

He made the most diligent inquiries, but all efforts to trace the whereabouts of Farmer Gordon proved futile.

Deep and loud were the threats of vengeance he muttered against the farmer.

He made it the business of his life to search for Daisy. Sooner or later he would find her.

He would not believe that she had gone away willingly —she was coerced in the matter, he was quite sure.

The terrible disappointment made him desperate. He fell a victim to his old habit of drink again to drown trouble in forgetfulness, and sunk lower from bad to worse, but through it all, low as he had fallen, associated as he was with criminals, he never once gave up his hope of finding Daisy and compelling her to live with him.

"The wife should share the husband's lot," he would tell himself grimly.

It so happened in the midst of his wanderings he drifted out to California, and on the same day Alexander Hamilton was reading the article in the papers in his room at the hotel, a dark-browed stranger was signing his name in the register, glancing furtively about him to see if, by any possible chance, any one had recognized him.

The man was Harold St. John. Beneath the same roof with Daisy — at last. Only heaven could have foretold how it would end.

As he stood there scanning the register, his eyes suddenly encountered the name of Alexander Hamilton and wife, New York.

His brow darkened.

"I had just as good a chance of being thought well of in the world as Hamilton did when we were college boys together," he mused; "now he is something very near a millionaire out there, while I——" A hard, bitter laugh burst from his lips— "I am a convict— a criminal— a nobody — whom the proud and mighty Alexander Hamilton would not deign to know now.

"I should like to crush him," he mused bitterly. "Why should he be happy in his love dream, while I am so miserable in mine?"

He had a curiosity to see what Alexander's bride was like. No doubt he would see her at luncheon.

It was rather a grim notion which seized him to ask to be seated at the same table with Alexander Hamilton, feeling sure that his disguise defied detection.

His eyes lit up with a savage gleam as, glancing at the farther end of the spacious dining-room, he saw Aleck approaching, and by his side a fair-haired young girl.

He would not stare at them, he thought, dropping his eyes— plenty of time for a quiet, thorough scrutiny when they were seated opposite him.

CHAPTER XII.

"My Sin Has Found Me Out."

For one moment after Aleck Hamilton seated himself there was a leaden, in that silence Harold St. John raised his eyes to the fair, girlish face beside him— she was just turning to him with a pretty gesture of impatience.

"I am so sorry your wife is not able to come down," she said, "we had arranged for a drive in the park."

"It is nothing more serious than a headache; I hope you will persuade her to keep that promise," responded Aleck— "I think a drive in the fresh air would benefit her."

Harold St. John turned away; this was evidently not Aleck's wife then.

The Pall Mall Gazette gives the following interesting sketch of the ups and downs of The London Daily News, which is being run under its new proprietors without the usual betting column, and which will also refuse to report all sports other than those of a clean and healthy character:—

"Mr. Cadbury's programme for his new 'Daily News' has reminded me of the introductory article of that journal's first editor, which appeared in its first number on Wednesday, January 21, 1846. "We seek at once," Dickens wrote, 'to preserve our own self-respect, and to be respected, for ourselves, and for it, by our readers.' Interesting, too, is the list of original proprietors of the 'D.N.' It comprised Bradbury & Evans, Sir William Jackson, Sir Joshua Walmsley, and Sir Joseph Paxton. They had at their back a capital of £100,000, paid up and underwritten. They were to pay Dickens £2,000 a year, and the salaries of the staff were liberal in proportion.

"Many, too, were the earlier occupants of the editorial chair. After Dickens, who sat there for seventeen days, came Forster, Eyre Evans Crowe, Knight Hunt. William Weir, Thomas Walker, F. H. Hill, H. W. Lucy. Mr. Lucy's first year of office was his last. The names of those who have succeeded him are more familiar."

Best Breed of Fowls.

There is no best breed of fowls. That claim is chiefly made by sellers and secretaries of specialty clubs for every breed that exists. "Best on earth" blasts can always be found in a certain class of poultry journals. Then there are honest but mistaken opinions expressed by those who, having kept one breed under conditions unfitting that breed, have discarded it and substituted another breed for which the conditions were fitting, and, consequently, better results were obtained. Strains vary much; individuals vary more than any intrinsic differences between breeds.

Some breeders have bred and selected their birds of one breed for many years, with due regard to utility; other breeders have bred and selected the same breed for many years with no regard to anything save feathers, markings, combs and color of shanks and eyes.

To a certain small extent housing must be different for different breeds. For small, lean, active, lightly-feathered birds the houses need to be somewhat warmer in winter than is necessary for large, phlegmatic, heavily-feathered birds.

To a somewhat greater extent, freedom to forage must be greater for one breed than is necessary for another. The small, nervous, active birds do not thrive well under close confinement, and generally the possibility of thrift under confinement is directly proportional to the size of the breed.

It must be admitted that birds, even of largest breeds, that have been reared in freedom will not do well in close confinement; also that fertility of eggs for any breed largely depends on fresh air and exercise in fresh air.

But it is in feeding that the greatest changes are required. All fowls should be compelled to make full use of any foraging opportunities. The full day's rations for fowls of one size and equal activity need to be, in amount and proportion of nutriments, such as fit the climatic conditions of the time or place. And the amount of total food, proportions of proteine, carbon-hydrates and fats must be different for birds of other sizes and degrees of activity.

Young Canada Grain Culture.

The last annual report of the Minister of Agriculture for the Dominion is remarkably interesting reading generally, but more especially where it refers to the progress that is being made by young Canadians along the lines of practical grain culture. With a view to stimulating increased interest in the growing and systematic selection of seed grain, a competition among boys and girls living on Canadian farms was started in the spring of 1900. To encourage them in this work, Sir William C. Macdonald of Montreal donated the sum of $10,000 to be given in cash prizes, according to plans which were arranged by Professor Robinson. These prizes are distributed under the supervision of the Dominion Department of Agriculture.

The competitors in the seed grain competition are growing seed grain on specially prepared plots of land, one-quarter of an acre in each plot, selecting seed each year from these plots to sow on the plot for the succeeding year. They gather large, well-filled heads from vigorous plants before the grain is cut and after all the conditions of growth have been observed, and then thresh these heads. By screening and hand-picking the large, well-developed grains, from these selected heads, the seed for next year's seed-grain plot is secured. This came and manner of selecting seed has now been conducted for two years on over eight hundred Canadian farms, which are fairly well distributed throughout the Dominion.

The expressions of appreciation which have been received from the parents and teachers of many of the boys and girls who have undertaken the work of managing a seed grain plot have been most gratifying. The nature study connected with the selection of seed-grain, according to the system followed, is as helpful as it is interesting. There can be no doubt, as Professor Robertson has stated elsewhere, that a systematic continued selection of seed-grain from the most vigorous and productive plants in the plots will lead to great improvement in the crops throughout the whole of the country. The educational influence of the seed-grain competition is exerting a wholesome effect upon boys and girls whose school years are nearly ended, and who may never again be offered an inducement sufficient to awaken and to develop a liking for a careful and educational study of nature and nature's methods. This "Progressive agriculture" branch of the Macdonald Manual Training fund is growing in influence and usefulness; and there is good reason to anticipate with confidence that it will prove of perpetual advantage to Canada, not only through the improvement of seed-grain, but also through the increased intelligence and enlarged abilities of the boys and girls who have taken part in the competitions.

The Poultry Yard.

Nobody can tell yet how ideally correct feeding can be practised. It is less than useless for anybody in New Jersey to tell us how he feeds Minorcas successfully if another man in northern Michigan or Wisconsin is going to copy without change. It is not even advisable to adopt unchanged the rations of one man for a flock of equal numbers, same breed, in the next county, next town, next farm.—Jas. Shackleton, Shoal Falls, N.J., in New York Tribune Farmer.

These days, when the ground in the henyards is too often deep with mud, is almost as likely to cause roup or other disease in the fowl as any season of the year, especially if accompanied with cold winds or a little rain. It is better in such weather to keep the hens in the house most of the time, as the floor in that and the scratching shed should be dry and well covered with a litter of dry chopped straw. Open doors and windows to give them pure air, but keep them out of the mud.

Sunflower Seeds for the Layers.

Dried sunflower seeds are egg-producing, and can be fed sparingly in place of meat scraps, as they contain a goodly supply of oil. The sunflower heads are a fine thing for fowls to peck at on a cold winter's day, to extricate the seeds. Thus they get exercise that gives warmth and health.

When one has spare ground near the hennery it is a good plan to plant a plot of sunflowers for the fowls to work at during the fall. It will keep them out of mischief elsewhere. We break down several heads each day for the layers to eat.

These seeds give the fowls a glossy coat, a red comb, activity, and a generous supply of eggs.—E.L.H.

Feeding Incubator Chicks.

The Country Gentleman gives the following various methods of feeding incubator chicks, which have met with success:—

1. No food is to be given in any case till the chicks are 24 hours old. For the first meal boil some eggs at least twenty minutes. Clear eggs from the incubator will do. Mash these eggs very fine and mix egg, shell and all with bread crumbs equal parts, and feed a little of this for the first day. For the rest of the first week give them for morning meal some small oatmeal; after that some small cracked wheat, one meal a day of the egg and bread-crumbs, the rest of the ration for the first week to be the very small crushed oats and wheat. From that time feed once a day a mash feed composed of one-third each of bran, cornmeal and ground oats, with a little meat in it. As the chicks grow older add a little more meat each week, and do not forget a little bone meal at all times in the mash, just a little for each chick. Let the rest of their ration be broken corn, wheat and a little millet seed; if some oatmeal so much the better, but above all things compel them to hunt and dig in chaff and sand for all the grain food.

2. For the first two days rolled oats every two hours, or as often as the chicks are hungry; then for two days one feed per day of mash made from any good chick meal; mix in the mash some fine chick grit. After four days old, one feed of the mash per day, the rest of their food broken wheat and corn, some little millet seed, small rolled oats and plenty of green food. This is quite simple, but gives good results.

3. To push for quick growth in the shortest time, their first meal should be small broken or rolled oats, thrown into or upon sharp, bright sand. This is continued till the chicks are one week old. From the time they have their first feed of rolled oats the broiler chick should be fed every two hours till it goes to the market at eight or ten weeks old. For the first week give them every two hours a small feed of rolled oats, small cracked wheat and a little millet seed—never more than one-fifth of their food to be millet. At all times furnish some kind of green or vegetable food, and for the first three weeks have the wheat, oats and corn quite small for them. From now till finished for the market feed every two hours as much as they will eat. Give one good feed a day of the mash, and throw all the grain food into the chaff for them to hunt for.

The mash food should be composed of equal parts of wheat, bran, ground oats and cornmeal, with a little meat scrap and bone meal in it. As the chicks grow older increase the meat supply in the mash and feed the wheat whole, and the broken corn can be a little larger. Give plenty of green food and vegetables cut fine, no clover meal for broiler chicks, and be sure that the meat scrap is nice and sweet, or it will taint the delicate flavor of the broiler. When fed so strongly, they must have plenty of exercise and fresh air, also all the water they wish and plenty of grit. Hot milk is the best for mixing the mash. At all times, as soon as they are old enough, make the young chicks hunt and dig in the chaff and sand for their grain food. Some kinds of chicks will not stand such strong feeding. It turns them on their backs and they die. Experiment a little, and keep close watch on them from day to day.

4. First day hard boiled eggs and bread crumbs, as in No. 1. For the rest of the first week, baked bread made of corn meal, bran, middlings and a little cheap flour—this to be mixed with three or four clear eggs from the incubator and some milk. Bake as you do corn bread, crumble fine and feed to the chicks alternately with small oatmeal and broken wheat. As the chicks grow older feed broken corn, whole wheat and millet seed; throw this into the chaff for them to dig for. After two weeks old use the bread mixture for a mash food for once a day, and add to it some good sweet meat scraps.

We trust that the above may help in the rearing of young chicks. At all times a little green cut bone is good for the growing chick. Plenty of green food cut fine is absolutely necessary; so is plenty of grit, water, exercise and fresh air, and above all things brooders, brooder houses, floors, water vessels and feed troughs must be absolutely clean. Keep the floor of the runway clean, and it must be free from dampness. We rather prefer ground oats in the mash to stover meal. The chicks like it better, and it furnishes the roughage or husks in a better form for the chick.

The Veal Age.

This is assuredly the Veal Age in literature. People no longer ask about an author, How old is he? but How young is he—or she, as is usually the case. Of the writers on the staff of Josh, Gosh & Co. 25 per cent. are under the age of twenty-one, and 25 per cent. are under sixteen years. Sixty-eight per cent. of these write historical romances and 32 per cent. write in the [illegible]

For Farmers.

The fact that last year some crop did not bring good prices is often an indication that this year prices may be high, for the reason that such a crop is liable to be discarded this season for something else. A successful fruit grower once stated that whenever he found his neighbors discarding a crop he invariably selected it for himself, as he expected a scarcity of the crop in market by reason of less land being devoted to it.

Grass lands deserve as much attention in spring as any other portion of the farm. Grass is really the mainspring of farming, for wherever there is a good stand of grass there will be an excellent prospect for hay, pasturage and soil improvement. Fertilizer should be applied before grass starts, and the spring rains will carry it down to the roots and give the crop an early start, which will greatly assist in enduring drought in the summer. No pasturage or grass plot should be expected to give crops without manure or fertilizer. Wood ashes make an excellent fertilizer for grass, and a light application of nitrate of soda will give good results. If cattle are given the run of a grass plot when the grass is young they will do more harm to the grass by trampling than can result from any other cause. Grass exhausts the soil the same as any other crop, and the land must be supplied with the plant foods removed. If there are bare places in the pasture use the harrow over them and sow mixed varieties of grass seeds.

The widespread interest in the dairy industry is shown by the returns just received by Superintendent Creelman of the new dairy institute meetings in western Ontario. Fourteen gatherings were held, and there was an aggregate attendance of 2,200. Expert instruction was given on the feeding and care of the dairy cow, and on the care, handling and manufacturing of milk. A series of twelve meetings are now in progress in eastern Ontario. Mr. Creelman, as Secretary of the Fruit Growers' Association, has also completed arrangements for 47 fruit institute meetings, covering the fruit sections of the Province, to begin on Friday and last until the middle of April. These will include valuable orchard demonstrations.

A Very Important Business.

Dairying is a very important business, and a herd of good cows is worth more in every respect than any other kind of stock. The bovine is both meat and milk for the human family, without which existence is almost impossible. Note the capacity of each cow and feed accordingly, as some will be found able to pay for better feeding than others. In order to know this, weigh each cow's product; then, knowing what the feed costs, it is a very easy matter to know whether you are feeding at a profit or loss.

Have a silo if possible; if not, then secure an abundance of corn fodder, well cured, with some roots and a good supply of brain, oil meal, corn meal and ground oats. These, with good early cut clover or cowpea hay, will provide a good range of rich milk-producing food. Now, with a warm, well-lighted and properly ventilated stable, with absorbent to save all the manure, both liquid and solid, you are ready to feed your cows for profit. Feed liberally, but not blindly. Weigh and compound a balanced ration.—L. K. Kerr in Agricultural Epitomist.

Keep Hogs Thrifty.

The hog seems to need some earthy or mineral matter to enable it to digest its food well. For this purpose many give salt, wood ashes and charcoal, allowing them to eat it as they please, and they usually are pleased to eat it pretty freely, especially the breeding stock kept over winter, and it has been found by test that fattening hogs put on flesh more rapidly when they can resort to this mixture as they please. It prevents the gravel eating, which sometimes seems to keep them from growing. The Bureau of Animal Industry, U. S. Department of Agriculture, sends out the following recipe, which we are not sure is any better than the one we give above. Charcoal, sulphur and black antimony, of each one pound, mixed with common salt, baking soda, sulphate of soda, hyposulphite of soda, of each two pounds. If given in the feed, one teaspoonful is allowed daily to each hog. The hogs also need in winter, especially the breeding sows, either roots or green feed of some kind. We think raw roots are better than cooked ones, but if they are not at hand give every day a lock of clover hay. They will always eat it greedily.—American Cultivator.

The Unproductive Cows.

What to do with the unproductive cows is a question that is puzzling many farmers to-day. Much of the stock on hand will not return the value of the feed needed to keep the animals. If the poorer animals of the herd are old cows, which have passed their period of usefulness for the dairy, I would advise selling for what they will bring as second quality beef. Old dairy cows will not return in their final value the cost of the feed necessary to fatten them. Heifers or cows in the prime of life may pay for fattening. This depends on the amount of feed which must be purchased and used in this way.

Homegrown corn and cottonseed meal are the most economical grains to use in fattening. I would advise feeding animals that are being fattened but little coarse fodder, and of this would use the poorer grades, such as second quality hay and corn stover, but would feed liberally of grain for from four to six weeks, and then sell for what the animals will bring.

A grain ration made up of four hundred pounds of corn meal and two hundred pounds of cottonseed meal should produce a rapid gain. This ration should be fed at the rate of from six to ten pounds a day, according to the size of the animal. All animals will gain faster during the early part of the fattening period, but at the present prices of feeds will probably not gain enough to pay for the feed if the fattening process is followed up beyond a certain point. This point can only be accurately ascertained by frequent weighing, but will probably not be later than six weeks after feeding begins.—Prof. C. S. Phelps, in New-England Homestead.

—The ice has disappeared from Chemong Lake.

—The water cart yesterday did good service in sprinkling the streets to keep down the dust.

—The high wind yesterday did considerable damage to the trees in Jackson Park.

—The senior school boys will be photographed this afternoon by Green & Son, in the Y.M.C.A. gymnasium.

—Workmen are busily engaged in renovating the store formerly occupied by Buse & Goselin, in the Market Block.

—Work is progressing rapidly on the large brick chimney at the Cereal works. The chimney is now several feet above the roof of the boiler house. When completed it will be about 125 feet in height.

Owing to the inclemency of the weather last night, the attendance at the regular monthly meeting of the Ashburnham Civic Association was not very large. Several questions of interest were discussed, but will be more fully taken up at the next meeting when a larger attendance is expected.

—A few of the leading citizens of Fenelon Falls are actively pushing the scheme inaugurated last year to attract summer visitors to that pleasantly situated village. They purchased 25 acres of wooded land on the shore of Cameron lake, and this spring they will erect a couple of comfortable cottages for rental.

—The News-Letter says Orillia will probably be able to boast of a shoe factory before the year is out. Local men are at the head of the enterprise. That town appears to be blessed with a bunch of very enterprising citizens who invest their money in business undertakings that help to build up the town and increase its population in preference to becoming mere money lenders who profit through the industry of others. The man who furnishes employment at fair wages to half a dozen of his fellow-citizens is worth a round dozen of the drones mentioned.

Last Night's Fire

About 10.15 last night an alarm of fire was turned in to which the brigade responded promptly. The fire was in a large double house on Sherbrooke street owned by Mrs. Thomas Henry. Mrs. Henry has occupied the west half of the house and was preparing to sell her household goods on Thursday. The fire was located in the cellar way and was reached with great difficulty, owing to the dense volumes of smoke. How the blaze originated is a mystery. The damage will amount to about $50, and is fully covered by insurance.

Kinmount and Orillia to Be Joined

Ottawa Free Press: The Canada Atlantic railway is likely to have a strong competitor in the Great Lakes grain traffic if all goes well with the Irondale and Bancroft railway. Members of the Renfrew delegation, speaking last week, said it was the intention to get direct connection with Georgian Bay. The line is now run from Renfrew to Kinmount and all it needs is the building of a short piece of road from Kinmount to Orillia to have connection with Midland. The through line would be almost direct as the Canada Atlantic. At Midland there are good shipping facilities and it would make an ideal grain port.

A FIGHT ON

When You Tell People to Quit Coffee

"At least 75 people among my acquaintances have been helped or cured by leaving off coffee and using Postum Food Coffee in its place," writes a little woman from Independence, Ia. "I will mention one case. Miss Cora——. I learned she was suffering from nervousness and constipation and went to call on her. Found her in bed, and she looked like a living skeleton, so wild and haggard that I feared for her reason.

I asked Cora if she was improving any. She said not, but was gradually growing worse. The doctor was coming twice a day and giving her a powerful nervine. She said, 'I am so miserable that I tell you privately if I don't get better soon I will end it all myself some day.' I told her not to talk that way for I believed it was something he ate or drank that caused the trouble and she might get well by making a change in her diet. I told her my own experience in leaving off coffee when I was in almost as bad a shape as she, and as soon as I mentioned coffee I had a fight on my hands, for she insisted that coffee helped her and her mother backed her in saying that it was "the only thing she did enjoy' and 'she did not believe coffee hurt anyone.'

I talked with them a long time and finally got Cora to agree to let me make a cup of Postum Food Coffee for her supper. She was surprised that it was so good. Said she 'had heard it was terrible wishy-washy stuff.' I told her it was because they did not follow directions in boiling it enough. She promised to use it faithfully for two or three weeks, and if she was not better I would admit that I was wrong.

I went to see her again in about ten days and Cora met me at the door with a smile and said 'Ahh, your doctor Postum is the best doctor of them all. I can sleep at night, can eat heartily, and am growing stronger every day. Ma and all the rest of us use Postum now in place of coffee.'

The facts are the girl was being actually poisoned to death by coffee. Cora has since married and has a happy home and you may depend upon it no coffee is allowed to enter there." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

WEDDED IN ENNISMORE

Nuptials of Miss Mary Garvey to Mr. James Gifford

St. Michael's Church, Ennismore, was the scene of a pretty and interesting event yesterday morning being the occasion of the marriage of Miss Mary Garvey, daughter of Mr. Thomas Garvey, to Mr. James Gifford, all of Ennismore.

The ceremony was performed by Rev. Father Fitzpatrick, after which the newly married couple left for their future home in Dakota, where they will have the best wishes of a host of friends.

OBITUARY

Death of Mrs. S. Curtis, a Well Known Resident of Douro Township

The death occurred yesterday of Mrs. Sara Curtis, wife of Mr. James Curtis, a well-known resident of Douro. Deceased lady was about 55 years of age and had been in ill-health for some time. The news of her death comes as a severe shock to a large circle of friends who will tender their deepest sympathy to the bereaved husband.

The funeral will take place from the family residence, lot 1, Con 12, Douro, on Thursday afternoon at two o'clock, and proceed to the Little Lake Cemetery for interment.

HIS SERVICES APPRECIATED.

Mr. J. A. Fife Remembered by His Class in the Y. M. C. A.

At the closing exercises on Monday evening of the class in algebra and trigonometry in connection with the Y.M.C.A. evening school, the members of the class took advantage of the occasion to show their appreciation of his valuable services as instructor by presenting Mr. Fife with a neatly worded address and a handsome dress suit case. Mr. Fife made a very feeling reply to the boys and thanked them for their kindly remembrance of him.

Mr. Fife has been deeply interested in the work of the evening classes for some time.

A Wonderful Tonic and Strengthener

Said a druggist to-day, "No doubt about it, the tonic that gives best results is the biggest seller, and that is Ferrozone. It enriches and purifies the blood, restores strength and energy to the feeble, and is a scientific reconstructor that was always popular. In Chlorosis, anaemia, tiredness, langour, brain fag, indigestion and dyspepsia its action is prompt, and satisfactory cures always follow. Yes, I recommend Ferrozone to my customers because I believe it is the best tonic and strengthening medicine that money can buy." Large boxes cost 50c. Sold by Ormond & Walsh.

PROF. O'BRIEN HAS LEFT TOWN

But Has Promised to Return in the Course of a Month—A Highly Successful Visit

Prof. and Mrs. O'Brien left town yesterday on the 11.25 train for Port Hope after a most pleasant and successful sojourn in Peterborough where the worthy Professor and his accomplished wife made many warm friends. On the days previous to his departure Prof. O'Brien was busily engaged up to a late hour at night. The Professor has stated that he would be very pleased to again visit the town, which he has promised to do in the course of a few months. When he came here he found that there were a very large number of people who were skeptical on the subject of palmistry but these have been fully converted and now those who once doubted are firm believers and staunch friends of Prof. O'Brien.

A PLEASING ENTERTAINMENT

Organ Recital and Sacred Concert in Murray Street Baptist Church

The organ recital and sacred concert given last night in the Murray Street Baptist Church proved to be a very pleasing affair, and especially pleasing to lovers of high-class music. The attendance was large, but owing to the disagreeable weather numbers stayed at home who would otherwise have attended. The principal parts of the programme were taken by Mr. Arthur Blakely, Mus. Bac. organist in Sherbourne street church Toronto, Master Frank Williams, a very youthful violinist, and Clarence Glass, boy vocalist. The numbers rendered by these three were very highly appreciated, and warmly applauded. The recital throughout was a grand success.

To Build a New Dam

The management of the American Cereal Co. are pushing work ahead in all directions. Yesterday afternoon we learned that tenders for a new combined concrete dam and railway bridge have been called for. The new dam will be built near the site of the present power house and by raising it to considerable height a very strong head of water can be obtained. This work will give employment to a large number of men for some months.

A LETTER FROM SOUTH AFRICA.

Trooper John Dundas Writes To His Mother of the Trip

Mrs. Henry Dundas, 500 George st., has received the following letter from her son, John, who is a trooper in "E" squadron, 1st troop, of the 2nd Reg't Canadian Mounted Rifles, the gallant corps that did such heroic work at Hart's River on March 31:

Newcastle, Natal, March 4 1902

Dear Mother,—I drop you these few lines to let you know I am in good health, and feel alright. We arrived at Durban on Feb. 17, at about 9 o'clock, a.m., and unloaded our horses and put them aboard train. At 7.05 p.m., we left for Newcastle, arriving here at 10 a.m., on the 19th, and went into camp at Kitchener's Kop. On the following day 150 of us left here at 3 o'clock for Botha's Pass, a distance of about 20 miles. We went on foot, and got into the trenches for 5 days and nights. They expected De Wet to pass, but he broke through about 9 miles above us, and the next day they were captured about ten miles from where we were. That was our first march. It has been raining here for the last two or three days, and we have not had much to do, but we expect to get the order for to march any of these days. We are going to act as scouts for some of the main bodies. I only wish we were going up country to-day. The other boat got in some day last week. They had several cases of smallpox on board, but they are camped over three miles from us so there is no danger of us catching it. Several of the boys have got the fever, but none of them serious. We were inspected by Lord Kitchener yesterday morning, and he complimented us on our good appearance, and the good shape our horses were in, and said he thought we would do as good work as the other corps did that came from Canada before. We got several papers from home, and saw a lot of news. Percy Price got a letter from home saying that there was a big fire at home, and that Long's, Rudkins' and several other stores were burned. That was too bad, and we were all sorry to hear it. I hope that the smallpox patients are better around there, and that there was not a hard winter. I hope that you are all well and are getting on alright. I suppose Annie is going to school, and that Willie is keeping in good health. I hope you and grandma are well and alright. This is the cheapest place I guess there is for fruit. You can buy 20 pineapples for 24 cents, and peaches can be obtained for little or nothing. Well, I have not much more to say at present, but you will hear from me again before long. I hope you are all well, as this leaves me in the best of health. I guess I will say good-by, and may God bless and protect you, one and all, till we meet again. I remain your loving son,

Trooper J. R. Dundas.

My address is.—No. 222; Trooper J. R. Dundas, 1st Troop, "E" Squadron, 2nd Canadian Mounted Rifles, Field Force, South Africa.

Ruddy, Clear Faces are Indications of Spring Health

Paine's Celery Compound

Makes Pure, Red Blood and Establishes a New and Vigorous Vitality

Men and women who have used Paine's Celery Compound, and all who have a knowledge of the wondrous cures it has wrought, particularly in springtime, unite in declaring that the great medicine is a national blessing.

The use of Paine's Celery Compound at this season by the weak, nervous, sleepless and those afflicted with rheumatism, neuralgia, dyspepsia, liver trouble, kidney disease and impure and poisoned blood, means pure, red blood, perfect digestive vigor, ruddy, clear faces, renewed strength and permanent health.

Thousands of grateful people have sent in unsolicited letters testifying to cures made by Paine's Celery Compound after the failures of doctors and use of other medicines. The wealthy and poor, the noted and famous of our large cities and the quiet people of our rural districts have sent the glad news that at last they have found a remedy (Paine's Celery Compound) that has restored lost vitality and made them themselves again.

Mrs. Catherine Benoit, Montreal, whose life was saved by Paine's Celery Compound, writes thus: "Trusting that my experience with Paine's Celery Compound may prove of benefit to those who are sick and ailing, I wish to make the following statement:

"About seven months ago I found myself in a very weak condition physically, and completely rundown. I was attended by four city doctors, but their treatment did not in any way improve my health. My condition was so bad, that my eyesight was affected and I thought blindness would be the result. A lady friend, just in time, recommended me to use your Paine's Celery Compound, as she had been cured by it. I used several bottles of the Compound with grand results. To-day I find myself a different woman. My appetite is good, my sleep is sound and natural, and my strength for one advanced in years, is all I could hope for. I can truthfully say that Paine's Celery Compound saved my life."

A MONEY SAVING STORE

Gough Bros. Splendid Outfitting Emporium on George Street

Gough Bros.' advertisement on our first page to-day, is worthy of special attention on the part of our readers. This firm is one that can always be confidently relied upon to carry out to the very letter, any and every promise made by them. The Peterborough store is under the management of Messrs. James Tully and W. Morrell, two well-known and popular young business men, each of whom has won an enviable reputation for shrewdness, energy, and honorable business methods. Under their direction the store has become more popular than ever. They make it a rule never to let a customer leave the store dissatisfied.

The large and elegantly appointed store contains a splendid stock of mens' and boys' clothing, headwear, footwear, and furnishings that cannot be surpassed by any city store in Canada, and the prices are so low as to save money for every customer. The ordered clothing department is in charge of Mr. Duncan Cameron, one of the most expert tailors in Eastern Ontario.

The management guarantee absolute satisfaction to any and every purchaser, or will refund every penny expended by anyone who is not perfectly satisfied.

Every purchaser of goods to the value of one dollar and upwards receives a handsome premium. The sum of the whole matter is that if you cannot get thorough satisfaction at Gough Bros.' you can't get it anywhere. Buy your new spring suit there.

CANADIAN CASUALTY COMPANY

Capitalists and Public Men in This New Corporation

The accident insurance business is to receive a fresh impetus in Canada. Well known capitalists and public men representing every province in the Dominion are members of the Board of Directors of the Canadian Casualty Company, which will enter the field on an extensive scale at an early date.

Amongst the many prominent public men whose names appear as Provisional Directors of the Company, and who will lend great weight to the solidity of the Institution, are the Hon. R. P. Roblin, M.P.P., of Manitoba representing that province; Mr. J. Douglas Hazen, K.C., M.P.P. of St. John's, representing the province of New Brunswick; Dr. J. T. Carroll, of Vancouver, representing British Columbia. The Hon. John Haggart, of Perth, Hon. W. H. Montague, M.D., Hugh S. Brennan, of Hamilton; A. S. Irving, of Toronto, Director of the Imperial Trust Co., and Director of the Ontario Bank; Mr. A. G. C. Dinnick, and the Rev. Alex Sutherland, D.D., of Toronto; Joseph Rosser, capitalist of Ailsa Craig, and T. B. Puddicombe, capitalist of Haysville, and J. P. Murray of Toronto Carpet Co.

In financial circles this company is acknowledged to be the strongest accident insurance company that will do business in Canada. It is conceded by shrewd investors and brokers that the Canadian Casualty Company enters the field at a most opportune time, and its success in the future is assured. On account of the feeling of general prosperity that exists, and the large amount of Canadian capital seeking investment, the stock of the company is being eagerly and rapidly taken up by the investing public. As an investment this stock is among the best that has been brought before the public notice for some time.

Mr. George A. Jordan, of Toronto, is in town for a few days in the interests of this company, and states that he is meeting with splendid success among the people of the community.

A YOUNG BOER TELLS OF THE HORRORS OF WAR

Terrible Effect of the Lyddite Shells Used By the British Artillery

SOME PITIFUL INCIDENTS AFTER A BIG BATTLE.

An Alleged Occurrence at Paardeberg That Originated in the Brain of the Writer

Special Telegram to The Times.

Adolph De Wet, a nephew of the agile Boer general of that name, is the latest demi-god of the pro-Boer element in the United States.

Young De Wet fought under Joubert and Cronje during the early stages of the war. He was with Cronje, at Paardeburg, when Lord Roberts captured the Boer general and his entire command. He was wounded five times. He escaped from St. Helena and made his way to the United States.

The following letter was written by the young Boer, for the "New York Press." If all the statements made by the writer are no more reliable than his story of the Paardeburg incident, the letter as a whole is not very trustworthy.

"Gen. White, who was the British commander at Ladysmith, was a fine fellow. I remember one day, just toward sunset, when we had a truce for burying the dead which had fallen on both sides in a sortie which had been unsuccessfully attempted by the British. Gen White said to our general, Piet Joubert, in my hearing:

"General, I am sorry from the bottom of my heart for the circumstances which have made you and me enemies. No one can regret the unfortunate course of events which have led to this strife more than I do. Personally you have my admiration and respect."

A PATHETIC SCENE.

The men were throwing the Boer dead and the British dead into trenches—and not very deep ones at that—hastily covering them. In many cases the dead Boer and the dead Englishman were tumbled in side by side. We were in a hurry, for it was approaching the time of the termination of the truce and our work was far from completed. Night was coming rapidly.

"General," he said, "I wish you would agree to an extension of the truce for another hour. I desire to read the burial service over my dead. If you have no objection I should like to read it over your dead, too, for I see you have no chaplain present."

Gen. White at once agreed to the extension of the truce. Gen. Joubett, as night came down, repeated in a firm voice the burial service as provided for by the liturgy of the Dutch Reformed Church. Very solemn it was, standing there with our own and the enemy's dead about us and listening to the solemn voice of the old general. The British looked as serious as we did while the service was going on. As the two parties left the field to resume their attempt to kill each other there was in the heart of every man a wish that the conflict might find some other solution than that of being pushed to the bitter end.

These lyddite shells with which the British bombarded us were not so terrible as the stories which have been told about them; but still they were rather formidable things to meet. I was in a group of eight once, watching the enemy from a kopje, when they threw a lyddite shell right in the midst of us. After the explosion there were pieces of men scattered all about. I was the only man in that group who escaped instant death, and I was hard hit.

All I remember of this explosion was a terrible crash and flash. Then—nothing. It was at Magersfontein, and only an hour before I had been wounded by a Lee-Metford bullet shaving one of the two stones which I had rolled together for protection and between which I was poking my Mauser. The bullet did not strike me, but the chips of stone tore all the flesh off my right cheekbone and blinded me in my right eye. I thought my eye was out, but it wasn't when I came to feel gingerly. The pain was instant and intense, but I tied it up in a handkerchief, shifted my Mauser to my other shoulder and kept on firing. It is less nervous to keep busy in action. A chap does not mind being fired at if he is firing at the other man.

Shortly after that, before the lyddite shell hit our group, there was another nerve shaker. One of our men, a chum of mine, had rolled him a cigarette out of twist and had asked me for a light from my pipe. There was another man lying between us, we all being in a shallow trench on our faces. If we raised our heads we were liable to catch it, for the Lee-Metfords were "wheeping" just over the edge like a driving rain. Piet leaned his elbow on the small of the back of the fellow lying between us and was lighting his long cigarette at my pipe when he got his head above the edge of the trench. So a bullet caught him just over the ear. It made only a little hole where it went in, but it tore the whole of the other side of his head off. He dropped down on the back of the chap between us. It made me too sick to speak, so I didn't say anything. His face was close to mine when he was hit.

The chap on whom he fell thought he was funning and tried to toss him off. So the blood ran down his collar. He gave a horrified yell, jumped out of the trench and ran like a deer for the rear. It seems incredible, but he was never scratched. He dodged between the bullets somehow.

That left eight of us. Just then came the lyddite shell squarely into our trench. There was a roar and a flash—and just nothingness. By and by I began to feel an intense pain. I fought it out and began to breathe, but it was agony. I felt sure my breast was torn wide open. But when I had raised myself on one elbow and had tremblingly opened my shirt I found merely a splinter of shell sticking a little in my chest muscles and two more splinters lower down. I pulled them out with my fingers, and felt suddenly stronger. But I could not fight any more that day.

The other seven were killed outright, though two had not been touched. The concussion of a lyddite shell is terrible. It actually kills without touching its victims, the concussion sometimes forcing a man's eyeballs into his cheeks.

FLAGS OF TRUCE NOT VIOLATED.

The talk about the Boers firing on flags of truce or rising them as cloaks for their military movements is all rot. Neither the Boers nor the British in South Africa want only and deliberately fired upon flags of truce or hospital dentally go in the direction of the place flags. Sometimes a shot might accidentally where a hospital flag was flying, or a flag of truce might not be discovered until a shot or so had accidentally gone in its direction. You must consider at what immense distances modern wars are fought in order to fully appreciate the liability of a man on the firing line not noticing a flag of truce or a hospital flag. But in every case in the South African war where a shot from the Boer lines came anywhere near, or even in the direction of, a flag of truce or of a red cross flag it came there accidentally.

At Paardeburg, when Cronje was cornered, we raised a white flag merely for a parley. Instead of sending an answer to our flag, the whole British army seemed to think we had surrendered, and rushed in on us. Of course, we had to drop back into our pits and give them blazes. Caught in the open this way, we poured a horribly deadly fire into them. This has caused a lot of rotten talk about our treachery, when it was merely British stupidity.

At the beginning of the war we used to like to gather in British prisoners, but later on we were perplexed every time we captured an outfit as to what we had best do with the captives. Generally we would take away their arms, give them the parole and let them go. We could hardly manage to take care of ourselves, and it would have been practically impossible to go flying about the country as we are now obliged to do encumbered with a lot of prisoners. If a Tommy refused to take the parole we sent him adrift anyway, though we were not gentle about it under such circumstances, a little impetus from a boot being considered as a help to him on his way to liberty. He was always glad to depart with this little tribute from us.

AMONG THE WOUNDED.

Fighting is not at all bad sport. The shivering time comes after the battle is over, and you go out to help the wounded or to bury the dead. Time and time again when the excitement of repelling a charge had passed—fo. the fools would charge up to our rifles—I have laid and shivered as I have heard the cries of the wounded. A dead man is horrible only when you come close to him, but the wounded call and call to you, even if the fire of the retreated troops and the fresh wrath of the artillery make it impossible for you to as much as pop your head up for a glance at the men who writhe and moan just in front of you. I have found that a wounded man almost always calls for "Mother!" They seem to be little lads again and cry just as they may have done when they toddled down steps and hurt themselves by a fall. From all parts of the field I have heard this cry:

"Mother! Mother, dear! Oh, mother, mother! Please give me a drink, mother! For God's sake, mother! Oh, mother, mother, dear mother!"

Turkey is Wary on Its Frontiers

London, April 10. — The Vienna newspaper Information publishes a despatch from Adrianople, says the correspondent of the Times in the Austrian capital, which states that Turkish troops have been sent to four localities on the eastern Roumanian frontier to guard it against Bulgaria.

Turkish reserves in the village of Adrianople have been ordered to hold themselves in readiness for service. The military have requisitioned horses and carts. There is great indignation in Constantinople over the murder of Turks in Monastir.

UNREST IN THE EAST OVER THE LEVANT

Fearful that Something Will Happen in the Turkish Empire

RUSSIA OBTAINS SECRET RIGHTS

France Wants the Mediterranean Practically Closed to Great Britain

Special Telegram to The Times.

London, April 10—A matter of interest, and one which is likely to bring forth interesting developments, is a rumor of trouble in the Near East. The air of the Levant just now is thick with rumors. There is a general expectation in Malta and in Egypt that something is about to happen with the Turkish empire. The friendship between France and Russia, which has ripened into an alliance, is about to be still further strengthened by the visit of M. Loubet to the Czar. Serious business will doubtless be transacted. The devotion of France to Russia has proved the financial salvation of the latter country, while the fruits also of the alliance in the Far East have been garnered mainly by Russia. It is not possible to predict the outcome of the negotiations, but a surmise may be safely hazarded that Russia will attempt once more to exploit for her own benefit the friendship of France. The Russian navy, powerful though it be, is crippled because it is divided. The Russian Baltic and Black Sea fleets are separated by the Dardanelles. Eighteen months ago a project of a canal between the Baltic and Nicolaieff, on the River Bug, was revived. For the last six months nothing has been heard of the proposals regarding the canal. On the other hand, paragraphs have recently appeared in almost every newspaper in Europe suggesting that, with the opening of navigation in the Baltic in April, the Admiral's command at Sevastopol will be reinforced by a squadron of torpedo boats from the Neva. The destroyers now being built at the Nevski works, near St. Petersburg, are ten in number. If the consent of France is obtained at the forthcoming meeting between the President of the Republic and the Czar to the despatch of four destroyers from the Neva to Sevastopol, an interesting situation will be created. It is not to be supposed that the French Foreign Office would consent to nullifying the international arrangement closing the Dardanelles without a quid pro quo. Of what that may consist may be partly surmised by the recent action of France at Mitylene. The object of France is that the Mediterranean Sea shall once more become a Latin lake. The realization of this dream is impossible without the assistance of the Russian navy. So long as the Russian Black Sea fleet is shut up behind the closed door of the Dardanelles, French ambitions for the supremacy of the Latin race in the Mediterranean will continue to belong to dreamland. It has long been known to those behind the scenes that the Dardanelles, though nominally closed to all the Powers, are really at the disposal of the Russian Ambassador at Constantinople. Russia has already obtained secret rights over Port Dentheros, while the arrangements of France, although practically complete in the Western Mediterranean, are still undeveloped in the East. In the Eastern Mediterranean the power of the British fleet greatly exceeds any naval force that can be brought to bear by France and Russia under existing conditions.

Another fact which points to some forthcoming event is the great activity lately displayed by the three principal naval powers. During the last three months England has been represented in great strength in the Eastern Mediterranean. The Russian Black Sea fleet is now being made ready for active service. A strong Russian fleet is about to meet a French squadron at Naples. M. Zinovieff, the Russian Ambassador at Constantinople, who is like a weasel for penetrative astuteness, is unusually active. Great play is being made with Germany, with the obvious intention of securing the neutrality of the Kaiser's fleet. Although the British Mediterranean fleet is now far stronger than was the case last July, much remains to be done. England needs a pied-a-terre in the Levant if the Russian project of throwing open the Dardanelles is to be baffled. English policy since the Crimean war has consisted in maintaining the status quo. If Russian torpedo boats are allowed to enter the Black Sea, it would be difficult to refuse them permission to emerge. No mere diplomatic engagement would prevent the Russian fleet from effecting a junction with the French Mediterranean squadron if England is unable to prevent that junction by superiority of naval strength. England, therefore, has to determine whether the Island of Lemnos is available for the purpose of watching the Dardanelles and checkmating the Franco-Russian schemes for increasing the influence of the Dual Alliance in the Mediterranean.

London, April 10—The memorial service in honor of Cecil Rhodes filled St. Paul's cathedral to-day with eminent representatives of all fields of human activity, including bankers, litterateurs, journalists and political leaders of all parties. An impressive programme of music and eulogistic addresses was carried out.

THE BATTLEFIELD INSPECTED

Party of Military Men to Inspect the Field of Gettysburg

Special to The Times

Newburgh, N.Y., April 10—The cadets comprising the first class of the United States military academy leave West Point to-day for Gettysburg, Pa. The coming three days will be spent in studying the engineering and other problems which confronted the commanders of the armies that participated in the battle of Gettysburg. This is in accordance with a new plan of instruction adopted by the war department and the results are awaited with interest.

LEPERS IN BROOKLYN

Seven Victims of This Disease Roaming Through the City

Special to The Times

Brooklyn, April 10—Now that warm weather is approaching, Brooklynites are interested in three lepers which are allowed to roam ad libitum through the city. There are just seven lepers in the State of New York, four besides those in Brooklyn. They are allowed the fullest liberty to go where they please as the health authorities say they have a form of leprosy that is non-contagious, except in warm weather. The exception is the cause, however, of much anxiety on the part of Brooklynites as it is not known just where the lepers are.

The Day of Miracles not Past

A Toronto "Star" reporter investigated the case of Mr. Geo. Warner, and found that after thirteen years of almost total deafness, he had been cured by inhaling Catarrhozone.

This proves that where Catarrhozone treatment is employed, impaired hearing and deafness can be cured. Catarrhozone always brings quick relief, and is warranted to give lasting satisfaction. All sufferers from impaired hearing, deafness, head noises and ringing in the ears are advised to inhale Catarrhozone and derive the great benefit it is capable of affording. PANAMA SAVED BY A FRENCH CRUISER REBELS RETREATED ON A BOLD FRONT

British Plans Did Not Carry

London, April 10.—A correspondent of The Times who is with Col. Kekewich's force says it had been arranged that Kekewich's and Gen. Walter Kitchener's columns should co-operate in a surprise of De la Rey's main force, starting on the night of March 31. However, Kitchener's column being prematurely engaged, the combination was spoiled. Kekewich carried out his part of the movement, but the Boers dispersed on hearing of Kitchener's engagement, and only a few captures were made.

AMNESTY FOR CAPE REBELS WILL BE GIVEN

Lord Rosebery Believes that the War can Be Ended in this Way

THE INDICATIONS FOR PEACE

The Only Terms Which England will Give are Surrender and Delivery of Arms

Special to The Times

London, April 10 — The general feeling among the great South African merchants and financiers is that the new overtures by the Boers are indicative of peace. As far as can be gathered, there is no tangible basis for this impression beyond the fact that those who hold it have hitherto been counted among the most pessimistic as to the prospects of an early settlement. The most rational view expressed by responsible men is that the King's coronation gives to English statesmen an opportunity for passing the sponge over the slate, which would not occur under ordinary circumstances. South African friends, who are in a position to know because their facilities for learning the actual state of Boer opinion are undeniable, inform me that the Boers have now practically abandoned the idea of independence. Whether this idea has or has not been given up is immaterial to British policy. It is the bedrock upon which future peace will be based. The second point of English policy is the surrender of all arms, guns, munitions and warlike stores. Obsolete rifles will not be accepted in lieu of Mausers. Complete disarmament will be insisted on, although Boer farmers will be allowed to keep their sporting rifles. Providing the British flag is acknowledged and disarmament is complete, there is no insuperable difficulty in adjusting the remaining points at issue between the two races. The most intractable factor in the problem is the question of amnesty to the Cape rebels. It is here that the king's coronation clemency may be made to play a part. Mr. Chamberlain and Lord Milner can scarcely retreat from the position which they have assumed in this matter. But there is a higher authority than the Secretary of State. As an act of grace on the day the king is crowned, there is nothing to prevent His Majesty, on the advice of his Ministers, from adopting the policy of forgive and forget. This is Lord Rosebery's idea. This is the idea of the most thoughtful and far-seeing of our statesmen.

AN INSEPARABLE TIE

One fact that stands out like a mountain peak is that the two races have to live side by side after the war. The tie is of the nature of a marriage where the divorce laws do not exist. For good or evil, Boer and Briton must live together. Incompatibility of temper, divergency of aim and difference of temperament are immaterial. They must live together. Therefore, it is obvious that the line of least resistance is that which makes for the least future friction between the two races. If the Cape rebels are to be punished, a festering sore will remain in every Boer home. If, on the other hand, by a great act of real generosity, the past is forgotten and the slate cleaned, the act cannot be ascribed by the Boers to pusillanimity, as was the case after Majuba. It is, therefore, to be hoped that amnesty if not contained in the protocol preliminary to a treaty of peace, will yet be carried out under the king's proclamation on coronation day.

The other points of difference are really immaterial. The rebuilding of the Boer farmhouses is a matter that might be set against the unpaid indemnity for the raid. The English nation has never paid direct damages for that raid, as it ought to have done. England was in the wrong, doubly in the wrong, and the great Englishman who has just passed away was not so great that his wrongdoing can be condoned by ignoring the obligations in which he involved us. The real difficulty that I foresee in the settlement is the unbending and martial spirit of colonial statesmen. The opinions of Mr. Seddon, Mr. Barton and Sir Wilfrid Laurier now carry as much or more weight in the United Kingdom than those of the average Cabinet Minister. If Mr. Seddon were to set himself vigorously against the policy of amnesty and of restoring the farm houses, public opinion here would not be strong enough to counterbalance his view. Mr. Seddon's personality has succeeded to the position occupied by Mr. Rhodes. He has touched the popular imagination. Men of all ways of thinking seem to look towards Mr. Seddon as one of the great forces of sane imperialism. He is a man of Abraham Lincoln's type, and has risen by sheer force of character from the position of a boiler maker to be one of the chief spirits among the rulers of the empire. It is notable that he is to call at Cape Town for conference with the Cape Government and Lord Milner on his way home to the coronation festivities.

MISS ELLEN M. STONE

A Feeling Awakened Against the Lady For Taking Too Much Risk

Special to The Times

New York, April 10 — An important event of the week is the return to this country of Miss Ellen M. Stone, the missionary who so long was held in captive by Bulgarian brigands. Miss Stone intends to begin her lectures in aid of the missions almost immediately. Now that she is safe and the affair has blown over it is no breach of public confidence to say that there has existed in the popular mind a certain feeling of impatience over the thought that a woman should take such needless risks as did Miss Stone in passing through a region known to be infested by brigands. Everyone seems to have felt that it was not a necessary part of her work. It is safe to say that if Miss Stone returns to Bulgaria, as it is reported she intends doing, and if she should again be made prisoner, no ransom whatever would be forthcoming.

The Protect Prevented the Insurgent Vessels from Bombarding the Town

REBELS WERE CONFIDENT OF VICTORY BUT HAD TO RETREAT

When They Saw That the Frenchmen was in Earnest They Steered Off

Special Telegram to The Times.

San Francisco, April 9. — Panama was saved from bombardment on the night of March 14 by the French cruiser Protet. News to this effect was brought here yesterday by the British steamer Colombia, which was at Panama two days after the incident.

Flushed with their victory over the Lautaro and other Government vessels on the morning of January 20, the insurgent steamer Padilla and two small consorts had been preparing at a part of Colombia south of the Isthmus to bombard and take Panama.

The cruiser Philadelphia, having withdrawn her shore battalion, and moved southward, the way seemed clear for the rebels, but they failed to take cognizance of the French cruiser. Word was sent to the Protet that the insurgents contemplated a bombardment of the city, and her commander promptly caused word to be sent to the rebel leader that if such an attempt was made during his stay in port, the Protet would sink the Padilla and all other insurgent vessels that could be found. The rebel commander paid little attention to the threat, and in the darkness of the night of March 14 the Padilla and her consorts steamed up for the south, heading in for Panama, with decks cleared for action. The Padilla was ready to open fire when the Protet's searchlight found her. The Protet prepared for action, and when the insurgents saw that the Frenchman was in earnest they turned and sailed out to sea without firing a shot.

SOCIALISTS WAVED RED FLAG IN FACE OF KING

Extraordinary Scene at Brussels To-day on the Arrival of the King of the Belgians from Biarritz

Brussels, April 9.—King Leopold was mobbed by Socialists this afternoon on his arrival here from Biarritz. The meeting between the Socialists and the King was quite accidental, but it was none the less unpleasant for his Majesty, whose automobile was surrounded by excited Socialists, who shouted,—"Long live the Republic," "Long live universal suffrage," and waved red flags in the King's face.

MACHINERY RUINED BY WAR

Peace in South Africa Will Open Rich Field for Americans

Special to The Times

Berlin, April 10—German engineers who have recently returned from the Transvaal say that practically the entire mining equipment of South Africa must be renewed as a result of the war. Hopes for peace are accordingly entertained by the great machinery makers of the Rhine Valley and Westphalia, who expect to divide with American manufacturers on even terms the enormous orders that will be available at the close of hostilities.

Reports brought to Berlin state that in from one to four years more than $50,000,000 must be spent in the rehabilitation of the hand. It is believed that Germany and the United States will reap practical benefits from British supremacy in South Africa within the next decade. The odds will be in favor of those manufacturers who can make the quickest deliveries.

LITTLE MEN AND LIGHT HORSE

Will be Admitted to the Four Contingents Going from Canada

Special Telegram to The Times.

Ottawa, April 10.—The British Government has been asked to send three transports to take the next Canadian contingent to South Africa. The first one is expected to arrive in three weeks, and leave during the first week in May. The other two will probably leave within a week of each other.

It is expected that the four regiments constituting the contingent will be called the 3rd, 4th, 5th, and 6th Battalions, Canadian Mounted Rifles.

Recruiting will probably commence on Thursday for the next Canadian contingent. It has been decided not to fix any quota for each recruiting center, but to take all the men offering who possess the necessary qualifications.

A conference took place this afternoon between the Minister of Militia, Gen. O'Grady-Haly, and Col. Pinault, Deputy Minister, at which the minimum height of men who are to be recruited was fixed at 5 feet 4 inches. Somewhat lighter horses will be taken than previously, the idea being that with light men and smaller horses greater mobility can be secured.

It is said that Major Merritt and Major Cameron, now out with Col. Evans, will each be given a regiment.

ARRESTED IN TORONTO

Albert Field, Charged With Theft, Brought Back for Trial

Chief Rossel went to Toronto yesterday, to bring back from that city a man named Albert Field, who is wanted here to answer to a charge of theft preferred against him by Mr. R. J. Wolstenholm, the Charlotte street livery stable keeper.

In November last, Field, who was then conducting a boarding house at Nassau, hired a horse, harness, and democrat wagon from Mr. Wolstenholm agreeing to pay the sum charged weekly in advance. He stated that he would require the horse, etc., until March. When the horse and wagon were given into his possession he had not money enough to pay the first week's rent, but promised to pay the balance when he next came to town. He did not put in his appearance, according to agreement, however, and the next news Mr. Wolstenholm had, was to the effect that the horse was very sick; that Field had over-driven it, and had turned the animal into the stable, in an overheated condition, without taking proper care of it. The consequence was that the horse died. Then Mr. Wolstenholm demanded his harness and wagon. Field made repeated promises to return them, but failed to keep his word. Soon the owner was informed that Field had sold the wagon. He sent a man to Nassau, with an order for the harness and wagon. Upon his arrival at Nassau Mr. Wolstenholm's representative found that Field had sold the wagon. He presented his order to the man who had bought the vehicle, but the buyer refused to give it up. Field disappeared, and Mr. Wolstenholm was left lamenting his loss. Field was arrested by Detective Davis, of Toronto, in that city, where he has apparently been residing for some time past.

Chief Rossel arrived in town with his prisoner last evening. Field will have a hearing before police magistrate Dumble, this morning.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

It may have been noticed that there are two varieties of troops among the miscellaneous forces engaged in the South African war who have never surrendered in any numbers. One is the Scotch and the other is the Canadians. There is much in common between the two races, not the least of their mutual characteristics being a canny, stubborn valor that takes no fool chances but never flinches in the most desperate straits. From the first they chummed together as no other troops did and neither were ever quite so happy as when they were fighting side by side.

MR. RHODES' IDEA

The Cecil Rhodes scholarship provision will not abolish all causes of dissension between Great Britain and the United States, nor put an end to German anglophobia, nevertheless there is a grand idea in the dead imperialist's conception. With Britain, Germany and the United States in a triple alliance, the rest of the world would be kept upon its good behavior, for what nation in any continent could afford to affront such a strong combination by any unjust aggression? The causes of friction among the Teutonic peoples are mainly commercial. Britons do not like to see goods labelled "Made in Germany," capturing the British market; Germans turn up their noses at meat from the United States, and Yankees abhor goods that are produced in any portion of Europe. But careful observers affirm that all the time Britons have been complaining about the invasion of German goods, British exports to Germany have also been steadily increasing in quantity and in value. In the United States men of business are learning that they cannot sell abroad unless they buy from abroad, and the expansionists will have to recognize the necessity of tariff reduction at home as a means of enlarging their export trade. The education of young men from Germany and the United States at Oxford will spread the kind of knowledge that is needed in all three countries. The prosperity of one nation does not depend upon the adversity of other nations. One's commercial rival is generally one's best customer. There is no more excuse for hating the man who sells to us than for hating the man who buys from us. Prejudices, especially race prejudices, die hard, but Cecil Rhodes has done what lay in his power to remove them, and for that he is entitled to the praise of the world.

What! Does The Grim Spectre Follow You Into The Joyous Springtime?

Paine's Celery Compound

Defeats the Work of Death by Removing Your Terrible Burden of Disease

Are you still in suffering, misery and despondency? Does the grim spectre Death follow you closely as the joyous springtime brings happiness and blessings to others around you? Are you still clinging tenaciously to false theories of physicians or friends who persist in assuring you that time, care and the use of your present medicine will give you new health?

Be assured your present condition is a perilous one. The continuance of the medicine is a folly; you are simply trifling with life and wasting precious time.

You should remember that while nature clothes the fields with fresh grass and flowers, and while the trees with a strong life are showing bursting buds and new foliage, that human beings—old and young—drop off in thousands in springtime.

Now is the time for prompt, decided and practical action if life is to be saved. Prejudice and the erroneous theories of even medical men should be cast aside when the hand of death is upon you. It matters not what your social position be; the medicine that saves the humblest man or woman is surely the one adapted for the needs of the rich and those in high social positions.

Paine's Celery Compound has a record of life-saving that no other medicine can ever equal. It has rescued rich and poor from the grasp of death when physicians and their most carefully prepared prescriptions failed in the work. If the suffering men and women of to-day could but see the happy faces and hear the kind words spoken by the tens of thousands who have been made well and strong by Paine's Celery Compound, it would soon dispel their existing doubts and fears.

Paine's Celery Compound is the only medicine that reaches the root of disease; it is the only agency that can remove your terrible load of disease. Unsolicited testimonials of cures pour in every day. Young and old constantly bear witness that rheumatism, neuralgia, kidney disease, liver complaint, dyspepsia and blood diseases are banished permanently when Paine's Celery Compound is faithfully used for a time. Begin its use to-day poor sufferer; delays are dangerous.

Farm Butter Making.

At the recent convention of the Illinois Dairy Association W. R. Hostetter, one of the leading dairymen of Illinois, discussed butter making on the farm, and pointed out that the comparatively low grade of farm butter was due to the lack of conveniences and to the small quantity made. He is convinced, however, that good butter can be made on the farm, and in order to do this the dairy house and the surroundings must have excellent drainage and must be so constructed as to get the maximum amount of sunshine. He advises getting the very best tinware for dairy purposes, as it is so much easier to keep good utensils clean. Never buy cheap cans, pails or strainers.

Get a good separator, and use some kind of power for running it, as it is exceedingly difficult to maintain a uniform speed when turning by hand. He has no set temperature for cooling cream and churning, as so much depends on weather, the dairy house, etc. As a general rule, he likes to ripen his cream at a high temperature and to churn at as low a temperature as possible. He usually churns at 55 degrees in winter and 40 to 45 degrees in summer. The churn must be stopped at just the right time, or when the butter granules are about the size of a grain of wheat. He adds a little salt just before washing. The amount of salt to be used depends upon the taste of the customers. He believes it is advisable to try to get customers to use fresh butter, so that it can be delivered once or twice a week. Formerly he had customers who wanted him to pack butter in the winter for next summer's use. Gradually they have all abandoned the practice. He advises putting up butter in neat packages, as this will do much toward making sales.—Dairy World.

Profit in Pigs.

One cannot hope to make swine a profitable farm product unless he goes permanently into the business. Too many who try to make money from swine find it unprofitable one year, and abandon it, or because after two years of fair success the third season proves unsatisfactory, they conclude that the best days for the business have passed, and they try their hand at something else. My experience has always been that swine breeding requires more persistent and continuous work than most other lines of farming. As a continuous business, carried on, not one or two or three years, but ten, fifteen and twenty years, it has no superior, and the man who pursues it thus will get his sure reward. Each succeeding year we learn more about the work, and find out where we made mistakes, and where we could have made improvements. We become so familiar with the whole subject that we are competent judges as to whether we should raise this or that breed. We also grow accustomed to anticipating the markets, which is a great thing in these days of fluctuations. Then, too, we learn how best to feed the animals—how to get the most from every ton of feed, grass or hay.

If one is going into swine breeding for a continuous industry, he can then well afford to start out with the best bred animals he can afford, and by an intelligent system of selections and breeding, he will in time grade up his flock to a standard of excellence which his neighbor cannot equal except at great cost. When a man starts in each year or two to purchase new breeds and high-bred swine, it is a costly experience, and he hardly reaps much reward from it. There is quite a difference, however, when he deliberately adds each year a little new blood to his stock, increasing the quality as well as the quantity. The outlay is thus small each season for pure-bred animals, and the returns correspondingly good.

Likewise in regard to food, it requires a policy of continuous farming along certain lines which will enable one to look years ahead. The grass, forage and grain crops that can be planned for an intelligent rotation system will all help toward the same general end. The cost of feeding will thus up to a certain point be steadily reduced. One finds good pasture fields established in the course of time, land made rich and fertile for corn and grain through a rotation of crops, and hay and forage crops prepared ahead of time for each winter. In the course of time the work becomes almost automatic, and the swine produce profits on the average from year to year that must prove satisfactory.—E. P. Smith, in American Cultivator.

Medium Horses for the Farm.

What would a pair of these 1,800 to 2,200 pound horses do on a plough or harrow in the spring, when their feet sank in the mud almost as deep as the plough? They might not feel the weight of the plough, but they would feel their own weight before night. With a pair of the little Vermont Morgans, the two of them not as heavy as one of those big fellows, we could draw a heavier load through a miry place or a snowdrift than we ever saw a pair of those big ones draw in a bad place.

And when on the road they could trot eight or ten miles an hour or walk four or five miles on a dirt road, not for one hour only, but for five or six hours a day for as many days as there are in the week, and that not in a rubber-tired sulky, but a good, honestly made farm waggon with from two to four persons in it.

That is the kind of horses that used to be bred in Vermont, and some of them, not quite as compactly built, in Maine, and some of them, a little coarser built, came here from Canada, with legs about as large and hairy as the Clydes. None of them ever got spavins or crooked knees or tender feet, if they had decent usage, for they did not go down the street, as if they had taken a contract to pound down the paving stones.

The breed of these horses cannot be entirely exhausted. There must be some farmers who have good brood mares yet, and there may be a few stallions that have the Morgan blood in them. If such can be bred, we venture a prediction that in five years they will be in demand, and in ten years more popular on our New England farms and hilly roads than the heaviest western-bred horse that may be offered at the sale stables in the city. Do not make the mistake of trying to put too much weight into them by trying to breed from the heavy stallions, nor too long legs on them in the hope to get the two-minute horse; but try to get a good, honest, well-built horse of 1,000 to 1,100 pounds, with the disposition of a lamb, the willingness of the ox and the endurance of the mule.

Must be There Early.

The chosen few who will find seats in the Abbey on Coronation Day are planning their arrangements for this day far ahead of time, and with the greatest precision. One lady, according to The Daily Mail, has already given orders to her hairdresser to be with her at 6 o'clock on the morning of the eventful day. When Queen Victoria was crowned many of those in attendance at the Abbey were compelled to leave their homes at 3 or 4 o'clock in the morning. London is more than twice as large now as it was 65 years ago, and the difficulties of locomotion on such an occasion will be proportionately greater. Moreover, there are few now who will remember witnessing a previous coronation, none who are well past the three score and ten mark, while in 1838 middle-aged people would easily recollect the coronations of Victoria's two immediate predecessors, Wm. IV. and George IV. The King himself is said to be paying great attention to the details of the coronation procession, and it will doubtless prove a pageant worthy of comparison with the gorgeous scenes that have marked the most notable coronations of the past. One of the most famous of these was the coronation procession of Elizabeth, when England dared once more to breathe freely after the horrors of Mary's reign, and the young and charming Queen—charming at least by comparison—was received by her people with a spontaneity of enthusiasm that had been absent at the costly pageantry that attended her melancholy middle-aged sister. Elizabeth herself had been present at Mary's coronation procession, and had sat in her litter, clad in "a goune of purple velvet, furred with powdered ermine, having on her head a kale of cloth of tinsell beset with pearl and stone, and above the same upon her head a round circle of gold beset so richly with pretius stones that the value thereof was inestimable, the same kale and circle being so massie and ponderous that she was fain to beare up her head with her hand." Five years later, at her own coronation in 1558, Elizabeth made her progress from the Tower to Westminster "richly furnished and most honourably accompanied, as well, with the nobilitie of the realme, as also with a notable trayne of goodly and bewtifull ladies richly appoynted." On her entry into the city she was "of the people received marveylous entirely, as appeared by the assemblie, prayers, wishes, welcomings, cryes, tender woordes, and all other signs which argue a wonderfull earnest love"; to all of which tokens of good-will Elizabeth responded "by holding up her handes and merie countenance to such as stoode farre off, and most tender and gentle language to those that stoode nigh to her Grace did declare herself no lesse thankfullye to receive her people's good wyll than they lovingly offered it unto her." Her graciousness was extended to the humblest of the people. "If the baser personages had offered her Grace any flowers or such like as a signification of their good wyll, or moved to her any suit, she most gently, to the common rejoysing of all the lookers on, staid her chariot and heard theyr requests." Thus she passed on amid pageants innumerable through the city, "whiche withoute any forreyne persone of itself beautifyed itself."

The Soldier's Paper.

I was handed the other day some copies of a queer little South African paper, "The Northern Post and Border News," printed at Aliwal North, in Cape Colony. It is printed chiefly for circulation among the soldiers, and Tommy Atkins is only too glad, they say, to buy them at the rate of sixpence each. They are somewhat high at the price, for there is very little news in them. The papers are printed only on one side, and the whole of the matter is contained in one or two columns, and in large type at that. The only news printed, apart from rigidly censored Reuter's despatches relating either to military operations in South Africa or to proceedings in England immediately associated with the war, are the latest prices of Rand shares, and the result of the English-Australian cricket matches in England. So are the three incongruous elements of war, commerce and sport brought under the soldier's eye in the same column. Yet the first place and the biggest type are given to the statement that "when stumps were drawn for the day only four wickets were disposed of, and the score stood at 660 runs. Evidently Kipling's attack on cricketers finds little sympathy in the army, in whose behalf it was in a sense written. "The Islanders" are still islanders, and Kipling will hardly succeed in changing their nature. In the biggest type in the little paper of Feb. 6 last the words, "Bad News! Bad News!" in letters an inch and a half high, catch the eye, and give a momentary impression that the censorship cannot be so rigid after all, when headlines like this are put over British reverses. The second line, "Slaughter of the Innocents," suggests a somewhat flippant view of a presumably serious situation, but that is only what we have been taught to expect of Tommy. Reading on, however, we find the old, familiar phrases; "We must evacuate our present premises. Now's your chance," etc., etc. "Come early and do not miss this last and only opportunity." It is only a dry goods merchants' slaughter, after all. But the name at the foot of the advertisement is instructive. It is not Saxon or Celtic, but good sound Dutch, two of them, in fact, viz., Rascher, Keast & Co. These burghers are not so slow after all at improving their opportunities or copying our own most advanced business methods. One of the advertisements, printed in both English and Dutch, is signed by S. R. French, Postmaster-General of Cape Colony, and calls for tenders for posts between Aliwal North and Jamestown. Apparently there is no great rush for the work, the advertisement starting, "No satisfactory tender having been received," etc. Driving a mail cart in this region just now is probably a line of work that presents unusually favorable opportunities for being potted by some odd member of a stray commando.

Miles on Miles

Are walked by the billiard player, as he moves around the table. That is the only exercise many a city man gets. It is this lack of exercise in the shut-in-life of the city, combined with irregular eating and indigestible dishes which tend to make the city man the victim of "stomach trouble."

When there is undue fullness after eating, with belching, sour risings and other distressing symptoms, a prompt use of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery will effect a speedy cure. In the most extreme cases of disease of the stomach and other organs of digestion and nutrition, the persistent use of the "Discovery" will result in a complete cure in ninety-eight cases out of every hundred.

"The praise I would like to give your 'Golden Medical Discovery' I cannot utter in words or describe with pen," writes James B. Ambrose, Esq., of 1205½ Mifflin Street, Huntingdon, Pa. "I was taken down with what our physicians said was indigestion. I doctored with the best around here and found no relief. I wrote to you and you sent me a question blank to fill out and I did so and you then advised me to use Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. I took three bottles and I felt so good that I stopped taking, as I think, cured. I have no symptoms of gastric trouble or indigestion now."

DAISY GORDON'S FOLLY

—OR—

The World Lost for Love's Sake

By Laura Jean Libbey

Author of The Crime of Hallow-E'en, The Flirtations of a Beauty, Willful Gaynell, Little Leaby, Only a Mechanic's Daughter

He had little interest in the conversation that followed which drifted on to other topics.

He noticed, with darkening brow, how happy Aleck looked. His dark, handsome face was the picture of contentment.

As St. John arose and left the room, Alexander Hamilton looked after him with a puzzled expression.

"Where have I seen just such a pair of dark eyes before?" he mused. "They seem strangely familiar to me."

Meanwhile Daisy had tied on her broad sun-hat and hurried down into the grounds.

"Food would choke me," she muttered, with a half sob— "but I must have air or die— my heart seems bursting."

A walk through the beautiful grounds refreshed her.

"How silly I am to give myself up to such horrible fear," she cried, throwing herself down on a pretty rustic bench by the fountain. "Harold St. John will never find me— the world is so wide— I am safe, safe."

The color drifted back to the pale, dimpled cheeks, and the light to the beautiful blue eyes.

"To think that Aleck should know him of all people," she murmured, with a cold shudder.

"If we should meet suddenly—Harold St. John and I— I feel sure that he would never recognize me— I am so greatly changed," she thought, leaning over the fountain's brim, and gazing intently down into the beautiful face the water reflected.

A slight noise directly behind her startled her, and glancing hastily around, she saw a gentleman beside the fountain, with both of his arms leaning lightly upon the railing.

"I beg your pardon, madam," he said, raising his hat respectfully — "will you kindly tell me the name of that flowering plant at your feet?"

A faint, choking cry broke from Daisy's white, stiffening lips. She tried to turn and fly, but heaven itself seemed against her; she had not even power to turn her face away, or to fall on her knees and bury it among the crimson blooms at her feet. Like one fascinated, her terrified, strained gaze never left the stranger's face.

His eyes were fixed curiously upon the plant he had been admiring. One moment more and he would raise his eyes to her face— and then—God pity her, what would happen then!

Despite the careful disguise, she had recognized Harold St. John at the first glance. While the sun shone, and the birds sang, and the perfume of the roses was wafted around her — her doom had fallen upon her — fallen suddenly and without warning. Her only hope was in sudden flight.

A wild prayer rose in her heart to heaven for help.

With energy borne of desperation, she sprung to her feet, wheeled abruptly away, and walked swiftly down the path.

Harold St John, who had not caught sight of the face beneath the broad sun-hat, looked after the retreating figure with a scornful laugh on his lips.

"By George, what a prude!" he muttered, "to take such offense at a natural, civil question. I suppose it would be the proper thing to follow and overtake the beauty, and humbly beg her pardon."

It was certainly a merciful fate which prevented him from putting this resolution into execution.

"There is time enough; I will see her again," he told himself, as he lit a cigar and threw himself down on the bench she had so lately occupied.

Meanwhile Daisy had fled to the house in an agony of terror words are too weak to describe.

She never knew how she reached her own apartments; the earth seemed rocking beneath her feet, the light of the sun seemed blotted out, and a horrible darkness to reign.

Aleck sprung to meet her with a cry of alarm.

"You are ill, my darling," he said in affright. "In heaven's name, Daisy! what is the matter?"

She threw herself into Aleck's arms with the bitterest cry ever heard.

"Oh, Aleck!" she sobbed in an awful whisper. "If anything should ever happen to part us I should surely die, dear."

He took her in his arms in great alarm, caressing the beautiful golden head, kissing the white face and colorless lips.

What could have put such a notion into her head?

"Nothing but death could part us, my love," he murmured gently.

She laughed aloud, and that laugh startled him as the bitterest sob could not have done, it was so full of repressed agony, of terrible pain.

Nothing but heaven could part them. Why, the man she had left standing by the fountain had power to sever them if he uttered but one word.

God pity her, if Aleck but knew!

She crept closer to him, winding her white arms round his neck and looking up into his dark eyes.

"If I were to kneel at your feet, Aleck, my love, and ask you to grant me one favor, would you do it?"

"There would be no need to kneel to me, darling," he answered. "Have you ever expressed the slightest wish that I have not been most eager to fulfill? Tell me what it is that you wish, dear?"

"I want to go away from here, Aleck," she breathed, faintly, "at once—this very hour. Oh, God, every hour I spend beneath this roof will be a torture to me!"

He drew back and looked at her in amazement.

"I have always heard that women were puzzles," he declared, "but you, my dear, are the greatest puzzle of them all. Only yesterday you were telling me how delighted you were with the place, and how sorry you would be when the time came to leave. Now you are quite as anxious to go away."

Suddenly another idea came to him.

"Daisy," he cried, "has anything happened to cause you to change your opinion of the place? has —has—any one insulted you in any way? If that is the case, I will have his very life for it!" he cried, hoarsely.

"No, no; it is not that, Aleck," she sobbed. "I—I—can assign no reason for it, only I want to go away."

He looked much relieved.

"It is only a whim, then —a caprice, my darling?" he answered laughingly.

"It is only that, Aleck, but you must leave here," she sobbed, clinging closer to him.

He clasped the little ice-cold hands in his, and gazed earnestly down into the fair young face.

SERMON BY

REV. GEO. H. HEPWORTH.

But let patience have her perfect work.—St. James., i., 4.

Patience is generally classed among the minor virtues, but so much of life's happiness and usefulness depends on it that we ought to give it a more prominent place. To patiently endure an environment which includes suffering and hardship is nothing less than heroism, and there are unseen and unrecorded instances in which men and women have shown the courage of the martyr.

Patience is always yoked with other high qualities of character. Its nearest ally is self-control, and self-control is as important when you are building a character as a rudder is when a ship is launched. It is literally the steering apparatus which keeps us clear of the rocks and shoals of an impetuous and reckless temper. I would rather have patience with perfect self-control than to have genius, for while genius is erratic and often unbalanced, these other qualities give us poise and equilibrium. Patience is grounded on resignation to the inevitable, which results in a calm endurance under exasperating circumstances, and in the conviction that it is safer to bear the ills we have than to fly to others that we know not of. When a man cultivates patience, therefore, he becomes master of himself and master of whatever may possibly happen. It is a kingly, a royal virtue, and more depends on its possession than we are apt to think.

You can reckon its value by considering its opposite. Impatience is a dangerous quality. It constantly places your self-respect and your relations to your dearest friends in peril. Moreover, it makes unhappy circumstances more unhappy still. You can't rebel against your surroundings with a complaining heart without rendering yourself weak to oppose or change them. Look your life over calmly and impartially and you will find that where you have been at odds with your lot you have made the lot so much the worse and more difficult to get away from, whereas if you had accepted the bitter experience and made the best of it you would have reaped a benefit otherwise impossible. It is equally true that where you have been impetuous of speech you have had cause for regret, while a curbed tongue has been cause for rejoicing. When you have been silent you have done better than when you have spoken. A bitter word suppressed strengthens the character, while a reckless utterance is like a bomb, which is sure to injure, if it does not kill, a friendship.

It is an inexorable law that three-quarters of the world must drudge in order to live. You may wonder why this should be so, but you will find no solution for the puzzle. The simple, stubborn fact faces you, and it ends all controversy. Moreover, all the world, without exception, must sooner or later bear heavy burdens of sorrow and bereavement. The normal condition of man is to be a burden-bearer, and I had almost said it is the only healthy condition. There is no smooth road laid down on the chart of life. We all trudge through storm and sunshine. Poverty, sickness, trouble, death, are to be found everywhere. Kings and peasants alike have their sorrows. It is the common lot.

There is only one question to be asked and answered: How shall we make these experiences contribute to strength of character, and possibly to our welfare? Not, surely, by a restless controversy with the inevitable and inexorable. That state of mind only aggravates the evil without even the shadow of a good result. It is your attitude of mind and heart which decides your happiness or misery.

Fight fate and you will surely be defeated; not only defeated, but soured. On the other hand, make the best of the worst, calmly and patiently use events and extract from them whatever of good they may contain, and your days will swing along with a smoothness that will surprise you. More and better than that, your calmness and patience will have a tendency to draw to you the help of the other world, and if you and the other world come to a harmonious understanding the very complexion of your adverse circumstances will change.

In a word, the soul which follows in the footsteps of the Christ and in poverty and hard work and misfortune bravely meets and nobly endures will find light in unexpected places, and joys where only fears were looked for. There is a subtle law here, and if we can discover it and be guided by it the clouds will have a silver lining, and even our sorrows will prove a blessing.

God is still with us, and so are the angels of God. With patience and courage we may fit ourselves for their kind services, and so make good use of the roughest places over which we must travel to the rest and reward of the glorious future.

Now as to the name of the garment,
There is one unerring test.
If it costs five plunks 'tis a waistcoat,
If less than that, a vest.

To Detect Bad Notes.

There will be no doubt an unusually large number of visitors in England this summer in connection with the coronation festivities. The recent announcement that several hundred £5 notes have been lately stopped by the Bank of England and other London banks will be specially interesting to them, and may cause some feelings of apprehension, for the visitor, unused to handling the English money, is naturally more easily victimized than those accustomed to it. The Daily Express gives some interesting information as to how you may tell whether your £5 notes are genuine or forged.

Chief cashiers in banks can tell at a glance, for in the freemasonry of the profession they have learned some of the secret marks by which the Bank of England absolutely safeguards itself against deception.

The whole of the secret marks, some dozen in all, are only known to the man whose signature appears on each note.

The best test for the average man to apply is the rough and ready one of looking at the water-mark. If that is very plain, when held up to the light or laid down on a table, you may be pretty certain that your fiver is genuine.

The water-mark of the Bank of England is one of those things that no forger has yet been able to imitate successfully.

Now for the forged notes. If you would detect them look out for any of the following defects, which were discovered after long examination by the chief cashier of a West End business house:—

(1) The water-mark is very light, and not made in the note.

(2) The paper is slightly greasy to the touch.

(3) The printing is lighter; the ink not as black as it should be. This is particularly noticeable in the medallion of Britannia in the top left-hand corner.

(4) The top and bottom of the note are very ragged, as if carried in the pocket, and nicked as if torn away, while the sides are quite clean cut.

"I had never handled a forged Bank of England note," said this cashier, "until this came into my possession, and I naturally examined it very carefully.

"I understand that the notes have different dates and numbers, making their detection more difficult, and I should say that the dates were added after the body of the note had been printed."

From the head of a large banking concern in the city The Express representative received an opinion regarding the forged notes closely corresponding with the one given above. He was of opinion that the note might best be detected by three of its features:—

(1) Not quite so crisp as the genuine note.

(2) Faint water-mark

(3) Faulty engraving and printing of the Britannia medal.

Forgers of bank notes have always two prime difficulties to contend with—to imitate the water-mark, and to get the notes in circulation.

The Duke of Gloucester.

The proposal to revive the old English title of Duke of Gloucester has set newspaper writers at work, hunting up the records of former bearers of the title, which appear to be mournful enough to give it an aspect of ill-omen even in the present materialistic age. The title was last revived by George I., who created his grandson, Frederick Lewis, Duke of Gloucester in 1714. This Prince was not, if his father, George II., may be believed, an ornament to the Peerage. "My dear firstborn," said that unamiable Sovereign, "is the greatest ass and the greatest liar and the greatest canaille and the greatest beast in the whole world, and I heartily wish he was out of it." His unhappy relations with his parents were a public scandal, but a fairer estimate of his character is that given by Horace Walpole. "His best quality was generosity, his worst insincerity, and indifference to truth, which appeared so early that Earl Stanhope wrote to Lord Sunderland what I shall conclude his character with:—'He has his father's head and his mother's heart.' His character with the people is probably best summed up in the lines beginning

Here lies Fred,
Who was alive and is dead.
and ending with
There's no more to be said."

The title became dormant again in 1834, when the second Duke of this creation, third son of "Fred," died without children. If the story of the present revival has any basis, the title is presumably intended for one of the young sons of the Prince of Wales.

Helping Reciprocity Along.

Force of circumstances is compelling us to reckon with western Canada. The Journal has often spoken of the great agricultural resources of that region, and has predicted that within ten years it will be the greatest hard wheat raising region in the world. The enormous crop raised there last year and bound for the export market, almost entirely, has called the attention of Minneapolis grain men and millers to the importance of Canadian competition. Canadian wheat is now selling so cheaply abroad that the Minneapolis export flour trade is in danger of suffering thereby, as foreign millers can buy Canadian wheat and undersell the Minneapolis exporters.

To remedy partially this unfortunate state of affairs the local millers are thinking of buying Canadian wheat and milling it in bond for their export trade. If they do this they will be able to meet the foreign millers on equal terms as to the price of Canadian wheat, since the duty on Canadian wheat will be refunded when the flour made from it is exported. So, then, we are already confronted with the desirability of using Canadian wheat in the manufacture of flour designed for export. The time is approaching when we shall need it for flour intended for domestic consumption. Already, regardless of the tariff, it is competing with American wheat and forcing down the price of the latter. If the tariff on wheat were taken off and Canadian wheat were merged in American wheat in the markets, the chances are that it would affect the price less than now.

Truly, the development of the Canadian west is making the question of reciprocity with Canada a very live one for the people of the American northwest.—Minneapolis Journal.

The Poultry Yard.

Selecting Layers.

While in every flock of poultry there are good, bad and indifferent layers, not all poultry-keepers take the trouble to discriminate and set the eggs of only the good layers. The points that distinguish a good from an indifferent layer are the increased activity of the former, and she usually has a small head and extra bright eye, but these latter points want a trained eye to detect. Good layers can be found not only among pure breeds and first crosses, but among the so-called mongrels, but in every case they are the most active in the flock and the hungriest, which is easily explained by the fact that they are often laying when the others are not, and a laying hen is always more eager for food, or at least wants more food, than one not laying. A very good layer seldom, if ever, lays a large egg; it is of medium size only, and for this reason often gets overlooked when eggs are chosen for setting. Some poultry-keepers choose the biggest eggs for this purpose, but the medium sized ones will hatch just as fine chickens as a rule. The eggs of a good layer should always be set, for her progeny are very likely to take after her; a cockerel descended from a good layer is of more value in the breeding-pen than one from a moderate layer only.—C. D. L., in Farm and Home.

Unfertile Eggs.

It is generally best to set several hens at the same time, so that unfertile or addled eggs can be thrown out on the sixth or seventh day, and a redistribution made of the remainder, giving a full supply to each hen as far as they will go, and leaving perhaps one or two birds with none at all. These can be reset again with fresh eggs, and they will be little or none the worse of the extra week's work.

It is always advisable to throw out the useless eggs as soon as their presence can be detected. They are simply taking up space in the nest, and perhaps preventing full justice being done to the others. It is often possible to pick them out on the fifth day, but they can generally be detected with certainty on the seventh. The procedure is extremely simple. Encircle the egg to be tested between the thumb and forefinger, lengthways, and hold up between the eye and a gas jet or candle flame. If it is fertile it will appear to be quite opaque, the air space at the thick end showing clearly against the dark centre; while, if the egg is unfertile, it will show quite clear all over. Such eggs as the latter may at once be thrown out. If the contents seem muddy, and appear to shift as the egg is moved in the hand, very likely it is addled, and may be thrown out also. If there is any doubt as to such an egg, it may be replaced in the nest, and retested a day or two after. Its true condition can then be ascertained with certainty. If such an egg rattles when slightly shaken, it is going rotten fast.—Farmer and Stock Breeder.

Brown Eggs and White Eggs.

Among the many popular fallacies which are prevalent at the present day there is none more common (even to a large extent among educated people) than the belief in the superiority of a brown egg over a white one. It is certainly true that a rich-colored brown egg looks more tempting on the breakfast table than does one of the cream-colored eggs which are most frequently seen. A cream-colored egg in most cases is a stale egg—it is a brown egg that has lost its color to a greater or less extent, and with its color, too, has gone the bloom of freshness which is so characteristic of a new-laid egg. Although, as a rule, the richly-colored brown eggs are first selected at the morning breakfast table, yet at the same time if the white eggs were of that pure white color which is characteristic of the Minorca and Leghorn and the Andalusian—that is to say, if they were always of a pure white color, not a creamy color—I fancy they would be taken up more rapidly. The hotelkeeper who has to display on his breakfast tables a number of eggs would make them look more attractive if he would only place before his guests eggs which are either absolutely white or rich dark-brown intermingled.

But now what is the difference between a brown egg and a white one? Experiments have been tried from time to time with a view to comparing the composition of brown eggs and white eggs, and these experiments have revealed the fact that there is absolutely no difference whatever between a brown egg and a white egg so far as their chemical composition is concerned. It is six of one and half a dozen of the other, and the notion that, because an egg is brown in color, therefore it is richer than one which is white in color, is an absurdity. The same thing applies to the color of the yolk; a dark yolk is no better than a pale yolk so far as nutritive properties are concerned. It is perfectly true that the flavor of yolks varies considerably, but that depends upon the manner in which fowls are fed, and also upon the conditions under which they are kept, and it has no bearing whatever upon the richness or otherwise of the yolks from a dietetic point of view. The reason why some eggs are brown in color while others are white is simply this, that in certain breeds—generally speaking, those which are known as the Asiatic breeds—the carbonate of lime which is deposited through their blood to form the egg shell is pink-colored, whereas in other breeds it is white, and wherever Asiatic blood is present the egg color is dark proportionately—that is to say, that a fowl with only a tincture of Asiatic blood in its veins will lay a slightly tinted egg, whereas one that has more Asiatic blood in her veins will lay a darker egg, and so on. That is not an absolutely fixed rule, but that is the drift of it. The color of the eggs a hen lays depends really upon her pedigree. The same principle applies to the color of the yolk. The color of the yolk is due to a pigment, and is dependent, as I have already said, upon the feeding and general conditions of living, and to some extent upon the hereditary tendency also.

Farmers would find it advantageous (as I have several times previously said in these columns) to aim at producing very white and very dark brown eggs—in preference to the indefinite assortment of colors we usually see in an egg basket. The appearance is so much better.—W. M. Freeman, in Farm and Home.

The Veal Age.

This is assuredly the Veal Age in literature. People no longer ask about an author, How old is he? but How young is he—or she, as is usually the case. Of the writers on the staff of Josh. Gosh & Co. 25 per cent. are under the age of twenty-one, and 25 per cent. are under sixteen years. Sixty-eight per cent. of these write historical romances and 25 per cent. write in the colonial style.—[illegible]

A MARVELLOUS MEDICINE

"No Cure, No Pay," is the Newest Proposal of the Proprietors of Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills

Editor Morning Times.

WEDDING BELLS.

Miss Jennie Robson United in Marriage to Mr. Thompson, both of Otonabee

A pleasant event took place last evening at the home of Mrs. Walter Robson, Otonabee, when her daughter, Miss Jennie, was united in marriage to Mr. Thompson, also of Otonabee. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. Dr. Torrance, in the presence of a large number of friends of the bride and groom. The bride was attired in white organdie. The gifts to the were varied and costly. The Times joins in hearty congratulations. May all their ways be pleasantness.

A LARGE SURPLUS

Cheque for $2,500 Handed to the Town by the Water Commissioners

At the last meeting of the Water Commissioners they had a very pleasant duty to perform in handing over to the Town Authorities a cheque for $2,500 representing the excess of the revenue over the cost of maintenance of the Water Works for the first quarter. The time for paying the quarters rates, which are payable in advance and secure the discount, is not yet up, so that much revenue is not yet received from this quarter. The first in which the town collected the rates.

Out of the money received the town must pay the interest and sinking fund on the works before they can figure on any surplus.

FOOD DOES IT

Restores Health More Surely Than any Medicine

It is a short road to trouble when the food does not supply the right material to rebuild the brain. You cannot use the brain without breaking down small particles every day, and you cannot rebuild unless the food furnishes the right kind of building material, and that is albumen and phosphate of potash. Not such as you get from the druggist, but such as Nature stores in certain kinds of food.

Grape-Nuts contains these particles and well-defined results can be obtained from using the toothsome, delicious food.

A brain worker whose name can be given by the Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich., writes, "Last fall I got in a desperate condition through the excessive mental work and lack of proper food. I was finally compelled to abandon all business and seek absolute quiet and rest in the country.

I had been under the care of a good physician for several months, but it seemed by food did not rebuild the brain tissue properly. I was on the verge of despair when I left for the country.

Down at the ferry I purchased an evening Journal and my attention was attracted to the headlines of a Grape-Nuts advertisement which read, 'Food Cure Nature's Way.' I read it carefully and decided to give Grape-Nuts a trial, so next morning I went in on the new food, and in two weeks time gained 10 pounds and felt like a new man all over.

I candidly believe if I had known the remarkable sustaining power of the food prior to my illness I would not have needed a physician nor would I have been sick at all."

THE TOWN COUNCIL

Tenders Let for Street Watering—The Cordage Company Siding

A special session of the Town Council was held in the Town Clerks Office last night at eight o'clock.

Those present were, Mayor Denne, Ald. Rush, Shortly, McGregor, Corkery, Edgcumbe, Hatton, Morrison, Roger.

To the Council of the Town of Peterborough.

Gentlemen :—

Your Committee of the whole council beg leave to report as follows :—

1. That the following tenders for street watering were received. Southern District, I. Williams, $346.00 W. J. Collins, $324.50. Western District, J. H. Cameron, $285.00. Northern District, Z. Blodgett, $619.00.

2. We recommend that the tenders of Wm. J. Collins, J. H. Cameron and Z. Blodgett, be accepted.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

The report was adopted.

A By-law authorizing the acceptance of tenders for street watering was passed and sealed.

A By-law to authorize the Mayor and Clerk to execute an agreement with Mr. Williams for a dumping ground received its several readings was passed and sealed.

A communication from Wm. Kilgour asking the council to grant him the sum of $10.00 to place a crossing at his place. The matter was referred to the Board of Works.

On motion the Legal Committee were authorized to look into the matter of closing up Mercer Avenue.

Mr. McWilliams appeared before the council and asked the council to look into the action of the Cordage Co. in placing a siding into their works which has been pointed out was damaging the property of Mr. McNamara. The company had asked the council for permission to put in a siding into their works but as the matter had been opposed by Mr. McNamara, the Cordage company had afterwards purchased the ground from the Town Commissioners and had received a deed for the ground which is a continuation of Bethune street. After sometime the company had got permission from the council to place the siding on Aylmer street. Several of the parties who signed Mr. McNamara's petition, when this became known wished to withdraw their names as they would sooner see the siding put in on Bethune street than on Aylmer.

The question is a very difficult one because the railway was built before that portion of the town was incorporated. It is difficult to say whether the town has the claim to the street or not.

Mr. McWilliams, on behalf of his client, Mr. McNamara asked that the council carry out its resolution recommended by the Legal Committee some time ago. He wants the council to arrange with the company for the return of the deed to the property, and that the obstructions on the street be removed.

Mr. McNamara is willing to waive the question of damages providing the land be taken back by the town and the street opened up.

The Council adjourned.

The Legal Committee held a short session at the close of the meeting.

REV. W. L. ATKINSON INDUCTED

As Pastor of the Presbyterian Church at Warsaw, on Tuesday

A special meeting of the Presbytery of Peterborough was held at Warsaw on Tuesday for the purpose of inducting Rev. W. L. Atkinson, formerly of Edmonton, into the pastorate of the Warsaw church. The induction services were held at three o'clock at which the attendance was very large. The following ministers represented the Presbytery, Rev. Dr. Torrance, of St. Pauls, Rev. J. G. Potter of St. Andrews, Rev. Mr. Kannawin, of Omemee, Rev. Mr. Campbell, of Lakefield, Rev. Mr. McIntosh, of Fraserville, and Rev. Wm. Bennett, of Peterborough.

The sermon was preached by Rev. Mr. Potter. The induction of the pastor and the asking of the usual series of questions and offering, the induction prayer was conducted by Rev. Mr. Campbell.

Rev. Mr. Kannawin, addressed the minister, and Rev. Mr. McIntosh, addressed the people in appropriate terms.

After the ceremony a congregational tea and reception to the new pastor was held, at which the greatest sociability prevailed. After the tea an excellent programme was presented in which all the ministers took part. Rev. Mr. McQuade, the Methodist minister was present and delivered an excellent address.

MILITARY NOTES

It is expected that recruiting for the fourth Canadian Contingent, for service in South Africa will be carried on at the Drill hall in the course of a few days. No definite orders have as yet been issued but it is understood that recruits will be examined and accepted at the same points as for the last contingent. In a day or so, further particulars are expected, and notice will be given in the press. Already a large number of men have sent in their names to the examining officer, Sergeant-Major Young and to the orderly room clerk. It is thought that fully fifty men can be raised here as there is no limit to the quotas from each station.

The 57th Regiment held their first drill of the season on Tuesday evening. A large number turned out, also a good batch of recruits. The regiment will parade on Tuesday evening next. As the regiment has been invited to go to Napanee, for the 24th of May, the officers are desirous that the men attend drill regularly so as to be in good shape by that time. It has not been fully decided yet whether they will go or not but it is quite likely they will.

After drill was concluded Lt. Col. Edwards addressed the men expressing his pleasure at so large a turn out. He personally mentioned Col. Sgt. Murphy, who was wounded recently in South Africa, also Captain Milligan, who was killed in the same engagement.

"PETE" SIMONS, ARTIST TAILOR

An Up-to-Date Business Man, and a Model Tailor

There are tailors and tailors. All tailors will tell you they can make you a suit that will fit you perfectly. The suits made by some tailors would make the most perfectly developed and splendidly proportioned man look like a "hobo." Others will make you a suit that improves the appearance of any man. One of this latter class of tailors does business in this town, and, needless to say, numbers his customers by the score. He is a deservedly popular citizen, known to hundreds of warm friends as "Pete" Simons.

Mr. Simons is a genial gentleman, and one of Peterborough's most prominent and successful business men. His bright, up-to-date, and commodious store on George street, two doors north of Hunter street, is stocked with one of the finest assortments of English, Scotch and Canadian tweeds, serges, and worsteds in Ontario. No sooner does fashion set her favor on any particular color, weave, or texture, than it is added to Pete Simons's stock. He says that a well-made suit or overcoat, of good material, is ruined by inferior or cheap lining or trimming, and he never uses any but the very best.

In "cutting" Mr. Simons is an artist just as much as is the man who paints an exquisite landscape. It requires years of study, observation and practice to enable a man to cut a suit so that it will conform gracefully, naturally and correctly to every curve of the human figure. Mr. Simons possesses these qualifications in a marked degree, and the suit he makes for you is up-to-date in every detail, correct in style, excellent in quality, natty, handsome, and above all, it possesses that air of quiet, graceful elegance, which so many tailors strive to attain—but without success. In short, you cannot get a better fitting handsomer, more elegant suit in America, than Pete Simons will make for you, and the beauty of the bargain is that he won't charge you a penny more for it, than ordinary dealers charge for inferior clothes.

A glance in the windows of Mr. Simon's handsome store will convince the most skeptical of the superior value of his stock.

THE NEW SKATING RINK

Messrs. Keila and Knapman are Rapidly Writing Up Stock

Messrs. J. S. Knapman and R. H. Keila, who were recently appointed as promoters for the new skating rink company are meeting with splendid success in their canvass for stock in the town. In all, about $4,000 will be the amount to be raised before tenders will be asked for. To assist the promoters in their work, a neat prospectus has been prepared, from which we take a few items which show the yearly estimated receipts and expenditure of the rink. The figures are based on the receipts and expenditure of the old rink and there is every reason to believe that the receipts in a thoroughly up-to-date new rink will be much in excess of the figures quoted below.

They are as follows :

ALL THE TRANSVAALERS TO CEASE FIGHTING.

Resistance of the Free Staters Can Then Easily be Overcome--Boer Delegates Think Present Negotiations Successful

Special Telegram to The Times.

The Hague, April 11.—A report is current in official circles to-day that terms of peace in South Africa will be signed in a few days. It is impossible to verify the report on any definite authority.

The Associated Press understands that the peace negotiations are progressing satisfactory, so far as the Transvaalers are concerned, but the latest advices indicate that there is small probability of the Free Staters surrendering in a body. The negotiations, thus far, have been mainly explanations of British intentions. It has been made plain to the leaders that their surrender will not entail banishment, and this has a potent influence. The leading Transvaalers urge their allies to arrange peace terms. The inner circles of the War Office believe that if the present indications are fulfilled, and the Transvaalers agree to surrender, the backbone of Boer resistance will be broken, and that the Free Staters' opposition will soon be overcome.

DIPLOMATICALLY ILL.

London, Thursday, April 11.—It is stated by gossip in connection with the reported postponement of the presentation of the budget to the House of Commons that the indisposition of Sir Michael Hicks-Beach is diplomatic, and that peace is impending, and that the consequent prospect of relief to the estimates has something to do with the postponement. Nothing to confirm these statements can be found. Sir Michael is certainly unwell. He is suffering from a chill of the liver, although his condition is not serious.

The pro-Boer Daily News, scouting the peace rumor, discredits any idea of Government amnesty. It adds: — Nor is the situation in South Africa bad for the Boers. That they are moving towards unconditional surrender, quite the reverse. There is little doubt that they control vast districts in the Cape Colony. Their commandants issue orders to the farmers and receive supplies. They move about much as they please, and are scarcely disturbed by Gen. French's operations. Moreover, there is reason to believe there has been a recent reorganization of the Boer forces on Commonwealth lines. Commandant Maritz has formed an Ironsides corps, from which all drunkards and loose livers are rigidly excluded. They hold daily prayer meetings, and meet the hourly perils of war with the stern composure of the Puritans."

GOVERNMENT NOT SANGUINE.

London, April 11.—Mr. Walter Long, president of the Local Government Board, and Mr. Gerald Balfour, president of the Board of Trade, made speeches to-day, in which they indicated that the Government does not anticipate that peace will be the outcome of the mission to the Boer leaders in the field of Acting President Schalkburger, of the Transvaal.

Mr. Balfour, speaking at Leeds, said that no negotiations were proceeding with General Kitchener, who was merely facilitating a conference between the Boer leaders. Mr. Balfour added that he did not know whether the leaders intended to offer terms of surrender. For himself, he was not sanguine in the matter, and he advised his hearers not to be sanguine. Great Britain was still prepared to go as far as was stated a year ago, but that was absolutely the last work. If the Boers adhered to their demand for independence they might as well abandon the idea of negotiations.

As Others See Us

Lindsay Post:—In Peterborough the Chief of Police periodically visits the market at the request of the Town Property Committee, and weighs samples of butter exposed for sale. The other day he found some prints 3 oz. short of the pound, and confiscated them. Chief Nevison should be instructed to do the same, and also to weigh the bakers' loaves occasionally. We fancy the result would be cheering to the inmates of the Home for the Aged, to which institute the confiscated goods would doubtless be sent.

Seven Boer Chiefs Confer as to Peace

Special Telegram to The Times.

Pretoria, Thursday, April 10.President Steyn, of the Orange Free State, Secretary of State Reitz of the Transvaal, Acting President Schalkburgher, of the Transvaal, and General Lucas Meyer, Commander-in-Chief of the Orange Free State forces, passed through Kroonstad, Orange Free State, Sunday, April 6, on their way to Klerksdorp, Southwestern Transvaal, where General Botha, the Transvaal Commander-in-Chief, arrived Monday, April 7. It was expected that Generals De Wet and De La Rey would attend the conference to take place there. It is understood that the Boer leaders are fully possessed of the British terms, and that the conference then assembling was to enable the leaders to discuss these terms thoroughly. It is expected that the final decision of the burghers will be made known soon.

CONFIRMATION BY THE TIMES.

London, April 10.—The London Times, in its second edition to-day, publishes a despatch from Klerksdorp, dated April 9, announcing that Acting President Schalkburger and other members of the Boer Government, arrived there by train April 6, and that messages were sent out inviting President Steyn and General Delarey to come in and meet them. While awaiting a reply, General Schalkburger and his party were occupying a hotel which had been reserved for their use.

OUTLOOK FOR BOERS MOST DISHEARTENING

Commandant Maritz Has Formed an "Ironsides" Corps--Another Drive Made by British General Kritzinger's Trial

Pretoria, April 10.—The British generals are preparing to make a grand concerted movement to clear the country. The general outlook for the Boers is said to be most disheartening. It is thought here that the bulk of the Boers are only awaiting for a promise that they will not be banished, to come in and surrender.

KRITZINGER'S TRIAL

Graf Reinet, April 10.—After a two days' trial Commandant Kritzinger was acquitted by a court martial on the charge of train wrecking. No evidence was obtained to connect the prisoner with the shooting of natives, and one scout who had been captured by Kritzinger, testified that he was well treated, and that a pass was granted him.

CROMWELL IMITATIONS

London, April 10. — The pro-Boer Daily News takes a somewhat pessimistic view of the situation. It says: "Moreover, there is reason to believe there has been a recent reorganization of the Boer forces on Commonwealth lines. Commandant Maritz has formed an Ironsides camp, from which all drunkards and loose livers are rigidly excluded. They hold daily prayer meetings, and meet the hourly perils of war with the stern composure of the Puritans."

STEYN GOING BLIND.

London, April 10.—Despatches from Pretoria state that former President Steyn of the Orange Free State is threatened with total blindness as the result of a disease of the eyes. The affliction is not of recent origin, but his long, uninterrupted exposure to the hardships and privations of campaigning has developed the malady to an alarming degree.

WISE COMMENT ON AN ATROCITY

St. James Gazette on the Charge of Executing Natives

THE ENGLISH OPINION GIVEN

Journal Says That British Know Better Than to Hold the Whole of the U. S. Responsible.

London, April 10.—Commenting on the evidence presented at the court-martial in Manila of Major Littlejohn W. T. Waller, of the United States Marine Corps, on the charge of executing natives of Samar without trial, on the editorial remarks of American papers and of newspapers here, The St. James' Gazette this afternoon says: "Englishmen knew better than to hold a high-spirited honorable people responsible for the dishonor of a single criminal. We have no doubt American honor will be vindicated in the same manner as that of the British has recently been by an award of swift, uncompromising justice to the guilty parties. In this country our confidence in American rectitude is in no degree shaken by an isolated example of depravity, such as we know from experience is liable to occur in the armies of the foremost civilized and most human nations."

BRUTAL AMERICAN SOLDIERS

Gen. T. H. Smith Ordered Major Waller to "Kill Everything Over Ten."

Special to The Times.

Manila, April 11.—Major Waller, at to-day's session of the court-martial, by which he is being tried on the charge of executing natives of Samar without trial, testified in rebuttal of the evidence given yesterday by General Jacob H. Smith, who commanded the American troops in the island of Samar. The Major said General Smith instructed him to kill and burn, said that the more he killed and burned, the better pleased he would be, that it was no time to take prisoners, and that he was to make Samar a howling wilderness. Major Waller asked General Smith to define the age limit for killing, and he replied, "Everything over ten." The Major repeated this order to Captain Porter, saying, "We do not make war in that way on old men, women and children." Captain David D. Porter, Captain Hiram I. Bearss and Lieut. Frank Halford, all of the Marine Corps, testified corroboratively.

KNISELY'S STRICT ORDER

Incident Illustrating the Scrupulous Honesty of a Canadian Soldier

Special to The Times.

Toronto officials tell a story to the credit of the late Corporal Knisely, who was killed recently in South Africa. He enlisted in Toronto and was well known there, although living elsewhere. When the city was distributing its gifts—£5 and a silver matchbox, he asked for the exact terms of the gifts, and on learning that the resolution of the Council comprehended only residents in Toronto, he declined them, even although they were offered because there was considerable justification for giving them to him as a Toronto man.

RELIEF FOR BOER WOMEN

President Roosevelt Sees That Gift of $5,000 Reaches Them

Special to The Times.

Chicago, April 10—Governor Yates's Boer Relief Fund Committee and other Boer sympathizers of Chicago are jubilant over the success of that committee in securing the indorsement of President Roosevelt in their efforts to relieve the sufferings of women and children in the British reconcentrado camps in South Africa.

Secretary Peter Van Vlissengen of the committee forwarded a letter and a check for $5,000 to the President on March 28, asking that the money be sent in some way to South Africa by the President.

A reply has been received signed by Secretary Hay, saying that the money had been forwarded to the United States Consul-general at Cape Town, South Africa, at the order of the President, with instructions to dispose of the money as requested by the Chicago committee. With this unlooked-for success in view, Secretary Van Vlissengen says a fund of $5,000,000 will be started immediately and forwarded in sums of $5,000 to the President to be disposed of in the same way, if the President is so disposed.

It is considered by Boer sympathizers that the way is now opened by the President by which sympathizers in this country can aid the women and children in the camps under British rule. A letter of thanks will also be sent to the President for his part in the work of relief.

TO WELCOME MISS STONE

A Public Reception to be Tendered the Returning Missionary

Special to The Times.

New York, April 11—A rousing welcome awaits Miss Ellen M. Stone, the American missionary who was captured by brigands, and who is due to reach New York to-morrow morning on the Hamburg-American liner Deutchland. Representatives of the Presbyterian and other missionary societies with headquarters in this city will meet the incoming steamer and early in the coming week, according to arrangements which are being made, there will be a public reception in honor of Miss Stone.

KEENE

—A quiet wedding took place in our village on Wednesday last. The happy couple were Mr. Milton Eson and Miss Clara E. O'Riley. The nuptial knot was tied by the Rev. Mr. Secombe, pastor of the Methodist church of this place. We tender to the young couple the usual congratulations.

The citizens of Keene held a meeting in the town hall on Thursday the 3rd inst., and formed themselves into an association entitled "The Keene Improvement and Beautifying Association." They decided to turn out bodily on Arbor day and clean all the streets of refuse, as well as to plant trees where they are needed. We wish them every success in their new enterprise.

—A number of our citizens are at present actively engaged capturing the little red roach fishes. Although very small they pronounce them very good eating.

—The fall wheat and clover in this neighborhood promises to be a first-class crop. None of either has been killed or heaved out by frost.

—We are glad to learn that it is the intention of the citizens of Keene to ask our council to pass a by-law to forbid cattle to run on our streets during this summer.

THE MAORIS EAGER TO SERVE

A despatch from Wellington to the Times says: "At a meeting at Christ Church, at which he received a testimonial in recognition of his services to the Empire, Premier Seddon strongly deprecated the refusal of the home authorities to accept the offer of the Maoris to serve in South Africa.

THE FOURTH CONTINGENT

Recruiting will Commence Here on Tuesday Next, April 15th

Ottawa, April 10th.—Orders were issued last night for the mobilization of the fourth Canadian Contingent for service in South Africa. There will be four regiments, to be known as the 3rd, 4th, 5th and 6th Regiments, Canadian Mounted Rifles, to be armed and equipped as the Imperial Yeomanry of His Majesty's forces.

CONDITIONS OF SERVICE;

1. Term of service, for 12 months or until termination of present war in South Africa.

2. Pay,—cavalry rates, 24 cents per day, from date of enlistment until the day prior to embarkation, and Imperial Yeomanry rates, $1.21 from and inclusive of date of embarkation.

3. Age,—Not under 20 or over 40 years.

4. Standard,—Not under 5 feet 6 inches in height; not over 5 feet 11 inches; not to weigh more than 180 pounds, and to have a chest measurement of not less than 34 inches.

5. Medical requirements,—To be Medically fit according to Imperial Yeomanry conditions.

6. Qualifications,—To be able to ride and shoot.

Preference will be given to men who have had previous experience in South Africa, and to single men.

Married men and widowers with children will be accepted, conditional on no separation allowance being issued.

CONDITIONS OF PAY

The conditions of pay, etc., will be as follows:— (a) Up to and including the day prior to embarkation for South Africa, ordinary cavalry rates of pay and allowances will be drawn, except separation allowance.

From the date of embarkation the rates of pay will be on the following scale, which will be inclusive of good conduct pay:—Regimental sergeant-major, $2.19; quartermaster-sergeant, farrier-sergeant, farrier-staff-sergeant, $1.96; company sergeant-major, company quartermaster-sergeant, $1.94; sergeant, $1.70; corporal, appointed lance-sergeant, $1.58; corporal and paid lance-corporal, $1.46; private, $1.21. Non-commissioned officers not above the rank of sergeant acting as farrier-sergeant or farrier staff-sergeant, and privates acting as buglers, saddlers, or shoeing smiths, will be granted extra duty pay at the rate of 24 cents per diem.

Officers, non-commissioned officers, and men will be enabled to assign part of their pay to relatives and friends in Canada, and such assignments of pay will be issued monthly from the Department of Militia and Defence.

RECRUITING.

Recruiting will be commenced in the North West Territories and British Columbia on April 24th. In the Eastern Provinces it will be commenced on Tuesday next, April 15th, and continued until orders are issued from head-quarters to cease. All men will be enlisted as privates, but men who have previously served in the permanent corps, or in the North West Mounted Police Force, as non-commissioned officers, will be given the preference in making selections for non-commissioned ranks. The attestation papers will be made out and executed in duplicate.

RECRUITING DEPOTS.

Peterboro'—Lieut.-Colonel D. Sutton, 3rd Dragoons; Surgeon-Major T. W. H. Young, 3rd Dragoons.

Port Hope—Major N. F. MacNachton, 14th Field Battery; Surgeon-Major H. A. Turner, 40th Regt.

Kingston—District Officer Commanding, officer in medical charge.

Ottawa—D.O.C., Ottawa Brigade; Major C. W. F. Carrall, A.M.S.

Windsor—Lieut.-Colonel Guillot, 21st Regt.; Surgeon-Lieut. H. H. Saunderson, 21st Regt.

Guelph—Lieut.-Colonel A. H. Macdonald, R.O.; Surgeon-Major W. H. Johnson, 30th Regt.

London—District Officer Commanding, Major C. W. Hutton, A.M.S.

Hamilton—Colonel F. L. Lessard, R.C.D.; Major G. S. Rennie, A.M.S.

Brantford—Lieut. and Major C. M. Nelles, R.C.D.; Surgeon-Major R. H. Palmer, 38th Regt.

St. Catharines—Lieut.-Colonel R. W. Gregory, 2nd Dragoons; Capt. W. W. Thompson, A.M.S.

Toronto—District Officer Commanding, Lieut.-Colonel W. Nattress, A.M.S.

Recruiting officers will, unless they are able to certify from personal knowledge that candidates are good riders and fair shots, subject them to a test before enlisting them.

MEDICAL EXAMINATION.

The medical examination will be carried out as directed in regulations for army medical services. Attention must be paid to the eyesight, and the condition of the teeth of the recruit.

The remuneration of examiners, if not in receipt of per diem pay, will be $1 per man, up to three men examined any one day, and 50 cents for each additional man.

A further medical inspection will be made of men who from observation or from information from any source are considered doubtful. The inspector will approve the original examination paper, or if he disapproves, will state his reason in writing why the recruits should be rejected. The original examiner may be called upon to refund any expenditure connected with the enlistment of a recruit rejected in this way.

Officers will be examined by a medical board at port of embarkation.

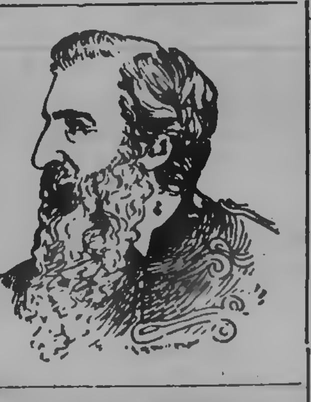
CONCENTRATION

Recruits will be forwarded to Halifax, the place of concentration, any day following the date of enlistment, according to transport arrangements to be made by the quartermaster-general. At Halifax they will be formed into four regiments of four squadrons each, the 3rd regiment being first organized, clothed, and equipped. The organization of the 4th regiment will be proceeded with as soon as sufficient men are concentrated, and similarly the 5th and 6th regiments will be organized.

Recruiting officers in forwarding recruits to place of concentration will appoint acting non-commissioned officers in the event of their being no officers to take charge, in the proportion of one corporal for any number of men up to ten, and for large detachments, one sergeant, and for every ten men one corporal.

Those desiring to enlist should send in their names to Surgeon-Major Young, or the orderly room clerk at the earliest opportunity.

GENERAL BOOTH'S BIRTHDAY



"A NICHT AT HAME."

A Splendid Concert Given Last Night in the Opera House

The concert given in the opera house last night by the Caledonian Concert Company was a grand success as far as the programme was concerned. The attendance, however, was small, but though weak in numbers were strong in their applause to the different numbers. The programme throughout consisted of Scottish music, songs and dancing and was presented as follows,—

PART I.

Bagpipe........ ... ..."Cock o' the North"
Pipe-Major Angus M. Fraser.
Song.."The Standard on the Braes o Mar."
Mr. A. D. Sturrock.
Dance...... ...."Highland Fling."
Pipe-Major Angus M. Fraser.
Song... ...."Come Ye by Athol."
Miss Ella Walker
Violin Solo...... ...."A Sprig o' Heather."
Mr. Cathcart Wallace
Song...... ...."Border Ballad."
Mr. A. D. Sturrock.
Dance... ...."Seann Trinbhas."
Pipe-Major Angus M. Fraser.
Song... ...."Jessie's Dream."
Miss Ella Walker

PART II

Piano Solo... ...."Gems of Scotland."
Mr. Cathcart Wallace
Song... ......"The Macgregors' Gathering."
Mr. A. D. Sturrock.
Song... ...."Auld Robin Gray."
Miss Ella Walker
Dance... ... ...Highland Sword Dance.
Pipe-Major Angus M. Fraser.
Song...... ...."The Gay Gordons."
Mr. A. D. Sturrock.
Dance...... ...."Sailor's Hornpipe."
Pipe-Major Angus M. Fraser.
Song... ...Wi' a Hundred Pipers an' A'
Miss Ella Walker
Song... ...."Scots Wha Hae."
Mr. A. D. Sturrock.
"Auld Lang Syne" "God Save the King"

Each number was heartily encored and pleasantly responded to. The Bagpipe Selections by Pipe-Major Fraser were excellent and plainly evidenced the fact that he is a master of the art. The solos by Miss Ella Walker and Mr. Sturrock were of a very high standard and rendered in a most pleasing style. Without a doubt Miss Ella Walker is the best Scottish vocalist that has appeared before an audience in Peterborough. Mr. Cathcart Wallace favored the audience with a violin selection that was greatly appreciated. He is truly an artist on the violin.

The Great Leader of the Salvation Army Celebrates His 73rd Birthday

Receives Hearty Congratulations from Friends and Admirers from All Parts of the World.

The Wonderful Progress Made by The Salvation Army.

London, April 10—General William Booth to-day celebrated the seventy-third anniversary of his birth. He received telegrams from every corner of the earth felicitating him upon the event. He has recovered from his serious illness of the past winter, and the severe work of receiving his friends and attending the jubilee meetings of the Salvation Army did not seem to fatigue him. It is announced that his visit to America, which was deferred because of his illness, will take place probably next fall.

General Booth was born at Nottingham in 1829 and became a minister of the Methodist New Connection in 1858. In 1861 he began his career as an evangelist, and his pathway led him to London. There in the East End he started in July, 1865, the work he called "The Christian Mission." This work, organized on military lines, was the germ of the Salvation Army, which name he adopted in 1878. The army spread over all the world, until now it numbers more than 6,000 corps and outposts established in Great Britain and Ireland, the United States, France, Australasia, India, Africa, Canada, Holland, Scandinavia, Belgium, Italy, Japan, West Indies, South America and other parts of the world. It has about 15,000 officers employed exclusively in its labors, and the number of its services is upwards of 50,000 each week. The organ of the army was established by General Booth in 1880 under the title of the War Cry. It is published weekly in England at the general headquarters, and simultaneously at each of the colonial and foreign headquarters. At present there are nearly forty weekly War Crys, with a circulation of nearly 1,000,000. In 1890 General Booth published the book of the year, "In Darkest England." He managed the charities springing from the agitation following upon the publication and has been assisted in this work by some of the most notable men in England.

Turning Down the Doctors

The marvelous cures of Catarrhozone are being much talked about. Thousands are daily recognizing the exceptional merit of this simple inhaler treatment, and instead of running to the doctor with their winter ills they protect themselves by Catarrhozone; it kills colds in the head in ten minutes, quickly relieves catarrh, bronchitis, asthma, lung troubles, and cures even though all other remedies have failed. Catarrhozone is very pleasant, safe and convenient to use. Its best recommendation is its enormous sale; try it to-day. Price $1.00, small size 25c., at druggists.

YANKEE WRITERS ON THE WAR.

New York despatches present a very gloomy picture of the British position and prospects, in South Africa, and predict all sorts of disasters for poor old John Bull. These statements are to be received with vastly more than the proverbial "pinch of salt." In nearly every case the wish is father to the thought, and it is the hot desire of the Yankees to see Britain defeated and humiliated, that prompts the sending out of the lugubrious despatches.

It is asserted that the Boers are in better fighting trim now than ever before, and that the war will not be ended in two years. Yet, in the same journal that prints this statement we read that Yankee speculators and manufacturers are already shipping immense quantities of pianos, organs, cocktails, and other "domestic necessities" to South Africa, while others are prepared to begin the exportation of American made goods, for the use of Briton and Boer, the moment the war ends.

Had Britain in this contest pursued tactics similar to those adopted by the Yankees to capture Aguinaldo in the Philippines, the war might have been ended long ago. But the lion fights a fair fight. He descends to no trickery. He is in South Africa to win, and to stay there, and he's going to do both. And the whelps from over seas are going to help him to the bitter end. And the old fellow doesn't require the United States to assist him, as he helped them, when they were in dire danger of a pound stubbing from combined Europe, not so long ago.

EDITORIAL NOTES

Because the Conservative candidate for West Peterborough is a "Miller," does it follow that he would be a good man to run "the machine" should he and his party be inadvertently returned to power in the near future?

• • • •

If the British had betrayed Paul Kruger into captivity, as the Yankees betrayed Aguinaldo, the war in South Africa would, in all probability, have been a matter of history now.

• • • •

If local indications count for anything, the militia department will have no difficulty in raising 2,000 more men for service in South Africa. Already more than fifty young men from Peterborough and vicinity have signified their desire to enlist.

• • • •

The pro-Boers in the United States claim that the British are enlisting citizens of the republic to fight in South Africa. While the contention is untrue, it might be noted, in passing, that very few Boers are now in the field. The war is kept alive by foreigners, chiefly citizens of the United States, who, like the Irish-American brigade, so called, "are out for what they can make."

A DEFENCE OF PALMISTRY

Editor Morning Times

Sir,—My attention was called to a paragraph in the Mail & Empire issued on March 31st, being a report of a lecture on "Palmistry" given by Professor Primrose, in the Canadian Institute. As the report is apt to mislead the public on "Palmistry" be so kind as to allow me space in your valuable paper, and in justice to it to contradict the assertions and denunciations made by Professor Primrose.

Having given a life study to the "Science of Palmistry," and practised it most successfully for the past fifteen years, I most emphatically refute such statements made by the lecturer as that "he having no doubt that the professor of palmistry owed a great deal of his success in reading characters to the fact that he did not confine himself at all to markings of the palm, but to other conditions, such as facial expressions and the opinions expressed by the client." Now, before a man poses himself as a lecturer on palmistry he should be conversant with the subject he talks about. For the information and refutation of Dr. Primrose's statement, I would say that I receive photographs or plaster of Paris casts of the hand from every part of the world, and have not the first knowledge of whom my patrons are. I read the photo or cast, and send them a written delineation of character, giving them also past, present and indications of future events, as marked in their hands by nature, and by the letters received after from the same people, it proved that I was perfectly correct. Those letters I possess, and can be seen by anyone who wishes. I may also say, without fear, that I have located "diseases," when doctors, and eminent ones at that, could not do so. In fact, I have had doctors themselves and their wives coming to me to have internal ailments properly located when their own husbands failed. Their autographs are in my register in approval of my readings. This does not seem to bear out the assertion of said lecturer, whom I would advise to procure himself some good text-books on "Scientific Palmistry," and study them well, as he has a lot to learn on this subject.

As a Professor of Anatomy, surely he will know that there are more nerves in the palm of the hand than any other part of the body, and that the nerves emanate from the brain, and all our sensations and thoughts pass along these nerves. So the more often the sensation passes along the same set of nerves the more plainly they must display the effect of the habit of thought or acts. The drunkard, hypocrite, the ill-tempered, each and all bear the traits of their failings on their faces. So in the hand the constant sensations, those which make up our temperament are impressed under the skin (epidermis), not upon the outer, but upon the inner skin. Heredity will give the form of the hand, and even the leading lines, but the smaller lines will come, change and disappear in the hands of babes in a few weeks, as the infant to some extent develops. His hands tell you if the brain is feverish or dull; as he grows older the brain grows; he develops habits of thought and actions which are impressed upon and by the nerves in certain channels, which observation and study have shown to be indicative of certain dispositions. As the gardener can distinguish the type of tulip by its growth and markings, so the chiromant can diagnose character and events by considering the natural tendencies and observing the impressions left by the nerves and nerve fluid. That is briefly the theory.

The lecturer also stated, as reported in the papers, that the lines and creases on the hands, were principally caused by old age, and illustrated Gladstone and Hon. Mr. Chamberlain's hands. This is very inconsistent, he might account for the lines being so numerous by age on the hand of Mr. Gladstone, but that would not agree with the numerous lines and tracings on the hand of Mr. Chamberlain, and let me here inform the doctor that the last named gentleman is not only a student but an apostle of palmistry, and a young man at that. In contradiction to the same statement I have read over 15,000 hands, and I have often found more creases in young people's, ranging from 12 to 25 years of age, than aged people. For an instance only, three months ago I read the hand of a maiden lady, 66 years of age, whose hands were free from all outward creases except the fourteen lines of which Dr. Primrose has very little knowledge or he would not have committed himself as he has done. Individually, at 67 my own hand is free from creases or hair lines except the main ones, and I have no doubt if he examines his own hands he will find them more free from said creases than many of his younger companions.

In examining the hand we do not depend only on the outer skin, but use magnifying glasses to read under the skin, and there we find crosses, grills, stars, forks, circles, squares, etc., and from these we discover and diagnose past events, present and the indication of future events, also the diseases. And now I would remark that if physicians would study the science of palmistry, they would then become a boon to insurance companies, and a blessing to their own patients. Effects possible and almost certain could be foreseen, and perhaps provided against, and "fatalities" might be assuaged. Surely Dr. Primrose will not have the audacity to place himself in opposition to such men as the following eminent physicians and learned men of the past and present centuries: Aristotle, Pliny, Paracelsus, Cordamis, Albertus Magnus, the Emperor Augustus, Cicero, Balzac, Bulwer, Hartlieb, Iricassi, Indagine, Fabricious Luts, Cardan, Dumas and D'Arpentigny, the old officer of Napoleon and the Apostle of Chirognomy. Desbarroles, the indefatigable student and exponent of the arch science, a man of lucid brain and courageous opinions, and the late A. B. Craig, of London, an M.A., if you please, at one of the famed English universities. All these men, only a few in a crowd, have publicly expressed their views. I will conclude with a quotation from Balzac, the greatest writer of physiological fiction that ever lived, and, with Shakespeare, one of the poles around which move the literature of modern times: "If God has printed the destiny of each man on his physiognomy, taking this word to mean the total expression of the body, why should not the hand give the characteristic of the physiognomy, since the hand represents human action in its entirety, and its only mode of manifesting it?"

Yours, etc.,
E. J. O'B.

Items of Interest

London, April 9.—Lord Strathcona leaves by the midnight train for Aberdeen to be presented with the freedom of the city to-morrow.

Anglo-Canadian timber dealers fear that Sir Michael Hicks-Beach means to impose an Imperial duty on timber generally, without exemption. The colonies' insurance rates against the imposition of the tax have risen to 20 guineas per cent.

The Welsh Patagonian Committee having collected £2,134, is arranging for a steamer to call at Chubut to take the first batch, probably 250, of the most deserving emigrants, to Canada. It is hoped the Canadian Government will increase the present payment—£— per head—to enable the others to follow.

Cecil Rhodes' scholarship proposal provides a yearly value of £300 each, tenable at any college in the University of Oxford, for three consecutive academical years, for sixty colonial scholarships, of which three go to Ontario, three to Quebec and three to Newfoundland.

London, April 9.—Though the matter is not yet official, it is learned from a source which may be taken as next to official that Lord Cadogan will not give up the Lord-Lieutenancy of Ireland as soon as has been reported. He is to remain in Ireland until after the coronation, when a great honor—probably a dukedom—will be conferred upon him by the King.

MACEDONIA'S WOES.

Macedonian revolutionists are not concerned in regard to the convenience of Europe, says a Vienna correspondent of the Times. Sarafof, the Macedonian leader, deliberately says it is beyond the power of Austria or Russia to interfere. The correspondent says Sarafof's methods strongly resemble those of Anarchists, as they consist of terrorizing the defenceless population while Turkish troops are carefully avoided. The revolutionists are admirably organized, having even an efficient post service of their own. They have received donations from foreign sympathizers, and are likely to make mischief before being suppressed.

SIBERIAN LINE SCAMPED

The Odessa correspondent of the Times reports an interview with a Russian engineer who has returned from Siberia and Manchuria. The engineer partly explains the action of the Russian authorities in establishing a preliminary close season on the Siberian railway. Official reticence in regard to the matter has been so strict that no Russian newspaper has had news of the road for months. The engineer says while large sections of the road have much to be desired, the trans-Baikal section furnishes a good example of everything that a railway ought not to be. The ballasting for hundreds of miles invites disaster for a train going at any speed over fifteen miles an hour. More than 40 locomotives and many trucks and vans were wrecked on the road at the time of the Chinese troubles, when the Siberian railway received its first practical test. Many portions of the road must be entirely relaid.

London, April 9.—The treatment of the natives by the Belgian authorities and private adventurers on the Congo has long been a crying scandal. The Aborigines Protection Society have now addressed a long letter to Lord Lansdowne in which they set forth some of the evidence as to cruelty that is practised there, and make an appeal for intervention.

The letter states that some of the Belgian trading companies in partnership with the Congo Government are making as much as 250 per cent., and that they hold a monopoly which is an injustice to the traders of other nations. Far greater, however, is the wrong done to the unfortunate natives, who have been, for the most part, robbed of their lands and their produce, and subjected to oppressions far harder than the slavery from which it is professed that they have been delivered.

The following are a few specific charges authenticated with the names of their authors:

Mr. E. J. Glave said,—

Formerly the natives were well treated, but now expeditions have been sent in every direction, forcing natives to make rubber and bring it in to the stations. Up the Ruki river, away to Lake Matumba, the State is perpetrating its fiendish policy in order to obtain profit. We are taking down a hundred slaves, mere children, all taken in unholy wars against the natives. While at the mission station, I saw a gang of prisoners taken along by the State soldiers. War has been waged all through the district of Equator, and thousands of people have been killed and homes destroyed. It was not necessary in the olden times when we white men had no force at all. This forced commerce is depopulating the country.

The Rev. W. M. Morrison said,—

Outside this stockade Mr. Sheppard saw and counted between forty and fifty dead bodies. He saw three with the flesh carved off the bones. It is known that the Zappo-Zaps are cannibals, and the leader of the company acknowledged that his people had eaten the flesh.

Mr. Sheppard saw eighty-one hands cut off and drying over a slow fire. The leader said that these hands were to be taken back to the Chef de Zone at Lulumbourg. He saw other bodies mutilated. The Zappo-Zaps had sixty women prisoners, and the leader said that he had sent sixteen men to the Chef de Zone.

Mr. Edgar Canisius, an American, said,—

I was on a rubber expedition, with Major Lothaire, and during the six weeks it lasted, nine hundred natives were killed, and scores of villages burnt.

And again,—

Knees hacked off, hands severed at the wrists, limbs broken with revolver bullets, rubber collectors tied to stakes and exposed to the burning sun; such are the proceedings amongst others, whereby the Abir has acquired its wealth.

Bob Schaub, Toronto's crack third baseman, has jumped his contract with the Toronto team, and thrown in his lot with the Louisville club, of the outlawed American Baseball Association. The question of the advisability of the Papal mission to Spain was due to the compromise effected by the Queen Regent in nominating the Spanish Ambassador to the Vatican as her representative at the Pope's Jubilee. Under ordinary circumstances, a royal prince would have been appointed, but he would have been obliged also to go to the Quirinal, thus creating a situation full of unpleasant possibilities. His Holiness was much displeased at this step, and decided to be represented at King Alfonso's majority festivities by the Papal Nuncio at Madrid. The matter was smoothed over, however, and it is now understood that Spain will send a grandee with an important retinue to invite the Pope to send a representative to the coronation, who probably will be Cardinal Vannutelli or Cardinal Cretoni, both former Nuncios at Madrid.

TOBACCO, LIQUOR AND DRUGS

Dr. McTaggart's tobacco remedy removes all desire for the weed in a few weeks. A vegetable medicine, and only requires touching the tongue with it occasionally. Price $2.

Simply marvelous are the results from taking his remedy for the liquor, morphine and other drug habits. Is a safe and inexpensive home treatment; no hypodermic injections; no publicity; no loss of time from business, and a certainty of cure.

Curious Bits of News.

A minister in a Kansas town recently adopted a novel scheme for bolstering up the church collection, which had been diminishing. He informed his congregation, just before the plates were passed around, that the members who were in debt were not expected to contribute. The collection that day was double the usual sum.

It really turns out that the population of France has increased three times more rapidly during the past five years than it did during the preceding five, and, consequently, the recent French census is regarded as unexpectedly favorable, notwithstanding that the rate of increase has been extremely low. It is important, if the decline has passed the deepest point of depression.

The oyster trade of England has fallen in ten years from an annual total of fifteen million dollars to two and one-half millions. Sewerage schemes carried out by town boards resulted in flooding the oyster beds with sewage, and several deaths ensued from eating poisonous oysters. The alarm became widespread, and the figures quoted show the disaster brought upon the trade.

It is evident that one of the popular superstitions had no hold on the designer of Uncle Sam's silver twenty-five-cent piece. In the words quarter-dollar are thirteen letters. Thirteen letters compose E Pluribus Unum. In the tail of the eagle are thirteen feathers, and in the shield are thirteen lines. There are thirteen stars and thirteen arrow-heads, while, if you examine the bird through a microscope, you will find thirteen feathers in its wing.

According to the Birmingham "Daily Gazette," an extraordinary character has just passed away in a Carmarthenshire gentleman named Evans. Mr. Evans devoted his life to witnessing hangings, making the acquaintance of executioners, and collecting relics of murderers. In the early days of public hangings he would travel any distance to see a man "turned off." He was so fascinated by the business that on the death of Calcraft he applied for his post. As this was not granted, he set up a gallows in his own house and invited his friends to test the noose.

Exploration, says "Science Siftings," has now revealed relics of Menes, the founder of Egyptian monarchy, fashioned more than sixty-five hundred years ago. Of Zer, the successor to Menes, it is astonishing to find the forearm of his queen still in its wrappings, with four splendid bracelets intact. This brilliant and exquisitely finished group of jewelry is two thousand years older than the jewelry of Dahshur, the oldest up to then known. The arm of the queen had been broken off by the first plunderers, and had lain hidden in a hole in the wall of the tomb.

Two curious cases of the use of the magnet in surgery are attracting some attention. Dr. Garel of Lyons, France, has drawn a nail about two inches long from the bronchial tube of a boy of eighteen months from Buenos Ayres. The nail had been there for some time, causing the child to cough much. Roentgen rays showed the position of it, and an electro-magnet drew it out. Another successful operation of the same kind has been performed by Dr. Piechaud of Bordeaux, on a child of three years. In this case the trachea was opened to get a projection from the pole of the magnet near the nail.

Too Great a Risk.

"I'm going to give up the business," said a life insurance agent with a sigh, whom the Detroit "Free Press" encountered. "I don't care whether they meant it for a joke or not. It's a hard life, and people have no business trying to be funny at my expense.

"I have always prided myself upon my ability to land a man when once I succeeded in getting his attention. But I had a new experience the other day. I was working hard to convince a party that it was his duty to take out some of our insurance upon his life for the protection of his family, and I saw that I had him wavering, when I had to pause for breath, and he broke in with:

"'By the way, how much do you carry on your life?'

"While I, taken unaware by the abruptness of the question, was stammering a reply, he escaped. The incident set me to thinking. I had induced hundreds of men to insure their lives for the benefit of their families, and yet I had never thought far enough to carry any insurance upon my own life. It didn't look consistent, now that I had come to consider the question, and I resolved to remedy it at once. To think is to act with me, and I sat down and filled out an application at once for a good round sum.

"I got the application back to-day marked, 'Refused—occupation too dangerous!' The next paper they get from me will be my resignation!"

When there is disease of the delicate female organism, it is only a question of time until the general health becomes undermined. Nervousness, sleeplessness, loss of appetite and "sinking spells" produce suffering almost indescribable. There can be no restoration of the general health until the local health of the womanly organism is re-established.

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription establishes regularity, dries offensive drains, heals inflammation and ulceration and cures female weakness. It encourages the appetite, tranquilizes the nerves and induces refreshing sleep.

"You would be surprised if you could have seen me when I commenced taking Dr. Pierce's medicine and could see me now," writes Mrs. Isaac S. Harris, of Gayville, Yankton Co., So. Dakota. "I had no appetite, was completely run down. Have had stomach trouble for years and was so nervous I could not sleep. We have spent a lot of money doctoring, but there was not one thing that I took that did me any good, except for a short time; till I commenced taking Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription and 'Golden Medical Discovery.' In three days after I commenced taking his medicines I could see a change for the better, and from that time I have steadily been getting better. Can walk or ride to any place I want to, and I feel like a new person. Since taking Dr. Pierce's medicines I can sleep all night and never get up tired in the morning; can eat anything and it don't hurt me."

Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets cure biliousness and sick headache.

There was a mass meeting the other day of the residents of Cleator Moor, a district of London, in favor of a Sunday delivery of letters for the district. One of the speakers opposed to the measure was the vicar of the parish, who said: "I am here in the name of God Almighty, and those who oppose me oppose Him." This statement seemed to settle the question, for a resolution in favor of Sunday delivery was at once carried by an overwhelming majority.

A man who was bicycling in southern France was pushing his machine up a steep hill, when he overtook a peasant with a donkey cart. The patient beast was making but little progress, although it was doing its best.

The benevolent cyclist, putting his left hand against the back of the cart and guiding his machine with the other hand, pushed so hard that the donkey, taking fresh courage, pulled his load successfully up to the top.

When the summit was reached the peasant burst into thanks to his benefactor.

Miss Barrington, however, nothing daunted, took her leap, and came down with a thud on the bare stage. The situation struck a member of the "gods," for a stentorian voice called out: [illegible]

DAISY GORDON'S FOLLY

—OR—

The World Lost for Love's Sake

By Laura Jean Libbey

Author of The Crime of Hallow-E'en, The Flirtations of a Beauty, Willful Gaynell, Little Leafy, Only a Mechanic's Daughter

"Wouldn't next week or the week after do?" he asked slowly.

She shook her golden curls.

"If you love me, take me away within the hour, Aleck," she moaned.

"Do not put it upon that basis—my love for you, Daisy," he said quietly. "You know I love you as man never loved woman before—with all my heart and soul—but really, dear, this is a very foolish whim. If I should indulge it, it would be—it a great loss. Say to yourself Aleck knows best; he will stay a fortnight longer, then he will take me away anywhere I wish to go. I do not like to fill this pretty little curly head up with business affairs. If there is one thing I abhor in this world more than another, it is a hard, practical business woman. I should much prefer that you knew nothing about it; but I must tell you this much: if I went, it would be at a great loss just now.

"All these pretty things you are, like the rest of your charming sex, so very fond of, cost money, and it is a husband's affair to provide it. You would not like me to lose a large amount. I am interested in a big speculation here, and a few days will determine how the matter will terminate. Most of the parties interested stop here, so you see, my darling, it would be very unwise to yield to your whim in this one instance—don't you think so?"

She slipped from his arms, and knelt at his feet, clasping her little white hands.

"It is my prayer, Aleck, if you love me, to take me away," she moaned piteously. "If you refuse, you will remember through the long after years of bitter pain this hour in which I knelt at your feet, praying you, pleading with you by the love you bear me to come away."

"If you could advance one reason for it, Daisy, I would not object," he said distressedly; "but really, my darling, I fear that I must refuse; we cannot go for at least a week—or, possibly, ten days."

No moan, no cry fell from the white lips.

Daisy threw up her hands in the bitterest despair, and fell at his feet in a deep swoon.

CHAPTER XIII.

Married Once—Married Forever.

In the greatest consternation, Aleck sprung forward and raised the slight figure in his arms, ringing the bell hastily for Janet.

"Your mistress is very ill," he said. "I have seen it for some little time past; a doctor must be sent for at once."

When Dr. Morgan came, he looked earnestly at his beautiful patient for some time, then turned suddenly to Aleck.

"This is not a common case," he said. "I can discover no bodily ailment here; rather a mind diseased. Has she had any recent shock, any great trouble?"

"No," replied Aleck, in astonishment. "I assure you she has never had one care in her young life; on the contrary, she has been particularly free from it."

"I cannot be mistaken," said the doctor; "I have seen too many such cases, but none worse than this. There has been silent brooding here, and a stress on the heart and mind, which before now has led to insanity.

"But you must not let this affect you too deeply," he added, seeing the handsome young husband turn pale to the lips. "Change of scene and bright company will work wonders. It is better than all the medicine I could give her."

Long after he took his departure, Aleck pondered over the matter.

Daisy, his darling, grieving over some secret trouble which he did not share! Why the idea was simply preposterous. Suddenly the thought came to him that perhaps it was his refusal to take her away which affected her so.

Let the speculation and the loss which would ensue go; what was all the money in the world to him compared to Daisy? When she awakened from the deep sleep which the potion the doctor had given her had caused, he would tell her, that he would take her away at once.

Bidding her maid call him when she awakened, he quitted the room.

Janet looked long and earnestly at the white face lying so still and white against the pillow.

"The doctor is right," she muttered; "my lady is guarding some deep secret. If I could but find out what it is, my fortune would be made. She is so rich and I am so poor. Why shouldn't she pay me well to keep it? If I could but find it out! I will! I will watch her day and night. I shall——"

The sentence never was finished. Daisy opened her blue eyes with a low moan.

Then she sprung from the couch.

"Leave me—leave me to myself, Janet," she cried, nervously. "If I want you, I will ring for you."

"But Mr. Hamilton, ma'am; I was to tell him when you awoke. We did not think it would be so soon."

"Do not call him yet. I—I could not bear it," she muttered under her breath, "not for an hour at least; do you understand me?"

"Certainly, ma'am," answered the maid. "Mr. Hamilton must not be called for an hour yet; you wish to be alone by yourself."

"I am going out," said Daisy, "my—my husband must not know it; he might think me too weak and object."

"Let me go with you my lady," said Janet. "I am very discreet; you may trust me."

Daisy turned a pair of startled eyes upon her. What did the girl know?—what did she suspect?

Janet's stolid face did not betray her thoughts.

"I will go alone," she said nervously, dismissing the girl with a wave of her little jeweled hand.

"I must find out for myself whether Harold St. John could claim me or not, if I do not wish to go," she sobbed, as she hurried to the wardrobe and took down a long dark cloak and a thick veil.

Donning these and drawing the veil down closely over her face, she swiftly quitted the room, taking the precaution to lock the door after her.

Walking a little distance down the street, Daisy hailed a passing cab.

"Take me to the office of one of the best lawyers," she said, taking her seat in the vehicle.

She was quite unconscious of how far she came or how time was passing.

To be Continued.

Lord Chas. Beresford

Rear-Admiral Lord Charles Beresford, who has been on duty in the Mediterranean for some time, is without doubt the most popular man in the British navy. He has recently returned to England, and the newspapers are conjecturing whether he will re-enter Parliament or accept a higher post in the navy. His ability is not estimated to be inferior to his popularity, and there is probably no post associated with the navy for which he would be regarded as unequal. He represents, above all things, the gospel of efficiency, which is being preached just now, and with ample need, judging from the remount scandal, and if in Parliament would do much to insure the maintenance of the navy at the highest practicable standard. The popular sailor celebrated his 56th birthday on February 10th.

A Defence of Canada.

Here is a Scottish newspaper, The Daily Journal of Aberdeen, with a really eloquent defence of Canada against Kipling's implied suggestion that snow plays a part in our daily life.

"The title of 'Our Lady of the Snows,'" says the Scottish writer, "bestowed on Canada in a haphazard sort of manner by Rudyard Kipling, is not at all a happy one, as it applies to a season only. I have seen the grapes hanging in luxuriant bunches to the vines in a Quebec garden, and the fields of tomatoes grow crimson in the warm sunshine; I have lingered in the golden wheatfields in the evening, and listened to the myriad sounds of the cricket and grasshopper; I have walked amid the cedar trees in an Ontario swamp when the sunset glow had faded, and watched the fireflies darting to and fro like shooting stars; and I have watched the tiny humming-bird, with plumage that rivalled the gaily-painted butterflies, contesting with the bee for the honey that lay within the sweet-smelling flowers! Scenes like these are not associated with a land of never-ending winter. Consequently there can be no greater mistake than to imagine, as too many people do, that Canada is a semi-Arctic country out of which little good can come. And yet, what do we find? According to the returns of the Board of Trade fully 65,000 to 75,000 Britishers went to live in the United States during the past year, while only 12,000 or 13,000 went to Canada. There is no reason to doubt that if the resources and natural wealth of the Dominion of Canada were more generally known in this country, we would soon hear the last of the term "American" as applied to Canadian products, and United States producers would no longer receive the credit for Canadian goods, in many cases superior to their own. Those who guide the destinies of the Dominion think that the Stars and Stripes have overshadowed the Maple Leaf long enough. Every true Briton will be of the same opinion."

Where He Belonged.

The visit of Prince Henry of Prussia to the United States is naturally causing the telling over of some of the countless anecdotes of which the aged Kaiser Wilhelm, grandfather of Emperor Wilhelm and his brother, was the central figure. The following is one of the prettiest I have seen:—

In his later years the aged Kaiser took great pleasure in visiting the schools and catechizing the children. At one time while in the City of Ems he visited an orphan school that was in the city, and under Government patronage.

After listening for an hour or more to the recitations of several of the classes, the Kaiser called to the front a bright, golden-haired little girl seven or eight years of age, and, lifting her into his lap, said to her:

"Now, then, my little fraulein, let me see if you can answer me three hard questions." And taking an orange out of his pocket he held it up. "To what kingdom does this belong?" he asked.

The little girl hesitated a moment and then said timidly: "To the vegetable kingdom."

"Right, my little fraulein," said the Kaiser. "And, now, to what kingdom does this belong?" The Kaiser drew a gold-piece out of his pocket and placed it beside the orange.

More confident this time, the little girl replied: "To the mineral kingdom."

"Better and better," said the Kaiser. "Now, look at me and tell me to what kingdom do I belong."

The little girl was confused. Dare she say "the animal kingdom"? All the teachers and pupils looked at her with breathless expectancy. But in a moment she glanced up brightly into the face of the kind old Kaiser, and said: "To the kingdom of heaven."

This unexpected answer drew tears from the eyes of the Kaiser. "Yes, yes, my child," said he, "I trust that I do belong to the kingdom of heaven; and the day is not far distant when I shall go there, my little fraulein."

Then, kissing the little girl, he presented her with the gold piece and the orange, and brought his visit to a close.

A Slanderer of the British.

The Berlin correspondent of The Standard says that further evidence has come to light of the methods employed to stir up anti-British feeling in Germany. The history of the man Kaulitz or Farlow, who at the outbreak of the Boer war founded the "London cable correspondence" for supplying the continental press with alleged war news, which was "made in London," has been traced by The Kolnische Zeitung. The Kolnische quotes from a provincial paper a list of this man's misdeeds. He was born at Brunswick, became a Social Democrat at Leipzic in the seventies, and was afterwards, it is said, sentenced to two and a half years' imprisonment for inciting the workmen in the Saar district by articles in his paper. Later on he became Johann Most's partner in London and was on the staff of his paper. After giving a few further facts about the man's career The Kolnische says:—"This honorable gentleman has now been unmasked, but, unfortunately, too late, for the lies about the atrocities of English Lancers at Elandslaagte, outrages on helpless Boer women and girls, etc., continue to be freely circulated, and whoever attempts to disprove them is suspected and insulted for being an English hireling."

The Veal Age.

This is assuredly the Veal Age in literature. People no longer ask about an author, How old is he? but How young is he—or she, as is usually the case. Of the writers on the staff of Josh, Gosh & Co. 55 per cent. are under the age of twenty-one, and 25 per cent. are under sixteen years. Sixty-eight per cent. of these write historical romances and 25 per cent. write in the [illegible] style.—Book Buyer.

Late Sidney Cooper, R.A.

An interesting figure in the art world passed away a few days ago in England, when Sidney Cooper, R. A., died at the age of 99. He worked at his profession until almost the last, and had a picture in the Royal Academy last year, as he had had each year since 1845, when he became A. R. A. His record in this respect is without a precedent, nor is it likely to be equalled for many a generation. Mr. Cooper was born September 26, 1803. A few years ago he was so repeatedly asked the question to what he attributed his long life and splendid vigor that he jotted down the following salient points of his life and habits:

"I was born at Canterbury in 1803 during the great Imperial war, which lasted till I was twelve years of age. All provisions were very dear and my early life was spent on very plain food. So soon as I was able I got to hard work for little pay.

"I took every opportunity to draw and sketch from Nature; but as I could not get instruction this caused me to walk much daily. I have been a great walker. At twenty years of age I was able to learn drawing at county schools, which gave me a great number of miles to walk.

"I was never ill, except with infant maladies. At thirty I commenced to try to paint. After I came to settle in London my living was of a very careful kind. I soon became known and received many commissions for my work, which became very popular.

"Then came a period of bad health from the overstrain of London life, and I feared I should become a poor invalid. So I went back to the country, bought some land and built this house (Vernon Holme, near Canterbury) in 1848. I soon felt the change for the better.

"I bought a farm, which required much looking after, and I commenced to walk again. This I continued to do; and now, in my ninety-sixth year, I can paint four or five hours a day and walk slowly a mile daily in fine weather or take a carriage drive if not fine.

"I rise at 7 o'clock, go into my study, set my palette, take my breakfast at 8, then my Bible, then I paint till 12.30. Then lunch and Bible and paint till 3 o'clock. This is my day's work and then I take my walk, write letters and dine at 6 o'clock.

"I take no wine, but a very little whiskey and cold water. Of course I have the infirmities of old age, but now enjoy the cheerful effects of a temperate life.

"I think moderate smoking conducive to sleep, if in the evening; but to smoke all day, as I know some do, is not wise.

"I must tell you that I attribute my long life to the merciful care of God's Providence, for He was the Father of the fatherless boy and has preserved him through all his trials and difficulties, prosperities, sunshine and shadow."

Mr. Cooper was no doubt the oldest member of his profession in the world at the time of his death, but he was even then junior to a Devonshire preacher, who is in his hundredth year. This is Mr. Robert C. Chapman of Barnstaple, and from the excellent health he enjoys at present there is every prospect of his going well into the second century.

Primarily a barrister, he gave up his profession when still in the twenties, in order to devote himself to religious work. For over seventy years he has worked in Barnstaple, and the older he gets the more popular he becomes with the members of the Plymouth Brethren community, to which he belongs. A man of scholarly attainments, he is master of half a dozen languages and author of many Biblical works. Mr. Chapman is known among the Nonconformist churches the world over. He still preaches, though only occasionally, as he finds it takes rather too much out of him, but whenever he does occupy the pulpit there is always a large congregation.

Advertising Canada.

Certainly, if Canada is not well advertised now in Great Britain, it is no longer the fault of the British press. It is difficult to pick up an English newspaper to-day without finding it containing somewhere or other a reference to Canada's resources or to some phase or other of life in the Dominion. Moreover, there need no longer be any feeling that the attention of the British is directed by their newspapers to Australia or New Zealand rather than to Canada; all that has changed during the last few years. South Africa necessarily occupies a sad prominence, but from a point of view altogether different from that from which Canada is seen. The London press has been paying much attention to the Deputy Minister of the Interior, Mr. Smart, during his visit to Great Britain, and numerous interviews and articles that must prove of great value to this country have appeared in the columns of the big metropolitan dailies. In the provincial press Canada is almost equally to the front. In the shape of letters from correspondents, who are sometimes residents of Canada, sometimes Englishmen who have visited Canada, or by means of articles based on the excellent literature emanating from the Immigration Department, Canada is being continually kept in the minds of the people of Great Britain.

Temperance Work in London.

In connection with the efforts to increase the growth of temperance in the Province of Ontario it is interesting to notice the expensive temperance work that the London County Council is at present carrying out, but it is not designated as such, nor is the general public aware of the fact. Yet within the last three years the London County Council has devoted more than $1,250,000 to the practical work of temperance. It is one of the consequences of the extensive improvements being made in London at present. When acquiring property for the necessary widening of different streets, many public houses, with licenses and good will, come into the possession of the Council. These properties are very valuable, but the Council, instead of renewing them for premises in the neighborhood, is deliberately giving them up, seeing, at the same time, that no new licenses for these localities are issued. In this way the number of public houses in London has been diminished by 168, which were valued at $1,[illegible]

UNCHARITY.

SERMON BY
GEORGE H. HEPWORTH.

And to godliness, brotherly kindness; and to brotherly kindness, charity.—II. Peter, i., 7.

There is one form of vice which is to me especially offensive and repellant, namely, habitual uncharity in the judgment of others. It is twice cursed, for it curseth him who gratifies his morbid appetite and him who is unconsciously the victim of it.

It is always safe to be generous in criticism, and seldom safe to be severe. If the Christ's rule, the "measure you mete, it shall be measured to you again," should be literally enforced, many a man and woman would be wrecked by the consequences. If it is always possible to say something kind it is well to be in the frame of mind to do it. The middle course is to be silent unless there is a good word to say, and the heroic course is to rebuke the harsh and unnecessary criticism.

Many a life has been seriously wounded, many a heart well-nigh broken by thoughtless talk which perhaps had no foundation in fact, or was based on facts misunderstood. It is so much better to be sweet than sour. The juicy plum filled with sunshine hangs on the branches in abundance, and so does the lemon, and it is a more gracious taste which chooses the plum and leaves the lemon for others to pluck. Life contains so many disagreeable things that if we can avoid coming into contact with any one of them we do ourselves a distinct benefit. A smile helps the world more than a frown, and the good nature which ignores the unpleasant and dwells only on the agreeable is a Christian virtue, which is as charming as it is rare.

The clear injunction of religion is to find the good in our neighbors and not to magnify their failings. We may laugh at their follies or look with scorn on their weaknesses, but who knows what we ourselves would do under like circumstances? We are not so strong that we can thank God, as the poor Pharisee did, that we are not like other men. If we are really strong the best way to show our strength is to help those who have fallen by the way rather than spread the news of their failure, as though we stood on a higher and safer level. True religion, the only kind worth having, not only prays that "from all uncharitableness, good Lord, deliver us," but co-operates with the Lord in the accomplishment of the task.

A legend is told of Jesus which illustrates my point. He was standing in a group who were looking at a dead dog. Each spectator had something hard and cruel on his lips, but at last a gentle voice was heard, saying, "He had very white teeth!" It was perhaps the only thing that could be said of a favorable nature, and it was the only thing He cared to say. It was a rebuke not to be easily forgotten, and the men in the group silently stole away, wondering at themselves and at Him.

You deceive yourself if you think you are religious and still indulge in uncharity. I would rather be poor Abou Ben Adhem, who cared nothing for Christ, but wanted to be classed as one "who loves his fellow-men," than so wretched a Christian that he could cherish a secret delight in the faults of others. Religion is either the most practical and useful thing in the world, or it counts for nothing—the theory of a day, to be abandoned on the morrow. And it proves its mettle when it demands a generous and charitable judgment, and will accept no excuse if you have it not. There never yet was human soul so debased that the angels could not kindle a divine and purging flame in it. In the basest creature that lives there are possibilities of excellence which cannot be calculated, and your word of censure, your scorn and disdain, your repetition of an evil rumor may quench that flame in its feeble beginnings.

There is but one wholesome rule to follow. It is the dictate of honor and of the consciousness that even you need to be judged kindly. It is never to spread an injurious story, for your own sake, for his sake, for the sake of all concerned. No bitterness of spirit and no bitterness of criticism. Look for the good and speak of it freely, but be blind to the faults of others as you would have them blind to yours. The Christ loved justice, but He was always merciful. So you may love the truth, but if you cannot help, see to it that you do not hurt. A silent tongue sometimes shows a consecrated heart.

Northern Pines.

I passed where the pines for Christmas
Stood thick in the crowded street,
Where the groves of dream and silence
Were walked by feverish feet.

And far through the rain and street cries
My home-sick heart went forth
To its pine-clad hills of childhood,
To its dark and tender North.

And I saw the gleaming pine lands,
And I thrilled to the norland cold,
Where the sunset fell in silence
On the hills of gloom and gold.

And the dusk, still woods lay round me,
And I knew that the patient eyes
Of my North as a child's were tender,
As a sorrowing mother's, wise.

The caller had a grievance.

"That communication I sent you yesterday," he said, "was signed 'More Anon' as plainly as the words could be written. You printed it in your paper this morning 'Omega.'"

"I know it," replied the editor. "We didn't intend there should be any more anon."

Cancer Attacks the Middle-Aged

Persons approaching the meridian of life should beware of little lumps and growths.

It is a well-known fact that any physician will substantiate, that there is a greater percentage of Cancer among those of midlife than at any other age.

Persons at this time of life would do well to regard with suspicion any lumps or growths on their bodies. Should these prove malignant or of a cancerous nature, they can be removed completely, without operation, by the use of our painless home treatment.

It is the most successful remedy for the cure of cancers and tumors and has cured numbers of people here in Canada and saved them from the torture of the surgeon's knife or the painful plaster.

THE COCKING MAIN

The Parties in Lindsay Found Guilty and Heavily Fined

The trial of those engaged in the Lindsay cocking main has been concluded and the defendants have been adjudged guilty. As it was a first offence, a fine was imposed. It is said that other prosecutions will follow, as Chief Nevison is determined to put a stop to this kind of sport (!)

Chief Roszel informed the Times yesterday that he is gathering information against local owners of Birds who make a practice of attending cocking mains, and intends to begin proceedings against them.

Becoming Obsolete

"Formal calls," said a society woman to the Times yesterday, "are becoming obsolete. I mean the running in of an afternoon, chatting for five or ten minutes, leaving your cards, rushing off to the next place on your list, and then expecting these women to do the same thing to you, and praying you may be out when they call. That sort of thing is growing beautifully less, and I think the telephone is largely responsible for it. I make nearly all my calls now over the phone. It is so much more comfortable, and saves such a lot of time and bother. I just sit down in my own home and call up Mrs. Jones in her home. I owe her a call. If she is in she comes to the phone, and, although I may have nothing in particular to talk to her about, we chatter away for several minutes, and before I ring off I impress upon her the fact that I am returning her call and that she needn't expect me to come in person. She laughs and thinks it's all right, and then pays some of the calls she owes in the same way. It really does away with a great nuisance."

ILLICIT BASS FISHING.

Bass Being Brought to Peterborough in Wagon Loads

At the annual meeting of the Stony Lake Cottager's Association last evening, while the members were discussing the permanent hatchery question, Mr. D. W. Dumble made a statement that is full of significance.

"I will tell you, gentlemen" said he, "I have the knowledge on pretty good and reliable authority that bass are brought to this town by the wagon-load, having been fleetly caught, and brought here 'through the back door' as it were; that they are bought and sold by men who make a business of it."

"What are our fishery inspectors good for?" inquired a member.

"That's a matter on which a great deal could be said," answered Mr. Dumble.

"Why should we not secure the services of a detective on our own behalf?" was asked.

The matter was allowed to drop.

"ON THE SLY"

Patients Drink Contrary to Doctors' Orders Three Months For Field

Bad food habits hurt the habitue and sometimes affect others. A mother was in such a miserable condition from coffee drinking that when her baby was born—but let her tell her own tale.

"I steadily grew worse. When baby was born it was a skeleton of mere bones, and so weak and puny that its little life soon flickered out. I had been suffering for several years with stomach trouble and nervous diseases, the doctor said 'brought on by coffee.'

At times I would swell up until I could hardly breathe, but I poohed when the doctor told me coffee was the cause of it all. Why, I had used coffee for years without seeing that it did me any harm, so the silly idea of a fogy doctor was not going to make me give up my favorite beverage, and I kept on using it on the sly unknown to him, while he gave me every sort of tonic and pills to attempt to cure me and get my nerves in a healthy condition.

After baby's death I was sick in bed and the doctor insisted on keeping coffee away from me. He put me on Postum Food Coffee and Grape-Nuts. I shall never forget how I relished the first cup of fragrant, black Postum and how good the Grape-Nuts with cream tasted, and, as if by magic, I began to sleep all night for the first time in months.

Slowly I began to gain in strength and flesh, and my mind began to clear up. My stomach gave me no pain, and the doctor was greatly surprised at the change caused by the food and drink and pleasantly named them the 'magic nerve restorers,' for he says they built up my nerves and strength as nothing else on earth could.

It seems to me I am twice as large as I used to be, but it is good, healthy tissue. I have been made a well woman by Postum Food Coffee and Grape-Nuts." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

STONY LAKE COTTAGERS

HELD THEIR ANNUAL MEETING LAST NIGHT.

Matters of Importance Discussed—Officers for the Current Year Elected — The Annual Fee Increased

The annual meeting of the Stony Lake Cottagers' Association was held in the board-room of the Toronto Loan & Savings Co. offices last night.

There were present Messrs. B. Shortly, president, in the chair, J. J. McBain, R. McWhinnie, Geo. Cochrane, A. C. McCallum, R. B. Rogers, D. W. Dumble, P.M., E. B. Edwards, J. D. Collins, R. J. Winch, R. F. McWilliams, and others.

The minutes of the annual meeting of 1901, were read by Secretary-Treasurer McWilliams, and were confirmed.

The election of officers for the current year was then proceeded with. President Shortly thanked the members for the zealous and cordial support they had given him during his two years tenure of office. He held that it was only right that the honors should go around, and he asked to be relieved from office this year, that others might have an opportunity to do what they can for the society.

The society showed a disposition to retain Mr. Shortly's services, but he resolutely declined to accept. The offices were then filled as follows, all the election being unanimous:

President,—Mr. George Cochran.

1st Vice-Pres.—Mr. R. B. Rogers, Peterborough.

2nd Vice-Pres.—Mr. H. G. Buck, Norwood.

3rd Vice-Pres.—Mr. Percy Strickland, Lakefield.

Secy-Treas.—Prof. Brock, Toronto.

Asst. Sec.-Treas.—W. G. Morrow, Peterborough.

Executive Committee—The officers of the society, with the chairman of the Sunday, the Music, and the Regatta Committees.

Regatta Committee—Messrs. W. A. Sanderson, chairman; O. B. McAllister, B. Shortly, Jas. Davidson and Tait.

Sunday Committee — Sheriff Hall, chairman; Messrs. Robinson, E. B. Edwards, D. W. Dumble, Colville, Sutherland and J. D. Collins.

Music Committee — Messrs. John Crane, chairman; A. C. McCallum, S. Henderson, A. L. Davis, W. Graham and E. Dawson. The officers of the society are also ex-officio members of each committee.

GENERAL BUSINESS.

Mr. J. W. Flavelle, Toronto, wrote congratulating the members upon their success in encouraging the growth of timber on the islands in Stony Lake. He asked if the society could not go further, and undertake to plant pines on the islands. He would be pleased, he wrote, to be given an opportunity to contribute towards a fund to cover the cost of the undertaking, should the society decide to call for subscriptions.

D. W. Dumble said, referring to the subject, that it would be an exceedingly difficult undertaking, to grow young pine trees on the islands. Young pines, transplanted, are very easily broken by the wind. He recommended the mountain ash as a substitute for the pine.

On motion of Mr. Dumble, it was resolved that all owners of islands be encouraged to plant trees on their property, to the greatest possible extent.

Considerable discussion took place regarding the action to be taken by the society with regard to the wharf at Juniper Island.

D. W. Dumble moved that the society is under no obligation to acquire ownership of the wharf, and that no action be taken towards that end, but that $15, which the society has already voted towards the cost of building the wharf, be given to Mr. Robinson.—Carried.

Mr. G. M. Roger suggested that as the wharf is for the general accommodation of the public, and as Mr. Robinson, storekeeper there, derives a peculiar and particular benefit from the wharf, that he be requested to pay half the cost of maintaining the wharf, and the islanders pay the other half. He made a motion to that effect, with the proviso that Mr. Robinson be at the expense of maintaining it in proper condition.

Mr. Dumble objected to this. "How much did you get in fees from the islanders last year?" he asked the Sec.-Treasurer.

"Not very much," was the answer.

"And you propose to give away more money than you took in last year, for the convenience of people who won't pay you a dollar," said Mr. Dumble, sarcastically.

Mr. Sanderson thought it would be well to give Mr. Robinson a bonus yearly for maintaining the wharf. This it was decided to do, and the sum amount of the bonus was fixed at $5.00.

It was decided to hold the annual regatta on Peterborough Civic holiday, and the preceding day, as the number of events is too great to be carried out on one day.

Mr. McWilliams moved to hold the annual meeting on the evening after the regatta, in the pavilion. His idea was to secure a more representative attendance, so as to give the islanders from other centres a voice in the affairs, as was only right and just.

The motion was withdrawn as it was stated that this had been done in former years, but that the result was unsatisfactory.

RAISED THE FEE.

It was unanimously agreed to increase the annual membership fee to $1.00 per year. A proposition to levy a small fee on young men who do not own property among the lakes, but who spend considerable time there every summer, met with such pronounced opposition, that it was withdrawn.

Messrs. R. B. Rogers and A. C. McCallum were appointed a committee to select a design and colors, for a badge, that will be distinctively representative of the society.

Mr. Dumble notified the members that Hon. Provincial Secretary Stratton had written him, stating that the society can have a supply of bass for the lakes this year. Mr. Dumble said that it cost $19 last year for this purpose.

Mr. Rogers said this was only touching the fringe of the question. The society ought to take steps towards securing a permanent hatchery. He was convinced that the government would assist. They ought to breed not only bass, but maskinonge. There is no doubt, he said, that the lakes are very nearly depleted of fish.

A discussion, regarding the causes of the comparative scarcity of bass in the waters of the lakes, followed.

Mr. B. Shortly (chairman), with Messrs. Rogers and Dumble, were named a committee to take up the hatchery question, and to take steps towards the securing of a permanent place for the propagation of fish.

Mr. Kincaid informed those present that he was prepared to give them a sail to the lakes to inspect the cottages, etc., provided they would select a convenient date. It was agreed to accept the invitation, but the selection of a date was deferred for the present.

FOUND DEAD IN HIS BED.

AT THE ORIENTAL HOTEL ON THURSDAY MORNING.

Harry L. Boyd, a Traveller, Representing Chase and Company, of Boston, Expired After Retiring to His Room — Found Lying Face Downward—

Among the travellers who arrived in town at 6 p.m. on Wednesday was Mr. Harry L. Boyd, representing Chase and Company, confectioners, of Boston, Mass. He went to the Oriental Hotel where he engaged a room for the night. Before retiring he asked the clerk in the office to have him called in the morning at eight o'clock, and it was by several ineffectual attempts to waken him that the proprietor of the house became uneasy and had one of the clerks look into the room through the fan light over the door. On doing so, Mr. Boyd was seen lying across the bed. He had not removed any of his clothing as it is thought that after entering the room the night before that he was overcome with a weak feeling, and threw himself on the bed. On gaining an entrance to the room an attempt was made to arouse him again but with no effect as it was found that life was extinct. Medical aid was at once called and in a few minutes Drs. Gray and McCullough arrived, and after examing the body, found that he had been dead for some hours. As the deceased is a stranger in town it is not known whether he was subject to weakness of the heart or not. The cause of death was given as suffocation.

The firm he represented was at once communicated with and the remains taken to Mr. D. Belleghem's undertaking rooms to await instructions.
rooms to await instructions. At a late hour last night no message had been received from the relatives of the deceased, although a message was received from his employers stating that instructions would be sent as to the disposal of the remains.

THE CHILDREN, HEAVEN BLESS THEM

Are They Frail, Restless and Nervous?

Will Make Them Vigorous, Healthy Bright and Happy

As a rule, parents are to blame if their children are puny, weak, nervous and irritable. The little ones may be well clothed and fed, yet still be sadly neglected from a physical point of view.

It should be remembered that the children inherit many of the troubles that parents suffer from. Thousands of little ones are subjects of nerve troubles, a condition inherited from father or mother. This nervous condition begets irritableness, bad temper, headache, indigestion and stomach derangements. Such children need the best and most intelligent care, or they will grow up in misery and disease.

Give the little ones Paine's Celery Compound for the next few weeks, and note well its fortifying affect on the nervous system; watch the growth in muscle and flesh.

Thousands of thankful letters have been received from glad fathers and mothers who have had their dear ones perfectly restored to health and strength by Paine's Celery Compound.

Mr. Robert D. Templeton, Winnipeg, Man., says: "I take great pleasure in recommending your Paine's Celery Compound for all children's troubles. Our little girl was very sick a short time ago, and we had to call in a doctor, who said he could not prescribe anything better than your Compound."

HORSES FOR THE ARMY

Suitable Horses will be Purchased in Town by Mr. Robert Beith, M.P.

Mr. J. Harris McClellan has just returned from an extensive business trip to a number of centres in Ontario. During his trip he met with Mr Robert Beith M.P., who is purchasing horses suitable for war purposes, for the Imperial authorities. Mr. Beith stated he would visit Peterborough for the purpose of buying up any suitable horses that are offered for sale. The date has not yet been decided on, but notice will be given in the course of a few days.

A Breakfast Dish After Your Own Heart

Thousands are now enjoying what they long wished for; the same enjoyment and luxury may be yours every morning—a breakfast after your own heart.

A breakfast dish after your own heart means physical and mental benefits. The true breakfast dish guaranteeing the blessings of health is Malt Breakfast Food, delicious, appetizing, easily digested, strengthening and invigorating.

Malt Breakfast Food has a direct influence on the brain as well as the body. While it keeps the blood pure and at normal temperature, it also acts as a brain nutriment, imparting clearness and power.

Malt Breakfast Food which has so quickly captured the hearts and palates of young and old as a breakfast food, is as far ahead of all the ordinary grain foods of the day as the diamond is superior to cheap glass. Try a package; your grocer sells it.

POLICE COURT NEWS

Albert Field was convicted in the police court yesterday morning of stealing a wagon and harness from livery stable keeper Wolstenholm in November last. He was sentenced to the county jail for three months. Field broke down utterly when taken to the cells after sentence had been passed. He expressed his sorrow for having acted in such a dishonest manner, and said that Mr. Wolstenholm had always treated him generously, and had given him every chance to do what was right.

The Mystery Still Unsolved

A few months ago the citizens of the town and county were shocked by the report received from Otonabee that an old man had been found drowned in a well. At first it was thought that the victim was John Hooper, but "Silent John" turned up in Ashburnham, alive and well. It was then thought that the deceased was an old man, named Jimmy Dunlavey, who lived with different farmers in Otonabee, but it seems not. The Times has received reliable information to the effect that Dunlavey was seen in town yesterday. If this is true, then who was the man that was found drowned in the well?

Precautions in Brussels and Other Places to Check Progress of Rioting Socialists

STRIKERS AND GENDARMES ARE FIGHTING.

Seven Thousand Men Hurled Stones and Were Silenced with Revolvers--Guards with Loaded Rifles

Brussels, April 11. — Troops were called out at Liege yesterday, to quell the rioting Socialists whom the police had been unable to deal with. Serious conflicts took place at Rue Stevens, where 100 shots were exchanged.

A semblance of order was restored among the rioters early this morning. The police, who had borne the brunt of the fighting, were strongly reinforced by gendarmes and civic guards with loaded rifles. Orders were issued to use all the force necessary to drive the mob out of the Maison du Peuple. Just as the order was about to be executed the chiefs of the Socialists offered to evacuate the building quietly. Estimates as to the number wounded during the riots vary from forty to one hundred, but scores of injured were carried off and hidden by friends. A large number of rioters were arrested and are still detained.

The burgomasters of Brussels and suburban municipalities have proclaimed that meetings of more than ten persons are prohibited, and that anyone found carrying a revolver shall be liable to six months' imprisonment.

BRISTLING WITH BAYONETS.

All centres of agitation are bristling to-day with bayonets. Squads of cavalry are continually patrolling the streets, and guarding the shops, which were threatened with plundering by the rioters.

A manifesto signed by the general council of the labor party has been widely posted. It demands a revision of the constitution, and universal suffrage.

Telegrams from the country districts indicate the widespread character of the movement which threatens to culminate in a grand coup next week during the Reform debate in Parliament. A thousand demonstrators caused great disturbances at St. Nicholas last night, until routed by repeated charges of the gendarmes. At La Louviere 6,000 men ceased work, forcing the workers in the large industrial establishments at La Croyere and Haine, St.Pierre, to join them. The strikers threaten to burn all factories where the workers refuse to quit. Strong detachments of cavalry are now patrolling the district in order to protect the factories. A telegram from Mons says work still continues in the Borinage district, but a strike and disorders are threatening. Troops have been sent to the district to cope with possible rioting.

MORE TROOPS ARRIVING

Brussels, April 11.—Additional regiments of cavalry, infantry and engineers arrived here this morning; a battalion is held in readiness for action at each of the barracks. All the troops are supplied with two packets of ball cartridges, and two packets of so-called strike cartridges.

Gendarmes and civic guards are assembling at their headquarters in large numbers, and rigorous instructions have been issued for the instant repression of outbreaks in their incipiency.

Four regiments of cavalry and infantry arrived to-day at Charleroi. Infantry has been sent to Douvain, a city fifteen miles east of Brussels, and Vilvoorden, a town six miles northeast of Brussels, and squadrons of Chasseurs have been distributed in the Midlands.

Sharp fighting between strikers and gendarmes occurred this morning at Bracquegnies, near Charleroi. Several thousand strikers attacked and stoned a body of gendarmes, who retaliated by firing their revolvers. A sharp fusilade followed, and the gendarmes were compelled to retreat. A squadron of lancers, however, galloped up and charged and dispersed the mob.

Township Valuators

Uxbridge Township is adopting a new regulation in reference to sheep cases, by appointing valuators. Heretofore, any neighbour could value a dead or injured sheep and appear as a witness when the owner applied to Council for compensation. The valuing will now be left to being appointed for the seven divisions of the township.

DEFEAT OF CHINESE REBELS

Imperial Troops in Hot Pursuit of the Band in Qwang-he

Special to The Times.

Washington, April 12.—The following telegram in regard to the insurrection in Southern China was received by the State Department to-day from McWade, United States Consul at Canton:

"Gov. Teng informs me that rebels in Qwang-he have been defeated, and are being pursued by Imperial troops. Our missionaries safe."

W. W. Rockhill, former Special Commissioner of the United States to China regards this rebellion as of little importance, and believes that it will be suppressed soon.

BRITISH STILL BUYING HORSES

Officer in Charge at the Missouri Camp Discards His Military Dress

Special to The Times.

Lathrop, Mo., April 12.—In view of the investigation being made at New Orleans, the important fact to be developed at Lathrop, Mo., is, Who is running the horse and mule business here? Is it merely an American market or is it a British supply camp conducted by British capital, and under orders from British officers?

When Major Moore of the British Army was asked to-day whether he had established a military supply camp he carefully explained that the horses and mules are not purchased by the British remount commission, but that the buying is done by Guyton and Harrington and that they sell to the British Government in South Africa. Notwithstanding this statement it is asserted that the British Government owns the horses shipped from here.

When Major Moore went to the big barn this morning he was garbed like a Clinton county farmer, having discarded his riding boots and cap. The military stock was displaced by a white linen turn-down collar.

The work of buying and shipping horses and mules continues. The matter has been laid before Gov. Dockery.

New Orleans, La., April 9.—Capt. E. H. Crowder of the Judge Advocate General's Department is here investigating the condition of affairs prevailing at the British mule station at Chalmette. Capt. Crowder has established an office in the United States Custom House, but has not yet decided whether he will hold any formal sessions in his inquiry. He has requested, however, that those interested in the investigation, whether on the British or the Boer side, shall furnish him with a list of witnesses to be examined by him.

Captain Crowder announced that he would endeavor to have those interested on the opposite sides of the Chalmette controversy present names of their witnesses. He will then examine them and go over very largely the same evidence that has already been sent to Secretary Hay through Gov. Heard.

MILLER CHARGED WITH MURDER.

Former Woodstock Man Accused of Ending Miss Jennet's Life

A BRUTAL MURDER IN DETROIT

Girl Found on Street in Horribly Mutilated Condition - Miller Unable to Account for His Movements.

Windsor, April 11.—Miss Carrie M. Jennet, aged 22 years, was found murdered in Detroit yesterday morning. Her body was cut, hacked and mutilated almost beyond recognition. An hour later James M. Miller, a music teacher, was arrested in connection with the deed and is held on a charge of murder. There were telltale blood stains on his shirt and overcoat, and his hat was incrusted with blood spots, for which the prisoner was unable to account. Miller is a Canadian and went to Detroit from Woodstock, his home, some years ago, taking his wife and two children with him. For a time he was engaged as teacher of music in Mt. Clemens public schools, but went back to Detroit again. For several years Miller had been giving Miss Jennet music lessons, and often remained late in the evening. Mr. Jennet, the father, asserts that he was finally compelled to forbid Miller the house. The two continued to meet clandestinely, however, and at the houses of mutual friends.

On Wednesday night Miss Jennet left a meeting of the Daughters of Rebekah at 10 o'clock, declining the offers of company. About the same time Miller was getting ready to leave a meeting of the Protected Home Circle. He reached his home at 11.30, but before that time Miss Jennet's body had been found. Miller was unable to account satisfactory for his whereabouts in the interval between leaving the meeting and arriving home.

The motive for the murder is plain. The autopsy held on the remains of the victim revealed the startling fact that the young woman was about to become a mother.

Well and Stylishly Clothed at all Times

Thousands of women in Canada with limited means have discovered the secret of dressing well and stylishly in their homes and for the street.

These fortunate women have found out that, by spending ten cents for a package of one of the fashionable colors of Diamond Dyes they can re-color any old, faded and dingy dress, so as to make it appear a new production.

A lady recently affirmed that she had not purchased new materials for dresses for two years. This same lady is always neatly and prettily dressed, because she uses the Diamond Dyes. She has several old dresses, and dyes each one twice a year, and produces as good colors with the Diamond Dyes as can be found in new bought goods. It is wonderful, indeed, the saving in dollars that can be effected by a judicious use of the celebrated Diamond Dyes. Would you like to make up a pretty homemade Mat or Rug from your old wool or cotton rags. Send post card with your address to The Wells & Richardson Co., Limited, 200 Mountain St., Montreal, P.Q., and you will receive all the new designs to make choice from.

THE QUIRK MURDER

Government Detective Murray Has Again Departed from Brantford

Special to The Times.

Brantford, April 12.—Detective Murray did not remain in Brantford very long yesterday. He went to Toronto in the afternoon, stating that he expected to return shortly, probably this week. While he was here he did not do a great deal of work in connection with the Quirk murder case. He was closeted with Chief of Police Vaughan for some time, and the facts surrounding the tragedy were reviewed by the two at some length. After this he had an interview with a couple of gentlemen in Brantford, who had asked to see him, and who, it is understood, had some information in their possession relative to the case. There are still a couple of persons in this city who have expressed a wish to see Murray, but he did not have the time to call upon them yesterday. It is for this reason that he will return to Brantford this week or early next week. Chief Vaughan said this morning that there were no further developments.

Items of Interest

London, April 12.—Germany, France, Japan, and the United States are busy preparing for the London Coronation penny kerbstone merchant.

Never before in history have so many "special penny lines" been got ready for the tray of the street hawker. Some of them have arrived and have been opened out in the Houndsditch wholesale show rooms. Others repose in big cases at the docks, ready to be sprung upon the public when the right moment arrives. Imitation babies sparkling seductively in an imitation gold crown form a striking penny "line." Penny plaques for wall decoration have surprisingly faithful likenesses of the King and Queen, and measuring five inches by three and a half inches, are a wonderful pennyworth.

Monograms containing "E.R. VII.," done on neat metal brooches, ladies' bracelets with tiny hearts bearing a pleasing portrait of His Majesty, Coronation seaside pails and other toys embellished with pictures of their Majesties, views of Westminster Abbey, the Coronation chair, the royal crown and maps of the British Empire are prominent among the penny articles that are to come out for the delectation of Coronation crowds.

A self-locking money-box with portraits of King and Queen, quite a range of penny "Coronation puzzles," glass boxes in which there are little balls to be shaken into cavities in the royal crown mirrors with the royal photographs at the back and portraits in white metal frames are among the other things at the same nimble price, while a "Coronation panorama" with magnifying glass and handle with which to turn the views round is a marvel of penny ingenuity.

Necklaces with the royal crown as pendant, hollow balls with "Coronation, June, 1902," printed upon them, and trumpets with topical pictures on their glaring surfaces are a few of the very cheap penny surprises.

These and many others are being opened out in the great Houndsditch warehouses, such as Wisbey's.

Some of the articles are made in England.

TO RENEW THE DREIBUND.

Vienna, April 11.—The German Imperial Chancellor, Count von Buelow, started for Berlin to-day. According to the Neue Freie Presse, the Dreibund will be renewed in its old form, as the Chancellor's conferences here established the fact that it would not be wise to replace the present satisfactory arrangements by others of a more experimental character.

TO ANNUAL THE BANKRUPTCY

London, April 12.—In the Bankruptcy Court this morning the registrar decided, in spite of "rash speculation and extravagance in living," that he would annual the bankruptcy of the Duke of Manchester, an arrangement having been reached by which the sum of £11,676 is provided, giving the creditors 12s. 6d. in the pound sterling.

HONORARY DEGREES CONFIRMED.

SPANISH ARTILLERY COMMISSION

Madrid, April 12. — The commission which is to value the Spanish artillery remaining in the West Indies has sailed.

DUTCH HATRED.

London, April 11.— A recent issue of the Amsterdam Handelsblad contains a little paragraph which would be ridiculous did it not throw such a sinister light on our neighbors' present state of mind in regard to England. It is as follows.

"The Society for Clothing Children, whose motto is, "Let charity be our aim," begs us to call attention to a new propaganda medium which the committee has brought out. It consists of a little book, in which there is printed a bust of Mr. Chamberlain on a page covered with little squares. The idea is that the holder of such a booklet shall give anybody who will put one cent an opportunity of pricking the head of Mr. Chamberlain."

The Handelsblad remarks that such propaganda is to be strongly deprecated but the fact that a charitable society of Dutch ladies should originate and carry out such an idea is in itself significant enough.

IGNORED THE GERMAN

Berlin, April 12.— The German school authorities in the Polish districts of East Prussia are determined that the children attending the national schools shall be punished in an exemplary manner for declining to reply in the German during religious instructions. From Wreschen comes the announcement that forty Polish children, who would otherwise have finished their usual school course, will be compelled to attend school until further notice for declining to answer in German. Their parents have received written notice that until the children are able to display sufficient knowledge in the elements of religion they will not be freed from compulsory school attendance. The action of the authorities has caused much excitement amongst the Polish population of Eastern Prussia.

NEW GOVERNOR OF FIJI.

London, April 10.—The Colonial Office has appointed Mr. Henry Moore Jackson, now Governor of the Leeward Islands, to be Governor of Fiji in succession to Sir George T. M. O'Brien. Sir Gerald Strickland, chief secretary to the Governor at Malta, has been appointed Governor of the Leeward Islands.

RUSSIA MAKES A GRAB

Wants to Build a Railway Through Persia —Concession for a Loan

To the Editor of The Times:

St. Petersburg, April 11.—The Exchange Gazette says it thinks the recent loans to Persia ought to lead to the formation of a Russian company for railway construction in Persia. Russia ought in this way to obtain access to the Indian Ocean in the same manner as by the Manchurian Railway she has obtained access to the Pacific.

RUSSIA'S GIFT TO LOUBET.

St. Petersburg, April 11. — The municipality will present to President Loubet of France on his forthcoming visit to Russia a splendid album, containing twelve views of the Russian capital in oils and water-colors. The binding will be of gold and silver.

Dances have been arranged for the officers and crews of the warships which will accompany Loubet.

MRS. MAYBRICK'S CASE INTERESTS THE KING

Lipton Thought to Have Prompted Edward to Confer With the Home Secretary

London, April 12—King Edward has become interested in Mrs. Maybrick's case, it is reported. He is even said to have conferred with Home Secretary Ritchie about the advisability of releasing her.

The Home Secretary, it is asserted, opposed making an exception in her case, as he and all his predecessors have affirmed their belief that her sentence was just. He is represented to have been especially averse to exercising royal clemency in her sole behalf in coronation year, when public opinion would not tolerate any general act of amnesty toward any class of criminals.

Sir Thomas Lipton is believed to be at the bottom of the king's reported recent action. Lipton was a close friend of the late Lord Chief Justice Russell, who used every lever at his command to obtain Mrs. Maybrick's release. Lipton, it is understood, was primarily actuated by influential American friends.

One Common Cause of Headache

Perhaps the most general cause of headache and pain across the eyes is nasal catarrh. The simplest cure is to inhale the medicated vapor of Catarrhozone which traverses every air cell and air passage of the throat, lungs and nose. It kills myriads of germs at every breath, clears away mucous discharges, preserves and heals the membrane. Catarrhozone is just a splendid remedy for headache, and its action is certain and unfailing in diseases of the throat and lungs, deafness, bronchitis, asthma and catarrh. A trial will convince the most sceptical that Catarrhozone is all right. Large size, $1, trial size 25c. Druggists, or Polson & Co., Kingston, Ont.

TROOPS WILL NOT WITHDRAW.

A Leading Educator Says He Does Not Believe the Russian Troops Will be Withdrawn from Manchuria.

Special to The Times.

Victoria, B.C., April 12—Dr. W. A. Martin, who a month ago resigned the principalship of the Imperial Chinese College at Pekin, and has since been offered a similar position with the Chinese University at Wu Chang, arrived yesterday by the steamer Empress of Japan. Mr. Martin was in Pekin during the seige, and says there have been many changes since then.

"China has completed a treaty with the foreign powers, and all is quiet now," he said, "but how long it will remain a placid country no one can say. The recent treaty of Great Britain and Japan guarantees peace for a time only, for there is a feeling tending to the disintegration of the country among some powers. Great Britain, Japan and the United States are for the maintenance of the integrity of China, but Russia, France and others are for slicing up the kingdom.

"Russia did not get the special concessions in Manchuria favored by the treaty made by Li Hung Chang," he said. "Even to the hour before his death, when the Chinese statesman was all but unconscious, M. Lessar was trying to have him place his signature to the treaty by which Russia would have secured all she wanted."

Dr. Martin does not think the Russian troops will be withdrawn from Manchuria. "Russia will make the excuse that the troops are necessary for the protection of her railways," he continued, "and, in my opinion, Russia will ultimately have sole possession of Manchuria and Mongolia. The latter province has not yet been brought into question, but Russia is going to build a railway line across Mongolia from the nearest point of the boundary to Pekin.

"The Russians are scheming in many ways for the retention of the districts. There were rumors before I left Pekin that rebel forces were in motion in Kansu, and were supposed to be acting in concert with troops of Prince Tuan the ex-Boxer leader. I do not think it is likely that they will march on Pekin, but will hold an area in Shinsi and Mongolia. In Ningshia, his Kansu capital, Prince Tuan has a strong point."

WAR OFFICE RECEIVES WORD FROM KITCHENER

At an Early Hour This Morning Regarding the Peace Negotiations with Boers

THE CABINET SUMMONED TO MEET TO-DAY.

Big Party of Boer Leaders Now Conferring as to the Terms of Peace Steyn, Dewet, Delarey Arrive at Klerksdorp

Klerksdorp, Transvaal Colony, Wednesday, April 9.—The approach of President Steyn and Generals De Wet and Delarey, with their staffs, who, as already cabled, arrived here at noon to-day, was signalled at 11 a.m. by the arrival of a flag of truce at an outpost. An officer, with an escort, was sent out, and the President and the two Generals rode into Klerksdorp in Cape carts. The Orange Free State envoys were accompanied by Judge Hertzog, Commandant Olivier and six other persons. General Delarey had with him his secretary and a dozen Boers. The Free State representatives are quartered in the Old Town. General Delarey joined the Transvaal party, consisting of Botha, Schalk-burger, Reitz, Meyer and Jacobs, in the New Town. A conference tent was pitched midway between the two towns, and free communication was permitted the Boer delegates, but they were suitably guarded.

NO NEWS UP TO 11.30.

London, April 11.—From Government sources the Associated Press ascertains that the peace negotiations are not expected to come to a conclusion so quickly as this morning's premature reports indicate. The belief that there will be considerable parleying also exists in circles intimate with the Boer leaders on the continent, who maintain that no peace can be arrived at unless the British grant some form of amnesty to the Cape rebels. Whether this contention will prove well founded or otherwise is only a matter of conjecture, but it appears certain that the Boers will hold out till all expedients of negotiation are exhausted in an endeavor to gain this point. Some of those who are in close touch with South Africa believe that ten days may elapse before a definite conclusion is reached. In the meanwhile the presence of such representative Boers at Klerksdorp and other factors creates an all-round hopeful feeling. This was reflected on the Stock Exchange to-day in the advances of consols and Kaffirs. Up to 11.30 a.m. the Government had received no official news bearing out the statements that peace had been arranged.

PEACE RUMORS DENIED.

London, April 11.—Frederick Rutherford Harris, former Secretary of the British Chartered South Africa Company, was asked this morning at his residence, Llangibly Castle, Usk, Monmouthshire, if he had received a telegram announcing that the Boer leaders had accepted the British terms. Mr. Harris replied that the rumor was entirely without foundation.

A similar report of the alleged agreement was carried by The Central News and published by some of the many papers, which issued extra editions. It appears to have been originated in the Town of Pontypool, adjacent to Llangibly Castle.

The despatch appearing in The Financier and Bullionist is not confirmed from any other quarter. The editor of the paper says several words of the code message received were vague, but he believes his general interpretation of the despatch to be correct.

WORKING MR KRUGER.

Utrecht, April 11.— 1 a.m.— (Special)—Dutch hero-worship has become an unreasoning fetish, so far as Mr Kruger is concerned. He is idealized as a martyr to British oppression and persecution, and an unique and picturesque figure, reading the Bible with sublime faith, and working with serenity of purpose for the deliverance of the Boer republics. There is no decline in his popularity, although he lives in seclusion and is seldom seen outside his villa in the small factory town. He is surrounded by a swarm of relatives and Boer exiles, sees few visitors, and is more phlegmatic and taciturn than ever. He is unmanageable in money matters, and so deliberate and cautious in expressing an opinion and judgment respecting South African affairs that he is seldom consulted by Leyds, Wolmerans, Fischer and the other Boer leaders. Dr Leyds is received as the diplomatic representative of the South African Republic, and is allowed to display his full uniform on State occasions. Mr. Kruger is a private citizen living in exile, and not encouraged to visit the capital or appear in public. Yet he is reverenced throughout the Netherlands as a hero and a martyr.

HIS MIND GROWN DULL.

Mr. Kruger is unmistakably ageing, as his followers admit. His heart action is better than it was, and his general health has improved during his residence near Utrecht, but his mind has grown dull and torpid, his grim humor has disappeared, and the force of his character has sensibly abated. He remains the central figure of the group of Boer refugees because his personality is still unrivalled, but his associates make no secret of the fact that it is difficult to squeeze money out of him, and that his leadership is nominal and ineffective. Indecision is now described as his leading trait. He is unable to make up his mind when called upon to settle any point of Boer policy.

RELATIONS WITH SCHALK BURGER.

The extent to which Mr. Schalk Burger and General Botha have committed Mr. Kruger and his followers in the peace-making is a mystery. If the Boer agents were consulted, they probably disclaimed responsibility, and reserved judgment until Mr. Steyn could be approached and sounded. Their irreconcilable attitude will be maintained until the last moment. The idea that the Boers can or will surrender is the last the Dutch will entertain, and is incompatible with the hero-worship which prevails in Holland.

LATEST DESPATCH 2.30 a.m.

London, April 12.—

A summons issued last night for a Cabinet Meeting to-morrow. This circumstance started a fresh crop of rumors to the effect that the Government had received a despatch from Lord Kitchener on the subject of the peace negotiations after Mr. Broderick's statement in the House of Commons yesterday afternoon. Should the Boers taking part in the conference decide in favor of opening peace negotiations they will submit their proposals to Lord Kitchener who has been instructed to forward them immediately to the Government.

RIVER AND LAKE NOTES

The Steamers All Being Prepared for the Season's Operations

—The steamer Water Lily left yesterday for Rice Lake on her first trip of the season. She will return to-day on her regular weekly excursion.

—The City of Peterborough will this year be under the command of Capt. Maurice Lane. The steamer is now being thoroughly overhauled and will be launched about May 1st. Already a number of excursions have been booked.

—The publication in The Times of a complaint with regard to the delay in opening the swing of the Grand Trunk Railway bridge, evidently had the desired effect. A man was at once put on to open the bridge.

—Mr. Dan Foley will again have charge of the popular Jubilee Point summer resort. Commodore Calcutt, with his enterprise, is having the hotel and grounds put in excellent shape.

—Mr. T. H. Darcy, of Burleigh Falls Hotel, is preparing for an immense business this year. He is enlarging the hotel, and is already assured of a "full house" during the season.

—Mr. Geo. H. Brown, of Chemong Park Hotel, told The Times yesterday that already applications were being made received for accommodation for the hot months. Visitors who once stay at this popular resort, always return.

—Mr. Kelly, of Bridgenorth, will keep his boat entirely for towing purposes hereafter.

—The Trent Valley Navigation Company will have a new steamer on the route between Bridgenorth, Bobcaygeon and Burleigh this year.

THE ARGENTINA ARMY.

London, April 9. — The following cablegram has been received from Buenos Ayres, dated April 8: The review of the army was a complete success. All the Ministers and many foreign military notabilities attended. They consider the evolutions and the appearance of the troops worthy of the best organized armies in Europe. They speak especially in praise of the military and cavalry.

A Great Dairy Number

With its usual enterprise the Farming World is again to the fore. Its special numbers dealing with different branches of agriculture are becoming noted. A few weeks ago its Poultry Number appeared and attracted wide attention. The Number before us eclipses anything heretofore attempted in this country in the way of a Dairy Number. It contains articles by the heads of the dairy departments of agriculture in the different provinces besides an otherwise splendid and varied bill of fare. The illustrations are unusually fine. Any of our readers may secure a sample copy by addressing the Farming World, Toronto. We have a special combination offer by which we can supply The Weekly Times and The Farming World both for $1.50.

BRITISH TAXES

The British budget will be brought down on Monday, and it is generally expected that some new taxes will be announced, for the war is still going on and the total expenditure of the year is estimated at £171,000,000, of which £150,000,000 will be raised by taxation. The British policy is to pay as you go, as far as possible, and to avoid adding to the national debt. There is talk of an import duty on timber, which Canada would feel to some extent, and there may be an increase in the sugar duties. Although the income tax is already very high, an increase is spoken of, either in the form of an additional penny in the pound, or by an extension of the tax, so as to include incomes between £100 and £150, the latter amount having been the limit of exemption. The British people know how to stand taxation, and they know that while Sir Michael Hicks-Beach is Chancellor of the Exchequer, the new taxes will be so arranged that as much as possible of what the people pay will find its way into the public treasury. The debate on the budget is expected to last two days. Here in Canada it lasts three or four weeks, when there are no tariff changes at all to wrangle over.

MUNICIPAL OWNERSHIP IN THE UNITED STATES

The fact that 150,000 voters in Chicago cast their ballots for municipal ownership of the street railways and lighting plants should serve as a warning to legislators who peddle out public franchises corruptly or carelessly.

It happens in this case that the vote was not binding, but simply served as an expression of the public will and a protest against the widespread blunder of giving away public franchises without an adequate return.

The fact that only 25,000 voted in the negative in Chicago is conclusive evidence that the people are disgusted with the management of the public franchises of that city.

When the popular impatience is so emphatically expressed, it will not always suffer itself to be ignored in practice. The referendum idea is simply an experiment in its initial stages. In time it is liable to gather the means of making itself operative in legislation, and then heedless legislators will begin to realize what they have brought about.—Boston Globe.

THE CANADIAN SOLDIER

No name will come out of this South African war brighter than that of "the Canadian soldier."

Wherever he has been severely tried, he has acquitted himself not only with credit, but with brilliancy. From Paardeberg to Hart's River, he has shown the steadiness of the veteran, linked with the splendid daring of the Light Brigade.

We Canadians who have stayed at home should feel no false modesty in proclaiming our pride in this. It is emphatically for us to say it.

We have not done the deed, but we will profit by it. Our name will gain immensely in prestige throughout the Empire and the world because these brothers of ours died fighting and victorious on the battle line. If they had flinched, we would have suffered. But they met death with a superb courage, and we shall go out among the peoples of the world with a reputation for daring.

It might have been expected, to begin with, that "raw colonials" would not have stood fire. It will never be expected again. Our volunteers have established the reputation of the colonial soldier. There is not a military camp in Europe where we will not be ranked higher for the sacrifice of these men.

It is not only our privilege to boast of this, but our duty. We should make it clear to all coming generations that we appreciated to the full the work done by these young Canadians. The movements to make their graves in South Africa and to erect fitting monuments to them here are the natural expressions of a grateful people.

The gratitude is deep enough and real enough; and we must not be careless about the permanent expression of it.

A PROPER COURSE

Mr. Morrison, the clever editor of the Ottawa Citizen, says in his paper:

If the present peace negotiations turn out to be a Boer ruse, or even if they are bona fide on Schalkburger's part, but prove abortive, we move that the British Government put its foot down and announce that the terms in future will be "unconditional surrender." These were the terms the United States Government granted the South and they are good enough for the Boers. After they have surrendered it will be time enough for the British Government to consider the terms to be granted to the belligerents—terms not to be regarded from the standpoint of the future of the Dutch race in South Africa, but from the standpoint of the future of the British race in South Africa. With "unconditional surrender" as the watchword there will be no further need of peace negotiations, bogus or bona fide. All Mr. Boer will have to do is to stay in the field and fight until he gets ready to come in. The prolonged and senseless resistance of the small force of irreconcilables in the field has forfeited their right to terms. They are destroying their own country and putting the British Government to useless expenditure which might better be employed in rebuilding ruined farm houses, restocking farms and giving the conquered burghers a new start in life. But what the Overseas Peoples are really afraid of is that the maudlin sentiment in Great Britain, reinforced by a desire to end the war, will result in a grant of terms to the Boers which will not ensure the unchallenged supremacy of the British flag and institutions for all time to come in South Africa.

ASSESSORS ARE ASTRAY

Some of Them Ignorant of the Revised Law

Proceeding on Old Legislation and Will Probably Have to Make New Assessments in Accordance With Amended Laws

It has developed that municipal assessors throughout the Province began their season's work over a fortnight ago without a thorough knowledge of the amendments to the assessment act made at the last session of the Legislature. It is the duty of assessors to be informed of the latest amendments to the assessment law, but results have shown that many assessors are still ignorant of the radical alteration made in the act by the Legislature a few weeks ago. The assessments made under the old act will probably not be accepted.

The principal amendments to the act provide that land shall be assessed in the municipality in which it lies; that the assessment of lands of water, light, heat, power and other companies shall be made in the municipality in which the lands are situated, and that the rails, wires, gas mains conduits and other properties of such companies shall be assessed at their actual cash value, as the same would be appraised upon a sale to another company possessing similar powers.

Instructions to assessors throughout the country may be forwarded.

MARINE NOTES.

The City of Peterborough will be ready for business early in May. Several excursions have already been booked.

The Majestic is engaged towing on Clear and Stony lakes.

The Sunbeam, which is in dry dock in Lakefield, is being overhauled, preparatory to her removal to Lindsay waters.

Lindsay Post: The Str. Ogemah, of the Trent Valley Navigation Co., made a short trip up the lake last evening, and the movements of the ice convinced Capt. Hamilton that the lake would be clear this morning. The result justified his opinion. A number of passengers were on board for the first trip this morning, and it is expected that the majority of the villagers will take an airing in the course of a few days to shake off the lethargy induced by their long seclusion from the outer world. The Ogemah will remain on the route for some time, and will then be replaced by the Manita. The Esturion will not be ready for service for several weeks.

Mr. C. D. H. McAlpine, advance agent for the Str. Sunbeam, the boat recently purchased by Messrs. Carew and Parkin, of Lindsay, made a business trip through Mariposa township a few days ago and booked several excursions. Cyril says he had no trouble in arranging for excursions on account of the Sunbeam being able to pass through Balsam lake. We understand Capt. Parkin has some 25 excursions already booked.

Items of Interest

London, April 11.—Commenting on Mr. Cecil Rhodes' political will and testament as contained in a letter written to him, and which is published by Mr. W. T. Stead says that Mr. Rhodes' great dream was to found a society composed of men of strong convictions and great wealth, which would do for the unity of the English-speaking race what the Society of Jesus did for the Roman Catholic Church immediately after the Reformation. The English-speaking race stood to Mr. Rhodes for all that the Catholic Church stood to Ignatius Loyola. Mr. Rhodes saw in the English-speaking race the greatest instrument yet evolved for the progress and elevation of mankind, shattered by internal dissensions and rent in twain by the declaration of American independence, just as the unity of the church was destroyed by the Reformation.

NEW GOVERNOR OF FIJI.

London, April 10.—The Colonial Office has appointed Mr. Henry Moore Jackson, now Governor of the Leeward Islands, to be Governor of Fiji in succession to Sir George T. M. O'Brien. Mr Gerald Strickland, chief secretary to the Governor at Malta, has been appointed Governor of the Leeward Islands.

LORD STRATHCONA HONORED.

London, April 10. — Lord Strathcona and Mount Royal received the freedom of Aberdeen to-day. In the ceremony at the County Hall Lord Provost Fleming, in presenting him with the burgess ticket, referred to his splendid services and princely munificence in raising Strathcona's Horse for the South African War.

In returning thanks, Lord Strathcona referred to the importance of the development of the British colonies. He said that however much they might deplore the cause of the war, the fact that soldiers of the Mother Country and the colonies were fighting shoulder to shoulder was an object lesson, the importance of which could not be over-estimated.

THE TRIPLE ALLIANCE.

Vienna, April 9.—Count von Buelow, the German Chancellor, will arrive here this evening, and have audiences with Emperor Francis Joseph and Count Goluchowski, the Austro-Hungarian Minister. The object of the visit is to arrange the prolongation of the Triple Alliance.

TO SUE THE OWNERS

London, April 9.—The owners of the Red Star liner Waesland, which was sunk in the Irish Sea, near Holyhead after collision with the Liverpool steamship Harmonides, have entered an action for damages against the owners of the latter vessel.

PROF. AGASSIZ IN NEW YORK.

London, April 9.—Prof. Alexander Agassiz is a passenger on the Deutschland, which is due in New York to-morrow. He has completed a prolonged and successful study of the coral formations among the Maldive Islands, in the Indian Ocean. His expedition has been among the remote and unfrequented groups in the Southern Indian Ocean, and it is understood that specimens of the rarest coral formations have been gathered.

THE ARGENTINA ARMY.

London, April 9. — The following cablegram has been received from Buenos Ayres, dated April 8: The review of the army was a complete success. All the Ministers and many foreign military notabilities attended. They consider the evolutions and the appearance of the troops worthy of the best organized armies in Europe. They speak especially in praise of the military and cavalry.

AMERICAN IN IDEAS.

Mr. Rhodes was devoted to the British flag, but in his ideas he was American, and in later years he expressed to Mr. Stead his unhesitating readiness to accept a reunion of the race under the Stars and Stripes, if it could not be obtained in any other way. Although he had no objection to monarchy, he preferred the American to the British constitution. His one favorite expedient for inducing the United States to recognize the need for unity was the declaration of a tariff war. This, he believed, would bring the United States to its senses and lead to an Anglo-American union, and eventually to universal peace.

CANADIAN CASUALTIES.

Ottawa, April 10.—Official confirmation of the death of Corp. Knisley and Private Day at Kleinhart's River has been received here.

The following cable has been received by the Governor-General: "Capetown—Dangerously ill, enteric fever, 7th April, Pretoria, South African Constabulary, James Arthur Patterson. Please inform father, Samuel Patterson, 318 Berkeley street, Toronto."

Probs. To-day,—A little milder.

The area of low pressure which caused the rain and high northwest winds is now slowly dispersing near the New England coast. The weather is cloudy and unsettled in Ontario and Quebec, and scattered showers are reported in both provinces.

CHECKED SOUTH.

When the first keen winds of winter begin to be felt in the North, many an invalid is hurried away by anxious friends to the kindlier climate of the South. The cause is apparent as you look at the hollow cheeks and listen to the rasping cough of the traveler.

Persons suffering with weak lungs, obstinate cough and severe hemorrhage even, have found the change of climate made unnecessary by the use of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. It strengthens weak lungs, cures obstinate coughs, and builds up the body with sound, healthy flesh. It contains no alcohol, neither opium, cocaine nor other narcotic.

"I feel that I owe a debt of gratitude to a friend for recommending your medicine, as well as to you for preparing such grand remedies for chronic diseases especially, which the doctors failed to reach," writes I. B. Staples, Esq., of Barclay, Osage Co., Kans. "I desire to pass the good word along for the benefit of others who need your remedies. I am a railroad agent, and four years ago my work keeping me in a warm room and stepping out frequently into the cold air gave me bronchitis, which became chronic and deep seated. Doctors failed to reach my case and advised me to try a higher air, but, fortunately for me, a friend also advised me to try Dr. Pierce's medicines. I commenced taking your 'Golden Medical Discovery,' and by the time I had taken the first bottle I was better, and after taking about four bottles my cough was entirely gone. This was a year ago last winter; and again last winter I took about three bottles to prevent a return of the trouble. I have found no necessity for seeking another climate."

For the Farmer.

Sheep are the only animals which do not really exhaust the land on which they feed. They distribute manure evenly on the field and tramp it into the soil, feeding upon plants that other animals will not consume.

It is claimed that if tobacco stems or refuse be placed around the base of a peach tree the borer will not attack the tree. The mode of applying is to get the stems around the trees, on the ground, and fasten them to the trees higher up. It is worthy of a trial.

Another remedy suggested for the curculio is to spray just before the trees blossom with a mixture of a pound of Paris green in sixty gallons of water. Two weeks later use kerosene emulsion, giving a third spraying about June 1z. This method, it is said, will destroy the curculio, leaf lice and other enemies of the plum.

Heat, moisture and occasionally cooling are the factors at work in the production of chickens. Heat is of course supplied by the hen, who, also, if she be a good setter, will see to the cooling, though as a rule it is better not to trust entirely to her for this. But moisture is beyond her control if the place of setting is allotted to her. In some districts there is no trouble whatever on this score, as the atmosphere is charged with sufficient for the needs of the eggs. But in others very great care has to be taken or dryness of the atmosphere will be fatal to successful hatching. Seasons also differ.

How to Spray.

The agricultural station of the University of Illinois has issued bulletin No. 68, prepared by Professor Arnold V. Stubenrouch, on "Important Details of Spraying." In the chapter describing the proper method of spraying, we read:

Having the mixtures properly prepared and thoroughly agitated cannot alone insure success. Unless the spray is properly applied, all preliminary effort is lost. To spray properly is more difficult than is usually supposed, especially where materials in suspension are used. It will not do to go out with a determination "to do a thorough job and give them an everlasting soaking" until everything is dripping. If this is done there will be less material on the trees in the end than if less were applied in a proper manner. This to some may seem paradoxical. Nevertheless, it is a fact, and an attempt will be made to show just how it takes place. In order to do this it will be necessary to consider the globules of water as they come from the nozzle, carrying with them suspended particles of Paris green or Bordeaux mixture, or both, as the case may be. The settling which takes place. The only way this can be avoided is the globules of water after they become fixed to the fruit and leaves. Hence the larger the globule, the more settling will take place, and consequently the more material will be deposited at one place in the spray tank goes on without is to have the globules very small and fine as they leave the nozzle, and to keep them intact as separate, fine globules after they become attached to the fruit or leaf. Hence the importance of the injunction: "Use only a fine nozzle; use force enough to keep the liquid issuing as a fine mist, and spray only until the foliage and fruit are completely bedewed."

It requires considerable skill to do this properly and cover the surface fully. If it cannot be done with one spraying it would pay better to go over the trees twice, allowing the first application to dry before giving the second, than to try to accomplish it all at one time, and thus run the risk of going further than the simple bedewing of the fruit or leaves. If the spray is continued too long the fine globules will "run together" to form one or several large ones, which, instead of remaining fixed and drying just where they strike, will run down to the lowest place and drip. Of course, the suspended material settles to the lowest point of the globule, which is, in that case, spread over a considerable surface of the fruit. Some of the upper portions are thus left completely bare. At the lower edge the material will drip off with the water, or often accumulate in sufficient quantity to cause injury.

ing; she was startled from her thoughts by the cab door suddenly opening and the driver announcing that he had brought her to the office of Simpson & Brown, they were considered the best in the profession.

Daisy was ushered into the private office, where she found Mr. Simpson, the senior member of the firm, bending over huge piles of legal documents.

He arose with a low bow as the slender figure entered, and handed his veiled visitor a chair.

"I have come to see you upon a very important matter, sir, in the interest of a young lady friend of mine, and, oh, sir, the happiness of two lives depends upon the answer you shall give me," faltered Daisy, clasping her little white hands piteously together.

"I trust I may be able to give you a very encouraging answer, and just the answer you wish," said Mr. Simpson, pleasantly, noting the richness of her dress and the jewels that shone like stars on the lily-white hands.

He caught but a faint outline of the face hidden by the thick veil, but judged that it must be very fair.

"I scarcely know how to begin," faltered Daisy, "it is surely the most pitiful story that was ever heard."

"Every one thinks his own lot the hardest to bear," said Mr. Simpson, with a smile, which encouraged Daisy to proceed.

"It is about a young girl," she began, with great embarrassment, "who made a most unhappy marriage."

"A very common occurrence nowadays, I am sorry to say," observed Mr. Simpson.

"She was so young—this friend of mine—when she married that she hardly knew what love meant. She was coaxed into it. A handsome stranger who came to the village persuaded her to marry him—without the consent of her relatives and friends, and it was to be kept a secret for a little while."

"The same old story," thought the lawyer, but he made no comments; he put on a very sympathetic look and seemed profoundly interested.

"She was so young, so very young she did not know that this was wrong—all wrong," Daisy went on in a low voice, half choked with sobs.

"Quite as soon as they were married, a strange fate separated them; but their secret was never found out —they drifted apart.

"She found out what he was, this handsome stranger who had wooed and won her; a scoundrel of the deepest dye, whom it were mild to call a villain.

"And then—— Oh, sir, how she abhorred him from the very depths of her heart.

"It became the one great secret trouble of her life that he would come back some time and claim her. She would have died before she would have gone with him."

"Poor child, that was a hard secret to bear," mused the lawyer, sympathetically, pretending not to notice her great emotion, and the sudden stop she had come to.

"It was indeed a bitter secret," Daisy went on, piteously; "but after awhile her fear grew less, and she dared to hope he could never find her if she were to go away—destroying every trace by which he might search for her.

"Then she met another whom she had in the meantime learned to love with all the fervor of her heart and soul, and—and he asked her to marry him.

"Her whole soul went out to meet him. She loved him so well that she could not give him up. She believed he would never find out —never know the horrible secret that darkened the past, and one sunny summer day she married him."

The old lawyer's face had suddenly grown grave; this was worse than he had thought. Still, he would not interrupt her.

"She married him," continued Daisy, faintly, "and their life was one dream of happiness until suddenly in an unexpected moment she met the first one face to face.

"My—my friend cannot tell whether he recognized her or not. She turned and fled as though an arrow had pierced her heart. What I want to know is this, sir. Could the scoundrel claim her? Can he force her to go with him?

"Remember she hates him with all her heart. She would rather die than go with him; yes, rather die a thousand times.

"It would break her heart to be parted from the husband whom she loves."

"I am to tell you the truth, the whole truth, no matter for the pain it may bring you?" questioned the lawyer, slowly.

"Yes," said Daisy, piteously. "Tell me the truth. Could he, the scoundrel, claim my—my friend?"

"Yes, he could claim her. She is his wife before God and man!" he responded, slowly. "She committed one of the greatest sins as well as one of the gravest of crimes by disobeying God's law by marrying again; in the eyes of the law she is guilty of bigamy, that is punishable by the prison doors closing upon her. A woman who would lend herself to such a sin ought to be sent to prison. I am too honorable a man to lift my voice to save her."

CHAPTER XIV.
"I Know Your Awful Secret, My Lady."

The words fell upon poor Daisy's ears like the voice of doom.

It was a terrible and cruel awakening; only heaven knew what she suffered as she listened.

The full meaning of his words had not reached her—she realized, understood but one thing—Harold St. John could claim her—he could part her from Aleck—her love—the other half of her soul.

How she ever left the lawyer's office and entered the cab again she never remembered.

The lawyer looked after the slim figure with keen eyes.

"I should know that form and that little white hand anywhere again," he ruminated. "Poor child, it is a great sorrow, and she has brought it upon herself; the friend whose case she cites—is herself.

"How strange that love should be called a blessing when it brings so much misery to one-half of the world," thought the bachelor lawyer. "How much sin and folly is brought about all through love's sake, and it seems that the most beautiful women are the most prone to it."

He turned with a sigh to his books,

To be Continued.

"MANY FALSE PROPHETS SHALL RISE."

ONE OF THE SIGNS OF THE LAST DAYS NOW BEING CONSPICUOUSLY FULFILLED.

BY REV. P. E. EASTON.

When our Lord was asked what would be the signs by which His people might know that His coming was near at hand, He mentioned, among others, (Matt. 24: 5), that many would come in His name, saying I am Christ, and would deceive many. If it were possible, He added, "they will deceive the very elect." It is evident that such teachers must be very subtle and have much that is true in their teaching, otherwise sincere people would not be deceived. As the counterfeit coin would not pass if it was all base metal, but is accepted the more readily the more silver it has in it, so the most dangerous teaching is that which contains a leaven of truth.

This fact was brought impressively to my mind by an utterance of one of our ablest scholars. Lecturing to students, he stopped suddenly and spoke to them with great earnestness, to the following effect:—"If you forget all that I have taught you, there is one thing which I desire that you should remember. The danger which threatens the church is not what most people suppose it to be. It is a matter concerning which ninety-nine people out of a hundred are ignorant. The faith is being undermined; and in no long time the church will be called to pass through a crisis more severe than anything in her past history." He then went on to point out that the wicked Haman, who was plotting the destruction of the church, was the insidious Pantheistic teaching of the day. Nine years have passed since this utterance, and it is evident to-day not only that the same condition exists, but that we are rapidly hastening toward the crisis then spoken of. It is not the church alone, it is the State and the family also, whose very foundations are being undermined.

One of the essential characteristics of Pantheism is its esoteric character—one thing to the outside world, and another to those who are initiated into the system; one thing again to the catechumen who is yet in the initial stage, and another to the adept who has gone through all the degrees. If it be asked how can we know anything about a system which is thus wrapped up in mystery, the answer is, the system is old, its sects many, and by comparing these sects and studying their literary remains we have very valuable literary and historical data upon which to base a judgment.

One of the amazing things about all these sects is the extraordinary fascination and seductive influence which they exert upon their followers. It is the story of the pied piper of Hamelin, with this difference, that it is not children, nor even women, but strong men also, who are borne along by the current. It is, in fact, a sort of spiritual intoxication, not to say delirium, which seizes upon them in which the senses are drowned and the voice of reason is not heard. It is impossible to argue with them, because there is no common ground on which to stand. That which the common sense of mankind declares to be black is to them white; that which is manifest folly is to them the highest wisdom. Talk not to them of a future heaven; they are in heaven now; nor of the beatific vision, for they have heard, and seen, and handled. Not all, it is true, are thus crazy. We are speaking here more particularly of Oriental Pantheists; but something of this same character is seen in all forms of the delusion.

How shall we account for the fact? We must bear in mind that the Pantheistic tempter is not the devil in horns and hoofs, but the devil transformed into an angel of light, who comes to mankind to-day as he did to the Saviour in the wilderness, with the offer of the kingdoms of the world and all the glory of them, on the one sole condition of accepting him as Lord and master. This is all he asks. No change of religion and no change of life. All things to all men in a sense somewhat different from that of the apostle. He is an exceedingly obliging and courteous individual. He is also a very pious individual and a very self-sacrificing one, ready in many cases even to lay down his life for the cause. Is it any wonder that he has deceived many, and that many have been moved to inveigh with righteous indignation against the hard-heartedness of those who would impugn the motives of such an excellent person. What grace, they cry; what goodness, what heavenly language! Would that his uncharitable accusers were half as good as he! Nevertheless, let us listen to the great Persian writer when he cries: "O how much sugar-like sweetness, within which poison was concealed." In the story of the wily vizier that master mind has drawn just such a character, a strange combination of saint and devil, a character by no means uncommon in Persian history. Let the reader ponder these and other like words of Scripture: "Now the Spirit speaketh expressly that in the latter times some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits, and doctrines of devils." (I. Tim. 4:1).

The Veal Age.

This is assuredly the Veal Age in literature. People no longer ask about an author, How old is he? but How young is he—or she, as is usually the case. Of the writers on the staff of Josh. Gosh & Co. 85 per cent. are under the age of twenty-one, and 25 per cent. are under sixteen years. Sixty-eight per cent. of these write historical romances and 25 per cent. write in the [illegible] style.—[illegible]

Honor for a Canadian.

Canadians generally will be interested in learning that Dr. J. Beattie Crozier, author of the famous work, "History of Intellectual Development," has been selected as one of the 300 representatives of the empire in the splendid ten-guinea volume of portraits and biographies which the Grosvenor Press are bringing out. The work consists of representative men of every class outside of the military and civil services, who will have a volume to themselves. Dr. Crozier will be one of the representatives of the department of philosophy. Also, of course, he will stand as one of the representatives of Canada, a distinction he has well earned, and on which I am sure his countrymen will warmly congratulate him.

An Out-spoken Journal.

It is refreshing, and even entertaining, to turn occasionally to that ultra-Radical English journal, Reynolds' Newspaper, and see the use which is still made of that right of free speech which is sometimes supposed to have been menaced by the developments of late years. Reynolds' does not take much stock in the colonies of the empire, nor, for that matter, in the mother country either, and in an article dealing with the war the other day made the following amiable reference to the progressive colony of New Zealand, the advanced radicalism of which might have been expected to meet with sympathy in its columns:—"Amid all this scene of woe and desperation, one sinister figure emerges—the ogre of Capitalism. Seddon, the frozen meat 'patriot,' with the hostile tariff against British goods, and his bankrupt colony living on borrowed money, rages about the contracts for supplying the army. The foreign Jewish 'patriots'—who used to sing 'God Shave the Queen'—domiciled here, have secured most of those contracts, as they secured the astounding contracts for the supply of horses. And behind this section of old Jewry is that other section of Judaism with which Rhodes the Raider is connected. Fine patriots, indeed, making their millions out of the war, while the Government refuses to pay poor Tommy Atkins his back wages, leaving him to starve in the street, or to die in the workhouse."

Here, too, is Reynolds' pleasantly frank way of dealing with the Anglo-Japanese alliance:—"We are going the way of all nations given up, on the one hand, to the most sensual luxury, on the other to the most immoral and criminal seizure of their neighbors' territory. The latest sign of our feebleness, under a Government composed of rich men and land monopolists, whom the international Jewish capitalists have by the throat, is the treaty with Japan. Only a couple of months ago that vulgar self-advertiser Chamberlain was hurling insults at Germany—a country that had previously rejected his cringing appeal for an alliance—and boasting of our 'splendid isolation.' To-day our Government, composed of fools and knaves, recognizing the gravity of the position of affairs in South Africa, is obliged to beg little Japan, a semi-savage nation, with a veneer of western culture among its more prosperous classes, to enter into an alliance with decaying England. The humiliation of it! The danger of it!"

Presbyterian Lenten Service.

A regular Lenten service in a Presbyterian church is not heard of often, but Dr. Hunter of the King's Weigh House Church, London, has begun this innovation during the present season of Lent. In the course of a conversation with a representative of a London newspaper, Dr. Hunter expressed himself as strongly in favor of the observance of all the seasons of the "Christian year." "It belongs," he said, "to the whole of Christendom and not to any one section only. Nonconformists have lost much through their non-observance of these special seasons. For instance, Lent arose originally out of a deep necessity of the inner life, and, more even than men long ago, we require such a pause amid the rush of business and pleasure. It is well for us to have such a season, it is better still if we seek to profit by it. It is wise and good that so many in our day, and in so many of our churches, are returning to the old paths of meditation and prayer and are seeking to fill the best of the old forms and observances with a truer and better meaning and spirit."

Dr. Hunter has always been an advocate of the observance by Free Churchmen of the feasts and fasts of the church. When he began his ministry in York twenty-eight years ago he introduced the custom of a service on Good Friday, and in his church at Glasgow he had for two years daily prayer. At King's Weigh House Church on the Sunday evenings in Lent, Dr. Hunter is delivering a course of sermons on "Self-discipline" and he has announced a "class for young persons wishing to be prepared for the Communion of the Lord's Supper," which is presumably on the lines of a confirmation class in the Church of England. The service book in use at King's Weigh House is one compiled by Dr. Hunter, and used by him at Glasgow, and, while based mainly on liturgical lines, it provides for the exercise of extempore prayer.

To Make Colts Shy.

Nearly every colt, when first driven away from home, will shy and scare more or less at objects along the roadside. After he has been driven a few times the common practice is to strike him with the whip every time he does this. It is provoking to feed a horse hay three times a day and then see him scare at a little pile of hay in the road. The first thing that comes into the mind is to give him a cut with the whip.

Nothing worse than this could be done. The next time he will not only be afraid of the object, but of the whip also, and by a little training in this way he will soon be confirmed in the habit of shying and scaring at nearly everything he sees. First the tendency, then the habit, is the law of nature, and when the pile of hay or rock, or whatever startles, is connected with the whip, as it soon will be, the habit is fixed for life. You cannot lick horses into good habits, [illegible] easily by [illegible].—Maine Farmer.

Poultry and Dairy.

Washing the hands seems a needless task sometimes, but the successful dairyman will find the moments spent in this way are the most profitable of the day. Clean hands lead to clean cows, and with clean cows there will be a clean product.

Experience With Houdans.

I have had fifteen years' experience in breeding Houdan fowls, and am strongly of the opinion that the high favor in which this breed is held by the French farmer and poulterer is not misplaced. I think it a great mistake that the Houdans are not more generally raised by the farmers of this country. They are medium sized, good layers of large white eggs, and are highly esteemed as a table bird. They have no combs to freeze in severe weather—a convenience to farmers who expect fowls to thrive without protection.—Charles Hopper, Ashley, O.

Poultry on the Dairy Farm.

Just why dairymen do not make poultry-raising pay is not a problem hard to solve. The reason is lack of knowledge relating to poultry-raising. How can we make fowls hustle and exercise? First, we must not feed too heavily or make it too easy for birds to get their food. We must get them out of their houses in winter as much as possible. The profit in winter depends on having the hens well housed and giving special care. A house 12 by 20 feet is large enough for 50 fowls. Do not permit any of the floor space to be occupied with nests, roosts or other fixtures. All of the floor space should be reserved for the hens, and a part of it should be used for a scratching floor. Put in only enough glass for lighting purposes.

One reason why some people do not succeed with poultry is that they do not know how to feed to the best advantage. Large fowls require a different system of feeding than small ones. Leghorns are not likely to get overfat. They will leave corn on the ground and run after insects; while the larger breeds will eat the corn that is given them and stand around waiting for more. Chopped clover is good, and should be fed each day, and chopped vegetables will not take its place. On the average farm there is much that goes to waste that the fowls can utilize, and this helps to give profit.—F. M. Munger, in American Agriculturist.

Guinea Fowls for Farm.

There is a difference of opinion as to the profitableness of guinea fowls. Where one person succeeds ten will perhaps fail. Guineas are very like wild birds in habits and it is thought that it is impossible to tame them but this is not the case. On a farm where they have a wide range guineas can be raised to advantage. They begin to lay in April and lay until the middle of October. During this season chicken hens get broody and in August and September moult and a flock of guineas will keep the egg basket filled.

Young guineas are susceptible to cold, and we do not set any eggs until the first of June, and have them coming off from the first of July until the middle of August. Those taken off later will not get grown before cold weather, but will make nice broilers to use in the fall. We set the eggs under an ordinary hen and raise them with the chickens; keep them fastened in a coop with the hen for several days, until they get used to the hen; then turn them out to forage in the day but shut them up at night. We give them the same kind of food as the young chicks, making sure to keep the coop's floor covered with coarse sand. The little guineas are so tame that it is hard to keep from stepping on them when going to feed or to put up at night. Our guineas roost in the fowl house, and, although they make the circuit round the farm every day, they come back to a clover patch near the fowl yard to lay, and nearly always lay near each other. I do not find them any harder to raise than chickens. They are great foragers, bug catchers and insect destroyers, and trouble grain and truck patches less than any other class of fowls.

The meat of the guinea resembles that of wild game in flavor, and is delicious, fit for an epicure. In many sections of the country partridges, quails, etc., are very scarce, and I do not see why guineas could not be hatched by incubators and raised to supply those who know what a toothsome bird the guinea is.—L. G. Holland, Ninety-Six, S. C.

The Water on a Dairy Farm.

The water supply should be even more scrupulously guarded than the food supply. It serves a double purpose, that of water for the cow and for the washing of the utensils. The water for both should be equally pure, and it ought to be made an axiom that water unfit to wash the pails or cans is unfit for cattle to drink. The milking cow requires large quantities of water, and whether it be capable of demonstration that impurities may find their way into the milk, it is safest to take the benefit of the doubt and use only pure water. A shallow dug well in the corner of the cow lot cannot escape contamination at some time. The contamination may not last all the time, and it may be, as is usually the case, that it is of a harmless character. The fact is that any contamination from the surface, no matter what may be its character, marks the well as one that may become infected and the cause of an epidemic. It only remains for the right kind of an infection to enter. It may require one year or forty years.

The special forms which are partial to the water supply are the intestinal germs that cause diarrhoea and the typhoid form. Many of the most alarming epidemics of typhoid have been traced to such source. It is not an easy matter to obtain an adequate supply of water at all places about a city, but as far as possible it should be from driven wells. As far as tested, all driven wells of more than twenty-five feet are supplying pure water. The hard-pan near the surface acts as an effective barrier to the passage of germs, and those that come from below are harmless. A driven well of twenty-five feet is a deeper well from a sanitary standpoint than any dug well. All dairies within the corporate limits of a city should be compelled to use city water.—United States Bulletin No. 86.

A MARVELLOUS MEDICINE

"No Cure, No Pay," is the Newest Proposal of the Proprietors of Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills

Editor Morning Times

Sir,—We make the following proposal to the readers of the Times: To any one who is a subject of rheumatism (no matter how long standing), or any blood disease, as enumerated below, and will give Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills a fair trial, and do not find a perfect cure, we will refund the money paid for the pills. If no substantial improvement is observed, we will in addition, pay $10 in cash on satisfactory evidence being supplied us to this effect.

We have yet to know of a single case where these wonderful pills have not been almost entirely successful in effecting a cure. CANADA CHEMICAL CO.

Ex-Ald. Bailey, St. John's, writes: I cannot speak too highly of Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills. They worked a miracle in my case, and cured me after many years of suffering. I do not think their equal is to be obtained.

Dr. Clarke's Little Red Pills are a positive and certain cure for la grippe, rheumatism, asthma, paralysis, catarrh, eczema, coughs, backache, indigestion, all stomach and liver troubles, female complaints, even when the diseases have been standing for many years, the most stubborn cases will yield. Price 50 cents per box. For sale by Ormond & Walsh. The Canada Chemical Company will forfeit $10 for any case that these pills do not help.

Dr. Clarke's Sure Cure for Catarrh, and Dr Clarke's Sure Cure for Eczema, same price. $10 will be paid for any case they will not permanently cure.

Cancer Attacks the Middle-Aged

Persons approaching the meridian of life should beware of little lumps and growths.

It is a well-known fact that any physician will substantiate, that there is a greater percentage of Cancer among those of midlife than at any other age.

Persons at this time of life would do well to regard with suspicion any lumps or growths on their bodies. Should these prove malignant or of a cancerous nature, they can be removed completely, without operation, by the use of our painless home treatment.

It is the most successful remedy for the cure of cancers and tumors and has cured numbers of people here in Canada and saved them from the torture of the surgeon's knife or the painful plaster.

TOWN AND COUNTY NEWS

Local Happenings Picked Up Here and There by the Times.

(NOTE—The Times requests its readers to contribute items of news to its columns. Anything that is phoned or sent in writing to the office, of a nature suitable for publication, will be received and published.—Ed. Times.)

—The streets are much in need of their annual cleaning.

—The trees are now budding quite rapidly.

—The tennis court at the Y.M.C.A. is now in shape for playing on.

—There should be a good market to-day, if the weather is settled.

—A determined attempt was made the other night to wreck the Lindsay fire hall.

—The Peterborough Canoe Co. are about to construct a new wharf at the boat house on Water street.

—The farmers are looking forward to a large harvest of fall wheat and clover, which, they say, has come through the winter in excellent shape.

—There will be a short gospel service at the Y. W. C. A. at 8 o'clock to-night. All young women are invited to attend.

—The open season for muskrats begins January 1st, and closes May 1st, but no muskrat shall be shot during the month of April.

—A large party of rivermen left for Minden yesterday in charge of Mr. George Jackson. They will bring down the Rathbun Company's drive of logs.

—Mr. Long will be back in his old store in a few days, and from all appearances it will be a first-class, up-to-date store. Jordan Bros. will occupy the store Mr. Long is now in.

—The steamer Beaver and barge arrived in town yesterday with a cargo of logs for the Matthews Co. The Beaver commences her regular Saturday trips to-day.

—Whiten makes the best crayon work in town. When you want large work done take your small pictures to Whiten. He will make work to suit you. Studio 158 Hunter street, west.

—If a few of the gratings in the pavements in front of the stores on George street, were lowered half an inch or more it might prevent a few accidents, and save a whole lot of cuss words.

—Mr. J. M. Brooks, the enterprising proprietor of the Palace Hotel, has recently had the front of the building very artistically decorated with a large number of colored incandescent lamps.

—Work will be started in a few days on another building at the Cereal Works. A large warehouse three stories in height, will be built from the south end of the partly completed building, south to Hunter street.

—Mr. J. H. Burnham has received a letter from Mr. J. S. Robinson, of the National Sanitorium Association, stating that the result of the efforts made in Peterborough to raise funds, is being watched with the deepest interest.

Anniversary Services

—The anniversary services of St. Andrews' church will be held May 4th. The Ladies' Aid Society has secured the services of Miss Wallace, of Toronto, elocutionist, to assist in their congregational reunion on the Monday following, May 5th.

ACKNOWLEDGED WITH THANKS

To the Editor of The Times:

Dear Sir,—On behalf of my son who is doing active service with the 2nd C.M.R. in South Africa, I wish to thank the Mayor and Town Council for a check for the sum of $25.00.

SOCIAL AND PERSONAL

Events Under This Head Transpiring in and around Peterborough.

(NOTE—The Times requests its readers to furnish the paper with items of a personal and social nature either by phone or in writing.—Ed. Times.)

—Hon. J. R. Stratton came down from Toronto last night, for Sunday.

—Miss Marion Hall has been confined to her room for the past week.

—Mr. H. H. Walls, of the Canada Printing Ink Co., was in town yesterday.

—Mr. F. M. Vanderwater was slightly indisposed yesterday, with a cold, but is better to-day.

—Mr. W. H. Russel, Reeve of Millbrook, has resigned his office, owing to ill health.

—Mr. J. P. Whitney and Mr. J. J. Foy spent a couple of hours in town yesterday, on their way to Hastings.

—Mr. R. J. Munro, proprietor of the Morgan House, went to Toronto yesterday, to attend the Horse Show.

—Mr. George Stevens, of Ashburnham, has returned from a business trip to a number of American cities.

—Miss Maud McFarlane and Miss Mabel Yeomans leave on the midnight train to-night, en route for South Africa.

—Rev. Mr. Wilson, of Knox College, Toronto, who was recently appointed assistant pastor in St. Paul's church, has arrived in town.

—Mrs. C. B. McAllister, of Ashburnham, has returned to her home after a pleasant visit to her parents in Renfrew.

—Mr. J. E. Noble, of Peterborough, has been appointed engineer, steamfitter and plumber in the Asylum for the Insane, Toronto. Mr. Noble will assume his new duties on May 1st.

—Mrs. W. R. Russell, of Quebec, accompanied by her two sons, Hartley and Jack, are visiting in town, the guests of Mrs. J. A. Hartley, Murray street.

—Mr. E. B. Edwards has been appointed a local representative of the University of Toronto, in the matter of the local examinations in music connected with that institution.

—T. G. Eastland, Warden of the County of Peterborough, Apsley; Mr. John Purser, of Burkhorn, and Miss Amy Kemp, Toronto, are guests at the Morgan House.

—We were delighted to have a call yesterday from our old friend, Hon. Dr. Pendry, of Brooklyn, N. Y., who, with Mrs. Pendry, is visiting relatives here. Dr. Pendry left Peterborough for Brooklyn about twenty years ago, where he has resided ever since, and where he has made his mark. He was for several years on the staff of The Times, which, no doubt, helped to qualify him for future usefulness and honors. He was elected some months ago to the State Legislature at Albany, and is now one of its leading and most progressive members. He will remain about a week.

Police Court Notes

Mr. Wm. Dell, of Auburn, preferred charges against five boys for destroying his fences. The case was heard in the Police Court yesterday morning, but the charge was not proven and the boys dismissed.

The Savings Bank of Health

Is lots of red and vitalizing blood to nourish and invigorate your body. If your blood is thin and watery use "Ferrozone." It supplies the necessary elements such as phosphorus and iron, and quickly restores lost strength and spirits. Ferrozone is an unequalled restorative for the tired, the sick and the rundown; it stimulates appetite, aids digestion, soothes the nerves, and makes the system too healthy for disease to exist. No tonic does so much good in a short time as Ferrozone. Get it to-day from any druggist for 50c. per box, or six boxes for $2.50. Sold by Ormond & Walsh.

To Discuss the Referendum

A union meeting of Mark street, Charlotte street and George street Epworth Leagues will be held in the Sunday School room of the George street Church on Monday evening next. Addresses on the Referendum will be delivered by Mr. H. P. Lindsay and others, and the present situation of the temperance question will be fully discussed and plans laid for the coming campaign. A short musical programme has been arranged and a thoroughly enjoyable and profitable evening is anticipated. A large attendance of those interested in the Temperance question, and members of the different temperance organizations is requested.

ON A TOUR OF INSPECTION

The Town Visited Yesterday by a Number of G. T. R. Officials

A number of prominent officials of the Grand Trunk Railway Company among whom were, Mr. Chas. M. Hayes, 2nd Vice-Pres.; Mr. F. W. Morse, 3rd Vice-Pres.; Mr. F. H. McGuigan, General Manager; Mr. J. W. Loud, Freight Traffic Manager; Mr. Jas. Hobson, chief engineer; Mr. W. R. Tiffin, Supt. of the Northern Division; Mr. A. White, District Freight Agent; Mr. D. W. Robb Supt. of Motive power, visited town yesterday morning. They came quite unexpectedly but we believe their trip was to inspect the lines in this district. They left for Port Hope enroute for Montreal.

A NEW BABY

Old One Made Over by Grape-Nuts

A delicious food that is nourishing for both mother and infant may be depended upon to fit other people. This mother's story is interesting:

"My baby is now a fine, robust little fellow two years and six months old, but I had a dreadful time with him at first. I could not nurse him because I was too weak I did not have the milk for him, so I gave him different kinds of foods, but he was crying nearly all of the time and would vomit after every meal.

His condition worked on my nerves dreadfully and I called in Dr. Campbell. After inquiring carefully into the case he said 'You send at once for some Grape-Nuts, take four teaspoonfuls in a cup of hot milk on going to bed, also feed your baby on some of the food in hot milk.'

Well, I followed the doctor's advice with good results at once. I could nurse my baby and he began to improve immediately. I, myself, got strong and well very rapidly.

The neighbors were, of course, interested and they would always say, 'How fast you are improving.' 'How the little boy grows.' 'He don't look like the same baby, what are you feeding him?' So I have to tell them one and all how Grape-Nuts have brought us both back to health. I wish other mothers knew of the value of this food."

PRESENTED WITH BIBLE

Miss Maude McFarlane Made the Recipient of a Most Useful Gift

At the conclusion of the preparatory service held in St. Andrew's church hall last night, the Rev. J. G. Potter on behalf of the Kirk Session, presented Miss Maud McFarlane with a beautiful copy of the Scriptures. The presentation was preceded with a brief address in which the pastor said that the Session considered it not only a duty and privilege, but a great honor to be associated with one going to engage in the very important work that had been laid out for the teachers being sent to South Africa, by the British Government.

The congregation united in singing "God Be With You till we Meet Again."

Miss McFarlane leaves to-night by the C.P.R. midnight express.

COUNTERFEIT MONEY

A Five Dollar Note of the Traders' Bank of Canada Has Been Counterfeited

A new counterfeit $5 note on the Traders' Bank of Canada has made its appearance. This new counterfeit is a photographic production and should not deceive the ordinary handler of money. It is of the issue dated July 2nd, 1897, signed D. Muir for the General Manager, and the counterfeit is numbered 43367, check letter D. The numbers of the genuine notes of bank are in blue, but those on the counterfeit have been traced in with red ink. Paper of good quality.

We Are Not Alarmists !

Would Simply Direct Your Attention to Serious Symptoms Experienced by Thousands

THEY TRULY INDICATE TERRIBLE AND DEADLY KIDNEY DISEASE

Paine's Celery Compound

HAS CURED THE MOST DESPERATE CASES AND WILL ASSUREDLY BANISH YOUR TROUBLE

While we would not play the part of alarmists, and seek to frighten people by declaring that a large majority of them are already victims of kidney diseases, and liable to be hurried into untimely graves by them, still the very noticeable increase of kidney diseases in recent years, and their virulent power, is a subject that is constantly engaging the attention of the ablest medical investigators.

Have you pain in the small of the back, of a dull, dragging nature, but often acute and severe? It is urine in a disordered state, sometimes, pale in color and very copious, at other times high colored and scanty, with brick sediment or with settling of mucous, offensive and foul smelling? Have you a general feeling of lassitude and weakness? Do you recognize the fact that you are unable to perform the same amount of mental or physical work that you got through with months ago?

Any one of the symptoms mentioned point unmistakably to deadly kidney disease in some form. Do not delay until it is too late. If you value life, begin this very day with Paine's Celery Compound; it is your only hope of success and safety. By the use of this wonderful remedy, tens of thousands are now enjoying perfect health who once were victims of treacherous kidney diseases. Read carefully the testimony of Mr. W. Davidson, Oliver street, Quebec. He says:

"It is with pleasure and gratitude I refer to your Paine's Celery Compound, and the wondrous blessings I received from its use. I had suffered for years from kidney and liver troubles and indigestion, and I decided to give Paine's Celery Compound a thorough testing. After a fair use of the Compound I am as well as ever I was, and all my troubles have disappeared. Your medicine is a wonderful one; it is far superior to all others and has truly given new life."

THE FORTNIGHTLY CLUB

The Subject for "Trusts" Fully Discussed by Prof. Shortt of Queen's University

Prof. Shortt, of Queen's University, Toronto delivered a very pleasing and instructive address on "Trusts" in the Y.M.C.A. hall last night before the Fortnightly Club and their friends. The lecture throughout was splendid and showed that the speaker was fully versed on the subject. The absence of notes also showed that he had given his most careful study to the subject. The attendance was small, owing, no doubt, to the several other attractions during the evening. Mr. R. F. McWilliams occupied the chair in his usual pleasing style. At the conclusion of the address a very hearty vote of thanks was tendered the speaker for his able address.

THE LATE H. L. BOYD

The Remains Sent to Bangor, State of Maine Last Night

The body of the late H. L. Boyd, who was found dead in room 30 at the Oriental Hotel on Thursday, was sent last night by C.P.R express to Bangor Maine. From the many telegrams received from the firm of Chase and Company, Boston, in whose employ deceased had been, and from his brother and wife it appears that the home of the deceased was in Bangor. The wife of the deceased has asked for full particulars relating to the death of her husband. Mr. Graham received instructions to have the body embalmed and forwarded at once. The physicians of town who have inquired into the case express the belief that he died of heart failure.

In an interview with Dr. Gray last night we learned that a well-known Toronto traveller who saw the notice in the papers relating to the sudden death of Mr Boyd, stated that he had been well acquainted with the deceased for some time. The deceased was a man who was very highly esteemed by those with whom he was acquainted. He had been suffering from a severe type of stomach trouble for some time and was not addicted to the use of strong liquor in any form. This information will dispel from many minds the impression that the deceased man was under the influence of liquor at the time of his death.

DO SHEEP DRINK?

To the Editor of The Times:

Sir,—Do sheep ever drink? I was reared on a farm, but in the winter the sheep were never watered, and I never saw them drink in the summer. They were often kept in dry pastures. A farm paper which I take has a picture of a sheep drinking at a brook, but it seems to me that the picture violates nature.

TO THE KLONDYKE

To the Editor of The Times:

Sir,—Can you or any of your readers kindly inform me the best route to Klondike? Also, is there an opening at any place for domestics, and about how much is the fare from New York?

K.

Ans.—Go to Vancouver, thence by steamer to White Horse, thence by rail to the Klondike. There is an opening for good servants, just as there is anywhere in the country.

BUTTERMILK FOR HEALTH

To the Editor of The Times:

Kindly print this clipping in "Letter Box," as it might be helpful to some.

J. B. S.

Warsaw, April 11, 1902.

THE USE OF BUTTERMILK

Buttermilk as a remedial agent can not be too highly praised. The lactic acid, the sour of the buttermilk, attacks and dissolves every sort of earthy deposit in the blood vessels. Thus it keeps the veins and arteries so supple and free running there can be no clogging up; hence, no deposits of irritating calcareous matter around the joints, nor of poisonous waste in the muscles. It is the stiffening and narrowing of the blood vessels which bring on senile decay. Buttermilk is likely to postpone it ten or twenty years if freely drunk. A quart a day should be the minimum; the maximum according to taste and opportunity. Inasmuch as gouty difficulties usually arise from sluggish excretion, buttermilk is a blessing to all gouty subjects. It generally stimulates all the excretories — liver, skin and kidneys. It also tones the stomach and furnishes it the material from which to make rich, red, healthy blood. If troubled with gout, avoid meat, sweets, pastry, wines, spices, hot rolls, bread of all sorts, and everything belonging to the tribe of ferments. Eggs, game, fresh fruit, vegetables, especially salads, may be eaten with impunity. If anyone has a creaky joint, or a swollen and aching one, he should drink all the buttermilk he can relish, whenever and wherever he can, but it should be fresh churned and wholesome.—Health Culture.

KRUGER'S LATEST PROPOSAL

London, April 12 — Mr. Kruger's proposition to cede the Witwatersrand gold region to Great Britain in exchange for Boer independence, indicates that the old gentleman still obstinately refuses to understand what the British are fighting for. It is characteristic of him to assume that every nation has its price. Great Britain has made tremendous sacrifices to maintain British supremacy in South Africa, and Boer independence is, unfortunately, incompatible with British supremacy. Before Mr. Kruger can hold any office again, in South Africa, he will have to take the oath of allegiance to His Most Gracious Majesty, and he ought to be grateful for the privilege.

Captain Gridley's Mother and Brother
Restored by Peruna.
"WHEN YOU ARE READY GRIDLEY—FIRE."

DEWEY'S FLAGSHIP OLYMPIA—CAPTAIN GRIDLEY, COMMANDER.

Mrs. Gridley, mother of Captain Gridley, who was in command of Dewey's flagship, at the destruction of the Spanish fleet at Manila, says of our remedy, Peruna:

"At the solicitation of a friend I used Peruna, and can truthfully say it is a grand tonic and is a woman's friend, and should be used in every household. After using it for a short period I feel like a new person."—MRS. GRIDLEY.

Mrs. Longstreet is the wife of the famous Confederate General, Lieutenant-General James Longstreet, the only living ex-Confederate officer of that rank. She writes as follows to The Peruna Medicine Co.:

"I can recommend your excellent remedy, Peruna, as one of the best tonics, and for those who need a good, substantial remedy, I know of nothing better. Besides being a good tonic it is an effective cure for catarrh."—Mrs. James Longstreet.

Hon. Lucius E. Gridley, brother of Captain Gridley, also speaks a good word for Peruna. In a letter written from 1511 T Street, Washington, D. C., he says:

The Peruna Medicine Co., Columbus, O.

Gentlemen—"Your Peruna has been thoroughly tested in my family. My mother and wife used it with the very best results, and I take pleasure in recommending it to all who want a good, substantial remedy, both as a tonic and a catarrh cure."—Lucius E. Gridley.

Miss Mary J. Kennedy, manager of the Armour & Co.'s exhibit, Trans-Mississippi Exposition, Omaha, Neb., writes the following in regard to Peruna, from 662 West Sixty-second street, Chicago, Ill.:

"I found the continual change of diet incidental to eight years' traveling completely upset my digestive system. On consulting several physicians they decided I suffered with catarrh of the stomach.

"Their prescriptions did not seem to help me any, so, reading of the remarkable cures perfected by the use of Peruna, I decided to try it, and soon found myself well repaid.

"I have now used it for about three months and feel completely rejuvenated. I believe I am perfectly cured, and do not hesitate to give unstinted praise to your remedy, Peruna."—Mary J. Kennedy.

Congressman Geo. W. Smith of Murphysboro, Ill., writes:

"I take pleasure in testifying to the merits of Peruna. I have taken one bottle for my catarrh and I feel very much benefited. To those who are afflicted with catarrh and in need of a good tonic I take pleasure in recommending Peruna."—Geo. W. Smith.

If you do not derive prompt and satisfactory results from the use of Peruna, write at once to Dr. Hartman, giving a full statement of your case and he will be pleased to give you his valuable advice gratis.

Address Dr. Hartman, President of The Hartman Sanitarium, Columbus, Ohio.

Peruna can be obtained for $1.00 a bottle at all first-class drug stores in Canada.

"The Ills of Life," which can be secured at all up-to-date drug stores, and upon request is sent free to all, gives a short description of all catarrhal diseases. Address Dr. Hartman, Columbus, Ohio, U. S. A.

100,000 NATIVES HAVE BEEN SLAUGHTERED

Since the American Conquest of War--Disease and Starvation Kill Thousands

CARNIVAL OF SLAUGHTER IN THE PHILIPPINES.

The Army has Either Demanded Absolute Submission or Has Given no Quarter—Expeditions Sent Out to Kill and Burn

Washington, April 12.—One hundred thousand inhabitants of the Province of Batangas, Luzon, have perished by war, disease and starvation since the American conquests of the Philippines This terrible charge is made by the acting governor of the province in a report to the Philippine Commission, the purport of which became known yesterday. Before the American occupation of the province there were 300,000 persons resident in the province, and now there are only two-thirds of this number. The acting governor, discussing the extirpation of loyal sentiment, says:

"I know that such a sentiment once existed. Of late, by reason of the conduct of the troops, such as the extensive burning of the barrios in trying to lay waste to the country so that insurgents cannot occupy it; the torturing of natives by so-called water cure and other methods, in order to obtain information; the harsh treatment of natives generally, and the failure of inexperienced, lately appointed lieutenants commanding posts to distinguish between those who are friendly and those unfriendly, and to treat every native as if he were whether or not, an insurrecto at heart, this favorable sentiment above referred to is being fast destroyed and a deep hatred toward us engendered. If these things need be done, they had best be done by native troops, so that the people of the United States will not be credited therewith. Almost without exception, soldiers, and also many officers, refer to natives in their presence as 'niggers,' and natives are beginning to understand what the word 'nigger' means."

Senator Patterson of Colorado said to-night that the reports of the acting governor of Batangas and Major Gardener, civil governor of Tayabas, showed a condition of affairs that was appalling.

"These reports and the charges made by Major Waller against General Smith establish that a most deplorable state of affairs exists in the Philippines," he said. "There has been simply a carnival of slaughter in the islands. The army has either demanded absolute submission or has given no quarter.

OTHER PROVINCES MENTIONED.

"General Bell's orders regarding the conduct of the war in Southern Luzon show that every man should be considered as an enemy who failed to prove that he was actively a friend. This was a license to the American troops sent out on expedition to kill and burn. Thirty days ago I would not have believed that American soldiers would act as these reports show. It seems to me some remedy should be applied, but I am fearful that nothing will be done.

"It is the purpose of the Senate Philippine Committee to ask the War Department for additional reports received by Secretary Root, which, it is stated, will show that other provinces have suffered as severely as Batangas and Tayabas."

AMERICAN MURDERERS

How Philippine Prisoners are Being Murdered by Americans

Special to The Times.

London, April 14 — At the trial of an American officer in Manila charged with "executing Filipinos without a trial," several officers swore that an American general ordered that all Filipinos over ten years of age were to be killed if captured. This is worse than anything the British have been charged with even by Boer fictionists, and it was sworn to by American officers. We really trust the United States press will find space for a few lines, sandwiched in between their double leaded denunciations of the cruel oppressors of the Boers, to register a gentle kick on the conduct of the war in the far east.

PROPHECY OF MORE REPUBLICS

President of Swiss Council Says Thrones are Tottering

Special to The Times.

Paris, April 12.—Many officials of France went to Berne, the capital of Switzerland, to witness the impressive ceremonies with which the two legislative bodies dedicated the new House of Congress. The edifice somewhat resembles the Capitol at Washington and cost $2,000,000. The architect, the decorators and the material were all Swiss.

Something of a stir was caused among the diplomats present by the prophecy of the President of the Federal Council that the next fifty years will surely see five or six more republics in Europe, several big monarchies being clearly tottering to their end.

FIRST CRIMINAL CASE

The First Criminal Case in Washington from Hawaii

Special to The Times.

Washington, D.C., April 14. — The first criminal case from the territory of Hawaii will come up for hearing to-day in the Supreme Court of the United States. The case is that of Osaki Mankichi, a Japanese resident of the Hawaiian Islands, found guilty of manslaughter, by a majority vote of the jury by which he was tried. This proceeding occurred in the interim between the surrender of Hawaiian sovereignty and the Act of Congress providing a government for the territory. The convicted man secured his release on a writ of habeas corpus, on the ground that the Hawaiian Islands were United States territory and that conviction by a majority vote of the jury was invalid. The case was then appealed to the Supreme Court by the territory.

JOHANNESBURG REVIVING

Hotels are Crowded and Gold Mining Resuming

Special to The Times.

London, April 14—A letter received from Johannesburg says that a large number of residents are returning every week, everybody is too busy to think about war, and all are sanguine that in six months from the present time the mining industry will be on as large a scale as it was when the mines were closed over two years ago. This town was never so busy as it is to-day.

If these sanguine expectations are realised 6,000 stamps will be at work before the end of the year and if they turn out gold as fast as before the war they will be producing at the rate of $80,000,000 a year.

The people in the Rand, however, feel perfectly certain that there is to be an enormous increase in the industry. They say there is not a particle of doubt from what is known of the mineral resources and the present plans for development that within five years there will be 17,000 stamps in operation. This would be nearly three times as many stamps as have ever been worked on the Rand.

This estimate of future growth may be extravagant, but it shows at least the confidence of the people in the future of the Rand, whose fallen fortunes they are now working with the utmost energy to restore.

MERCHANT SENT TO PRISON

W. J. Dennis Gets Nine Months for Theft—Robbed His Partner

Special to The Times.

Cobourg, April 12.—W. J. Dennis was yesterday found guilty of obtaining money by false pretences from his late partner, Daniel O'Leary. He was also found guilty on the charge of stealing a quantity of silk from F. L. Clarry, assignee for the benefit of creditors and was sentenced by Judge Benson on these two charges and on the charge of stealing goods from the assignee, of which he was convicted last Friday.

Before the sentences were pronounced the prisoner presented several petitions from farmers residing near Roseneath asking the court for clemency on account of his wife and children. His Honor, in passing sentence, stated that the crime was premeditated and well considered, and that it was in the interest of trade that crimes of this character should be dealt severely with. He would take into consideration the prisoner's previous good character.

Mr. A. J. Russel Snow, counsel on behalf of the creditors, urged the judge to deal severely with the prisoner, pointing out that a large quantity of goods had been taken by the prisoner and no restitution made.

The prisoner was sentenced to nine months in the Central Prison on the first charge, and on the other charges to three months, the sentences to run concurrently.

QUEEN SOON TO RETIRE

Her Majesty, the Queen of Spain, will Give Way to the Young King

Special to The Times.

Madrid, April 12.—As the young King of Spain will become of age in a little more than a month, people are talking about the prospects and fortune of Queen Christina, a princess imperial and archduchess of Austria, became the bride of Alfonso XII of Spain, she brought very little dower indeed to her husband. Nothing was settled upon her except a pension of $60,000 in the event that she should become the widow of Alfonso XII. As everybody knows, when she did become a widow, the queen declined to receive the pension during the minority of the successor of Alfonso XII. For the first time this year the Minister of Finance, in his estimate of the budget for 1902, has reminded the nation that the queen will have to receive the part of the pension corresponding to the period extending from May 17 to December 31, namely a little more than $31,000.

Singularly enough, the future Queen Dowager Christina will receive annually less than her own daughter, Princess of Asturias, who gets $100,000 a year, and less than her mother-in-law, ex-Queen Isabella II, who gets $750,000. The king's grand-father, Don Francisco de Asis, husband of Queen Isabella, gets $60,000, and the Infanta Isabel, aunt of the young king, $50,000 a year. In fact, in the Spanish royal family at the present time, only the king's maiden sister, Princess Maria Teresa, and his aunts, Dona Paz and Dona Eulalia, receive from the Spanish budget, less than the regent herself will receive when she hands over the reins of government to her son. It is not generally known abroad that since the war with America the queen regent has managed to make a gift to the nation of $200,000 a year out of the $1,400,000 that forms the civil list of the crown. Fortunately the queen regent has her own little private property in the summer palace of Miramar, in San Sebastian, which she built as soon as she came into a little money left to her by one of her Austrian uncles. There, if Alfonso XIII marries early, and his mother prefers to be independent, she may live quietly, facing the sea, she loves so well.

A BIG ARMY TO DEFEND CANADA.

Militia Reserve Force to be Created and Arsenals Established

RIFLE FACTORY AT QUEBEC.

Permanent Force to be Enlarged — The Statement Made by Hon. Dr. Borden

Special to The Times.

Ottawa, April 11. — Col. Borden, in explaining the militia estimates yesterday, made an important announcement respecting the measures which have been decided upon for increasing, arming, and rendering thoroughly efficient the force needed in Canada for purposes of defence.

The permanent force is to the increased from 1,000 to 1,500 men. A militia reserve will be created, enabling the total available defensive force to be augmented to 100,000.

In connection with the scheme of defence, the members of rifle clubs, which are being formed all over the country under the Act of last year will play an important part.

The proposal to extend the period of annual training to twenty-one, and even twenty-eight days, is difficult to accomplish, but it may be practicable to have twenty-eight days' training in three years.

The Dominion arsenal at Quebec is being extended so as to permit of an annual output of from two million to six or seven million rounds of ammunition, which in time of need could be increased to eighteen or twenty million. The necessity of a second arsenal in some other part of the country and of additional magazines with convenient centres in which to store the cartridges as they were manufactured, is not lost sight of.

The Government is equally alive to the importance of being able to supply the whole defence force with rifles and in accordance with the terms of a contract made between the Government and Sir Chas. Ross, the location of a factory, probably at Quebec, for the manufacture of small-arms, can be looked for at an early date. This factory will turn out from 12,000 to 15,000 rifles of a pattern which has stood a careful test by experts. The distribution of Lee-Enfield rifles to the rural regiments will proceed as speedily as possible.

The Minister spoke of the importance of having an effective staff at headquarters, and of having well-trained regimental officers. The shortening of the term of regimental command would insure a reserve of excellent senior officers.

NOT TO UNITE WITH AUSTRALIA

New Zealand has a Decided Opinion on the Subject

Special to The Times.

Montreal, April 11.—"There is not the slightest doubt that the people of New Zealand would strongly object to throw in their lot with Australia. While the relations between both countries are friendly and are likely to remain so, they will not become any more than that."

Such was the opinion offered by Mr. D. R. Caldwell, president of the Board of Trade of Aukland, New Zealand, who is in the city for a few days.

"Some time ago opinions were taken on the subject, and the project was opposed by the entire business community. It is generally felt that in time the small colony would be swallowed up by the big ones."

And the feelings towards preferential trade?

"The growing feeling in the colony is that some change is necessary, and that as far as New Zealand is concerned, the people are ready to give a preference to the Motherland, the same as Canada has already done. At the present time Great Britain takes 50 per cent. of our products, and there is no reason whatever why such a loyal colony should allow the United States to carry off all the trade, as it is claimed they do, from the Commonwealth of Australia. Up to the present, I have not been able to see clearly what would come out of the theory of Imperial preferential trade, but there is no doubt that when the premiers of Australia, Canada and New Zealand get together at the Coronation, an arrangement will likely be made by which better trade between these countries will be secured."

SEDDON AS A LEADER.

"And what of the experimental legislation that has been adopted in New Zealand.

"It has certainly proved a great experiment, and its results are being watched very closely both by the United States and the Continental countries of Europe. Delegations from the different countries have visited the country to study the Colonial Government. And as a semi-socialist leader, Premier Seddon has shown himself very powerful, for, while the business people generally opposed his party, he has had for the past nine years the entire support of the working classes, and this is what has enabled him to remain in power. And the Government has certainly given the country many good laws, even if a great many of them had a socialistic ring to them."

"Are you in a position to say that the new regime of Government in Australia has proved very successful?"

"As far as I can see, there has not been a great deal of enthusiasm over the new regime, and really if it were possible all the States would probably vote themselves out of the Union. All friction, however, will likely disappear in time, and the Commonwealth will be a closely united country.

POPE TO BE REPRESENTED

Cardinal Rampolla's Opposition to Attending Coronation

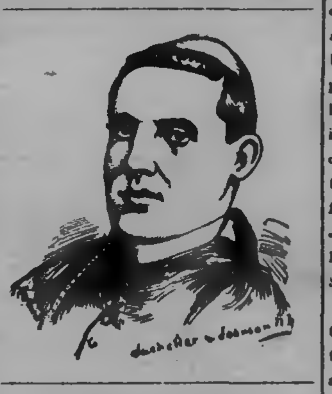
Overruled by His Holiness Pope Leo, and the Vatican

Special to The Times

Rome, April 14 — In spite of the opposition of Cardinal Rampolla, the Papal Secretary of State, the Pope has decided to send important special missions both to the coronation of King Edward and to the festivities in Spain attendant upon the enthroning of King Alphonso. The Cardinal's opposition to the sending of the mission to England was based on the fact that the British Parliament did not change the anti-Catholic formula of the Accession oath, and Monsignor Merry Del Val, whom the Pontiff designed to be chief of the mission, openly refused to go while the present wording of the oath is maintained.

Nevertheless, the mission will be sent and will probably arrive in London a few hours after the religious ceremony. This will be a repetition of the diplomatic manoeuvre carried out at the coronation of Czar Nicholas II at Moscow.

The question of the advisability of the Papal mission to Spain was due to the compromise effected by the Queen Regent in nominating the Spanish Ambassador to the Vatican as her representative at the Pope's Jubilee. It is understood Spain will send a grandee, with an important retinue, to specially invite the Pope to send a representative, who probably will be Cardinal Kannutelli or Cardinal Gretoni, both former Nuncios at Madrid.



AFFIRM THEIR LOYALTY

Will Wait Upon Governor and Disavow Sympathy with the Afrikanders

London, April 12.—A despatch from Cape Town to The Times says arrangements are being made for a number of leading Dutch colonists to wait upon the Governor to disavow sympathy with the Africander Bund and affirm their loyalty.

ALTERNATIVE OF BUTCHERS.

London, April 12.—The competition of the American Meat Trust has made the position so acute to English butchers that they are now face to face with the alternative of selling beef at a penny a pound or going out of business. In Birmingham prices for beef are prohibitive to the poorer classes. The seizure of tuberculosis infected meat without compensation has assisted Americans to get control of the market. English butchers by buying American beasts run less risk of finding it infected.

ASSURANCES GIVEN TO FRANCE.

London, April 12.—A despatch from Paris to The Times says that the scope of the dual alliance treaty did not originally include France. Russia, however, assured France, in order to induce her to reply to the British-Japanese agreement, that in case of need she would support her in Africa.

BRITISH STEAMER STRANDED.

London, April 12.—The British steamer Kinfauns Castle, homeward bound from the Cape of Good Hope, with 80 passengers on board, stranded off Bridgstone, Isle of Wight, at 2 o'clock this morning. The sea is calm, but the vessel's position is somewhat dangerous. The passengers and mails are being landed by tugs.

A STARTLING FIND

A House Filled with Plunder of All Kinds—Traced by Peculiarly Shod Horse

New York, April 12.—In the residence occupied by a man known as George T. Howard, at Ridgewood, N. J., the police have made a startling discovery. For two years Howard, his wife and a ten-year-old son have lived at Ridgewood, where the man was highly respected. He was known as a tea and coffee merchant, doing business in New York. Soon after his coming thefts began to occur in all the country surrounding. Horses and carriages were missed, freight depots were looted, and farmhouses and barns were burglarised promiscuously.

Finally, two horses and carriages were stolen from Muncy, N.Y. One of the horses wore a peculiarly shaped shoe, by which it was tracked for 20 miles, the trail ending in Howard's barn, where the property was found. Search warrants were at once issued The house was entered, and found to be filled with all sorts of plunder. Only Mrs. Howard was at home. Mr. Howard had disappeared, as also had the boy, who fled to Jersey City, where he was found and arrested; but in the meantime he had communicated with his father, and took his arrest with the greatest degree of composure, even smiling contemptuously at the police when they tried to make him tell where his father had gone.

Then the exploration of the house began. On the back porch was a nearly new road wagon. In the hallway was a new double sleigh. How it was put inside the door the police cannot explain. The house has fourteen rooms, and each room was strewn with goods. Three wagon loads of property were taken to the village lockup at Ridgewood, and as the available space in the lockup was filled officers were put in charge of the remainder of the stuff.

INCREASING RACE FEELING MAY DESTROY CANADA

French and English in Quebec Province Not Living Together as They Should

EXCEEDINGLY OMINOUS LOOKING FOR THE FUTURE

French Said to be Irritated by Imperialism—A Spirit of Toleration Needed in Canada

Special Telegram to The Times.

Montreal, April 14 — During the past week I have had an opportunity of learning from a Canadian of British origin—who is not in politics in any way, but whose position and whose relations with leading men on both sides of politics enable him to form an accurate opinion of present conditions in Canada—what he believes the outcome of the antagonism of race which has been engendered by the Boer war between British and French Canadians will be. He divides the population into three groups, Canadians, British and French; the second being the least numerous, but as a rule more British than the people of Great Britain themselves. The French he does not consider as having any leanings to reunion with France, but as aiming at establishing themselves as the dominant race and keeping themselves separate from the rest of the population by means of their language and religion. Among the British Canadians there is a desire to bring matters to a crisis before the rapid natural increase of the French over the British and their organization and affiliation with the French Canadians in the United States give them the political and material strength necessary to attain their object.

Disunion, he says, is the order of the day. Everything possible is being done to keep the British and French elements apart, socially, politically and commercially. The French language is becoming more exclusively used where, under the conditions of the Capitulation act, it can be enforced. Here in Montreal the Catholic religious authorities insist upon a complete separation of their people from the Protestants, whether in their social organizations, their hospitals, or even their amusements; and throughout the country, but especially in this province of Quebec, the same thing is going on. The migration of French to the West is being carried out systematically, and everything possible is being done to prevent their assimilation with the other nationalities. One instance of the determined antagonism shown by the French toward the British element was mentioned in connection with the recent provincial medical conference held at Quebec. The French language was used exclusively and it was proposed that the British and French Canadian doctors should form separate councils and that the latter should affiliate with the French Canadian Medical Association in the United States.

When I asked what the end of all this was going to be, the reply was "Civil war." At the same time he pointed out that the mass of the Canadians were anxious to avoid anything of the kind, but that the religious and race fanaticism of the extreme British and French was working to bring it on, and that one side was as deaf to reason as the other. Imperialism, he believed, had overreached itself in Canada and there was no longer the same enthusiasm on the subject that there was, even among its more ardent adherents. The British population of the country increases but slowly compared with the French, and none but British volunteer for South Africa, the French looking on their departure with satisfaction. The indiscreet utterances of the British Colonial Secretary, Mr. Joseph Chamberlain, regarding the rigors of the climate of Canada when he endeavored to persuade the Welsh emigrants to Patagonia to turn to South Africa, also helped to chill imperial sentiment.

"What I want to see in Canada," the Canadian I spoke with said, "is the cultivation of a spirit of toleration all round, and a Canadian national feeling, leaving to time the eradication of the artificially stimulated antagonisms that now destroy harmony and threaten the peace and progress of the country. The religious feuds of Ontario, the racial struggle in Quebec, and the general narrow-mindedness in the Maritime Provinces, are responsible for this state of things, as they give mischief-makers in Canada and Great Britain the opportunity to meddle in its affairs and to prevent the consolidation of Canada as an independent State, certain, sooner or later, to cast off its political connection with Great Britain.

Items of Interest

London, April 12—It is understood that King Edward is taking advantage of his cruising holiday to complete the task of setting the list of honors to be conferred upon the occasion of his coronation. The list, which will probably fill four or five newspaper columns, will include a dukedom for Lord Salisbury and peerages for Sir Edward J. Poynter, the artist, and Right Hon. William Edward Hartpole Lecky, the historian.

London, April 12—A correspondent from the London Times, writing from Bloemfontein, says: 'But the supreme instrument of unconscious reconciliation is the system of free education admirably organized and indefatigably carried out under the supervision of Mr. Sargeant, the very able Director of Public Education for the two colonies. Mr. Sargeant has devoted himself with whole-hearted enthusiasm to the work. He began with about 100 teachers for the camp schools. He has now 200. Before the end of the year he hopes to add another 100 to his staff. Some of these teachers are Dutch; the latest importations are chiefly Scotch. The next batch will be English, Scotch and colonial. In every camp there are schools in proportion to the number of child refugees. Instruction is given in English, and in some of the lower classes an important part of the work consists in teaching the children to speak English. There are actually in the camps, keenly profiting by the opportunities of English education, a larger number of children than ever figured before the war on the Dutch school rolls. I have not before me the total numbers for the two colonies combined, but for the Orange River Colony alone the number now attending the camp schools—and attending with an unusually high average of regularity—is about 11,500 children, whereas the greatest number on the Dutch school rolls before the war was 9,500. In other words, the entire young population of the colony is for the time being under English tuition."

Lockport, N. Y., April 12.—Buffalo recently boasted that it had a five-generation family which was the prize winner. The Buffalo family contained a great-great- grandfather aged ninety-three, and a great-great-grandchild aged ten months.

Niagara county can heavily discount the Buffalo family. The Niles family living in the village of Newfane, town of Newfane, boasts five generations embraced within the remarkably short period of eighty-seven years. The head of the house is Francis Niles, hale and hearty at eighty-seven. His daughter is Mrs. James Matthews, a remarkably well preserved woman of sixty-two. The third generation in the remarkable family group of five generations is Mrs. Daniel Miller, her daughter, who is now forty-two years old, but she is called grandmother. Mrs. Miller's daughter is Mrs. Alice Lake, 22 years old. Her daughter the fifth link in the family chain, is pretty little Ethel, now three years old At her birth the five generations were really embraced in eighty-four years, for that was her great-great-grandfather's age at that time. Should she marry as young as her mother did and have a child born to her at her mother's age, Francis Niles would be, if alive, a great-great-great-grandfather, the head of six generations living at the age of 106.

Vancouver, B. C., April 12. — The tawny redskins who hunt among the mountains around Fort George, 200 miles north of the Cariboo gold district, have gone on the warpath against the handful of whites around the Hudson Bay station. The first news of the uprising was in message from the telegraph station at Quesnelle to obtain military assistance.

The despatch explained that the Indians had been troublesome all winter and two weeks ago they made an open attack on the post. The factor and his assistant, named Cook had been warned and, having barricaded themselves, kept the Indians away. No one was killed, although shots were fired by the white men and their helpers over the heads of the natives to scare them away.

The Indians have had a hard winter, and refused to furnish pelts in trade. One Indian, bolder than the rest, got inside and threatened to kill Kepner with an ax if he did not throw open the store to them. Finally Kepner got them quieted, and, leaving his assistant in charge, started out for help.

A TRIBUTE FROM OVER THE BORDER

Dominion soldiers have earned and secured much glory as participants on behalf of England in the South African war, says the Detroit Free Press. Wherever placed they have met the highest requirements of duty and in actual conflict displayed the superb bravery that distinguishes a dominant race. Even the critics in the mother country make candid admission that the most intelligent and efficient soldiery enlisted for the empire in this struggle came from among our neighbors across the border who tendered their services at the beginning and have voluntarily come forward with more men as the emergencies of the protracted strife demanded. Some of the sons of Australia have disgraced her beyond forgiveness but in all their relations the men from the Dominion have been the ideal soldier. The latest example of this is told in the story from the neighborhood of Hart's river. In the severe fighting of a whole day the Canadian Rifles were in the thick of the ruck from the beginning to the end. One party of these gallant boys held an impossible position until every member was killed or wounded. Not while there was a shot to be fired from among them was the cessation of resistance thought of. It was not in itself a history-making tragedy, but the annals of war can show nothing finer in the way of superb courage.

EDITORIAL NOTES

Kruger is now said to be so far favorable to peace as to be willing to give up the gold region if the Boers would be given rule over the rest of the country. It won't work. Kruger will never again rule a foot of South Africa. The interests of civilization forbid it.

* * *

Unless the good right hands of Canada's pretty school ma'ms have lost their vigor since the not distant days of our youth, we think the rising portion of the Boer population will know when they have been licked.

MUNICIPAL CRITICISM

At the beginning of the present year a western Ontario city elected its municipal council on strictly political lines, says the Ottawa Citizen. In discussing the new departure, we expressed the opinion that it would probably be of advantage to the public to have some responsible advisory body such as the executive of a political party who would feel an interest in and a measure of responsibility for the proper administration of municipal business by the majority of a council. Under the present system each alderman is only responsible to the mass of the ratepayers of his ward and except under extreme conditions which might call for the holding of an indignation meeting of his supporters there is no means of impressing upon the individual alderman the views of his constituents on any important measure which may come up during the year. Many aldermen are, no doubt, misled by interested wire-pullers, who claim to represent the views of the ratepayers, into giving votes which as a matter of fact are opposed to the interests and opinions of the large mass of the ratepayers whom they represent. What is everybody's business is nobody's business, and as the wire-pullers are active and the body of the ratepayers have no medium for making their views felt, the aldermanic representative, especially if inexperienced, is prone to mistake the voice of the smooth wire-puller for the only reliable vox populi. If some outside organization were indirectly responsible, or interested in seeing that the majority of the council conducted business in a manner satisfactory to the public, we believe that municipal business would be conducted in a better manner.

A striking instance of this has recently been afforded in Ottawa. Two labor representatives were elected to the council last January. The municipal record of one of these aldermen has been excellent; that of the other not so satisfactory on several important votes. Under ordinary conditions the latter would pursue the uneven tenor of his way undisturbed except by occasional jolts from the newspapers until he presented himself to the big "silent vote" next January for re-election. Then he would hear when the returns were read out exactly what the ratepayers, as distinguished from interested advisers, thought about his votes in council. but the Allied Trades and Labor Association was instrumental in bringing out and nominating these candidates and that body feels a measure of responsibility for their course in the council. At the last meeting of the association the executive presented a report dealing with municipal matters and the discussion which ensued embodied some very pointed criticism of the alderman in question. The association has no axes to grind. It is out for the public interest and is desirous that its nominees should pursue a course satisfactory to the ratepayers. It is probable the alderman will take the advice tendered into his serious consideration and will be more careful in future. Not only so but other aldermen to whom the labor vote means much will take the hint, so that the action of the association will be of advantage to the ratepayers by direct application and ricochet.

If one of the political parties were responsible in a similar sense for the successful administration of affairs by a majority of the council the same result might follow, though the admonition might be administered with less publicity but with even greater effect.

Dr. Chaillu's Animals.

In a long review of Paul Du Chaillu's "The World of the Great Forest," The Spectator, London, declares the book's only fault is the failure to supply all the details the reader wants to know about its furred and feathered heroes and heroines.

"Do the hippopotami of the West Coast river really go across country for a swim in the Atlantic on moonlight nights?" asks The Spectator. "Where is the 'land of plenty' to which the monkeys migrate? What are the fish which regularly travel up the rivers from the sea in the dry season to spawn? Where is the place where the forest eagles cross that great continent to rear their young? These questions are among many suggested by the book.

"The description of the bathing of the 'hippo' 'trippers,' from their cautious entry into the sea to their return at 4 a.m., 'when each family went back to its shoal,' hardly bears quoting, but the idea is novel and amusing. The illustrations of the life of these creatures and of their seaside party by Mr. Gleeson are really admirable.

"The native names of most animals are short. An exception is that of the great forest eagle, the monkey-eater. It is one of the crested hawk-eagles, of which the native name is 'guanionien.' The difficulties of these birds' life when monkeys are scarce; their power of soaring to such vast heights as to be invisible to the monkeys, and of dropping down from the blue, whence their keen eyes see the monkeys on the tree-tops, of their hovering over the tops of certain trees on which fruit grows which the monkeys will probably come to gather—are all fresh and vivid."

A Canadian Herd Record.

The following letter is published by Hoard's Dairyman :—

Enclosed you will find a brief report of our dairy of twelve cows for the year 1901 :—

No. lbs. milk for year..........	62,596
No. lbs. cream from same......	8,560
No. lbs. skim milk	54,036
Cream was shipped to Montreal and averaged me about 78 cents a gallon of 10 lbs., or.	$670.80
54,036 lbs. skim milk, 20 cents..	108.07
Total...	$778.87
Average milk per cow..	5,216 lbs.
Average money per cow	$64.90
Average of milk per hundred lbs.	$1.24½

You will see that I value the skim milk at 20 cents per hundred. I consider it worth this to me to feed at home. My cows are grade Durhams and Jerseys. We have a silo; have used it seven years, and consider it the cheapest feed we can raise here. Had about four acres last season, and had 65 double loads to put in silo. Thought we had nearly 80 tons. Am feeding it twice a day in winter, and find our cows do just as well. I have water in stable. Cows have only been out once this winter. Stable is well lighted, and has a ventilator in it. Cellar under stable, and in this way think we save the liquid manure.

A.E.H.

Richmond, Que.

Give the Cows Sunlight.

The one thing that we think quite as important to them as either fresh air or exercise is that of which they are most frequently deprived in the old-fashioned stables of those who believe in having them out of doors during the day, and it may be that it is so necessary to their well-ing that a few hours' outing may do them good enough to counterbalance the injury done by being out in the cold.

Sunlight is as necessary to the thrifty and healthy growth of animals as of plants. Every stable or place where they are kept should be well lighted upon the south side, not only by having plenty of glass, but that glass kept clean enough to allow the sun to penetrate it freely. We have seen glass so opaque with cobwebs and dirt as to admit only enough light to allow one to grope his way about in semi-darkness. The "dim religious light" of the ancient and some modern churches is not good enough for a barn. We do not care for blue glass or other stained glass, but want a clear, clean, transparent glass, that will let in the full rays of the sun. Even double sashes of glass now cost but little more for the space they occupy than the siding and painted clapboards, or a single sash with a curtain to shut out the cold at night.

Not every one can afford new barns with the modern improvements, but many old ones could be so changed at small expense as to make the stables much warmer and lighter, and when this is done they will be found a better place for dairy cows than the barnyard when the temperature is below freezing or when there is a cold wind or rain.—Massachusetts Ploughman.

Almost ever since Bloemfontein has been captured a theatrical company has been playing there without intermission, and has been doing a good business.

The fruit grower should know every tree in his orchard, and he should go over the orchard frequently and satisfy himself that everything is favorable to the trees. Some trees may be backward in growth and he should endeavor to learn the cause. It may be due to a lack of plant food in the soil, to the pruning, to too much grass, to the mode of cultivation, or to insects; but a thoroughly competent fruit grower will discover the cause if possible, and remove it.

drawn from the udder as the last. In experiments made to test the matter it was found that the difference was so great that with some cows the strippings consisted almost entirely of butter fat. It is important, therefore, that milking the cows be done in a thorough manner, leaving nothing in the udder. If this is done the cow will not be so liable to become dry as soon as when the milk is not entirely removed at each milking. The practice of carefully stripping also serves as a check upon careless milkers, as the farmer can, and should, examine each cow after she is milked in order to observe if the milking has been done thoroughly. Where there is no supervision the milking is sometimes performed carelessly and at a loss to the farmer.

For the Farmer.

Poultry Ailments and Remedies.

For Roup—Separate the sick from the well, put former in warm, dry quarters, inject camphorated sweet oil into their nostrils and throat. Give fresh water and nourishing food.

For frosted wattles or combs, prepare a salve of vaseline (one pound), spirits of turpentine, kerosene, oil of tar, and oil of sassafras, one spoonful each.

To prevent egg eating in fowls, make a paste of flour, red pepper, mustard and water; put into some empty egg shells, and place them where the hens will find them. One dose is enough.

For feather-pulled fowls, make an ointment of lard and sulphur, and rub on the bare spots if the feathers have come out because of parasites. There is no "positive cure" for fowls that pull feathers except the hatchet applied to the neck.

What is frequently supposed to be cholera is nothing more or less than indigestion. It may be caused by feeding too concentrated feeds and lack of grit and the drinking of impure water. Sharp grit is a necessity, and oyster shells furnish it.

Leg weakness is brought about largely by an unnatural forcing system. It is sometimes caused by improper feeding, lack of exercise, lack of variety in foods, dampness and cold. The converse of all this is the remedy

Colds are prevalent in fowls at this time of year. Coughing, sneezing and watery eyes and nostrils are sure indications. A simple cold can be dealt with effectually by putting the fowl in a warm place, and giving small doses of castor oil, say a scant teaspoonful. Canker is the worst form of cold or roup. Give water to drink into which a few drops of a solution of copperas has been put. Give no hard grain. A real case of roup is incurable, and the fowl might as well be killed first as last. It doesn't pay to doctor it unless worth its weight in gold. —Agricola.

Turkeys For Profit.

Mr. B. L. Davis, Meshoppen, Penn., writes to The New York Tribune Farmer :—

I have been fairly successful in raising turkeys for profit, and this is my method: I raise my own hens, keeping from four to six, and always selecting the finest specimens. I never mate them akin, but purchase the finest bronze gobbler I can get, keeping him until two years old. When it is time for them to begin laying, which is usually about April 1, I watch them carefully, as they are very sly about hiding their nests; but they are never lousy if permitted to do so. I gather the eggs every day, marking each one with date, keeping in a cool place and turning twice a week. I do not keep them longer than four weeks before setting. I have learned by experience that June is the month for turkeys, the weather being dry and warm, which is essential for them.

I do not allow them to set the first time they are broody. They break up easily and will begin laying within ten days. When the turkey wants to set the second time, I fix the nest carefully, giving her eighteen eggs, covering some brush over to protect from crows. At the same time I set a hen on nine eggs, giving all the poults to the mother turkey. They hatch in twenty-eight days, and must not be disturbed while hatching.

When the poults are twenty-four hours old remove them carefully from the nest so as not to injure them (for they are very tender or frighten the mother, and place them in a triangular pen made from three boards 12 inches in width and 14 feet in length, placed in the orchard, where they will get the morning sun and the shade during the hottest part of the day. I feed the mother corn or buckwheat night and morning, and the little turkeys stale bread soaked until soft in sweet milk, with a dash of black pepper every other day. I squeeze the bread dry, only putting down a little at a time on a clean board, and taking care not to feed to much, as it will cause bowel trouble.

While in the pen I feed them four times a day—at 5 o'clock in the morning, at 10, at 2 and at 7 in the evening, supplying them with crushed eggshells, pure sweet milk and water at all times. I keep them in the pen until they are strong enough to jump out, which will be in from ten days to two weeks. After this feed mostly cornbread in the same way as the white, but only twice a day—early in the morning and in the evening—and let them roam at will; but if they are not at their feeding place by 6 o'clock I hunt them up, as I always feed them in the same place. They soon learn to come of themselves. As they grow older I give crushed oyster shells in place of eggshells. When ten weeks old they will need feed only evenings.

How Long to Keep the Dairy Cow.

The answer is short to the question, "How long should a dairy cow be kept?" Keep the cow only so long as she pays a gratifying profit. If no record is kept of profit and loss on the farm, neither man nor beast will get credit for services rendered. Every animal should have a ledger standing account. Even justice to man and beast alike is honorable. The farmer's methods in bookkeeping are not always commended by expert accountants. Business demands system, and that system must be correct. When the leaf is turned over in correct bookkeeping, the profitless live stock will be got rid of at the earliest possible moment. Profitless stock is the heaviest tax the farmer, dairyman and breeder is imperiously called upon to pay. The tax on real estate in comparison is only a feather weight in the balance. The farmer's son should be sent to a business college, if only for three months. The investment will pay a good interest for life.

It is more than probable that men who keep no profit and loss on stock have mortgages to pay interest on—that perpetual source of annoyance. No man of fine feelings lives as long or is so happy under the strain of interest paying as he who is free from debt. Small incomes pay off debts too slowly for much joy. Possession without debt is ennobling to manhood, and a rich mine of happiness for the home. Milk the cow only so long as she is profitable, then quickly turn her into beef and cash. —H., in New York Tribune.

Mr. Youngwed—Do you mean to say you are 24 years old to-day? Why, you told me six months ago, just before the wedding, that you were only 21.

Mrs. Youngwed—Yes, I know; but, my dear, I've aged so rapidly since we were married.

Mrs Crawford—How did you enjoy your ocean voyage? Mrs. Crabshaw—It was just lovely. The state-room seemed so comfortable after living in a flat.—"Town Topics."

A Mother To Mothers.

"I am the mother of five children," writes Mrs. S. E. Rose, of Big Otter, West Va., "and have been as high as eight days in the doctor's hands, and never less than two days with any child until the last. Then I had used two bottles of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription and was only two hours in the hands of the doctor."

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is a woman's medicine. It cures diseases of the womanly organs. It is a wonderful medicine for mothers, making the baby's advent practically painless and giving abundant strength to nurse and nourish the child.

TOBACCO, LIQUOR AND DRUGS

Dr. McTaggart's tobacco remedy removes all desire for the weed in a few weeks. A vegetable medicine, and only requires touching the tongue with it occasionally. Price $2.

Simply marvelous are the results from taking his remedy for the liquor, morphine and other drug habits. Is a safe and inexpensive home treatment; no hypodermic injections; no publicity; no loss of time from business, and a certainty of cure.

Prince Henry frequently surprised his American companions on his recent tour by his knowledge of the idioms and slang of our language. The climax was reached on Monday on the train returning from Philadelphia, where his Royal Highness had inspected the magnificent Russian battle ship Retvizan. The Prince suddenly leaned over to Admiral "Bob" Evans, and, with a merry twinkle in his eye, said:—

"Admiral, this certainly is a most wonderful country—where even the physical ailments of the people win a European's admiration."

Evans, with a puzzled look, replied, "I beg your pardon, but I don't quite catch your meaning."

"Why," the Prince replied, with a broad smile, "we Europeans would be only too glad to have American Cramps!" —New York Times.

"Hi sy, you know," said the Cockney, addressing the Bowery boy, "we cawn't be henemies; we 'ave to be brothers. We speak the same lyangwydge, you know."

"Wot t'ell. Holler for an interpreter. You're wuzzy. I seen you batten your eye. Git propper. Git propper.—Chicago Tribune.

A certain pompous and officious judge in a western town had just fined a young lawyer $10 for contempt of court. After it had been paid a grave old attorney walked up to the bench and laid down a $10 gold piece.

"What is that for?" asked the Judge.

"For contempt, your Honor," was the reply.

"But I didn't fine you for contempt," answered the Judge. "There must be some mistake."

"Oh, no, there isn't," replied the old man. "I have cherished a secret contempt for this court for a long time, and I'm willing to pay for it."—Chicago News.

Cover Crops and Fertilizers.

Prof. I. P. Roberts of Cornell University says:—Cover crops may in a measure take the place of fertilizers and manures. They are not, however, a universal panacea for all soil deficiencies, neither are they a full substitute in all cases for fertilizers. There is always a wide field for the profitable use of one or all of the concentrated forms of fertilizers named, and in many cases there is also a special place for the use of fertilizers, therefore the more need of honest goods. Commercial fertilizers furnish available plant food, but no humus. The cover crop furnishes both, but it is only fair to say that the plant foods in the former are more available than in the latter. Cover crops improve the physical condition of the soil, lessening the cost of tillage. Physically, fertilizers benefit the soil little or none. The humus furnished by the cover crops increases the availability of the plant food already in the soil; fertilizers do not. Cover crops shade the land and conserve moisture.

It is impossible to accurately compare the cost of fertilizers with the cost of seeds for the cover crops and the preparation of the soil for them. The cost of increasing productively by extra tillage, by the use of fertilizers, by cover crops or by all three means, can only be determined in each case by the farmer interested. I give below a single illustration of what a cover crop contains, knowing that another cover crop under other conditions might either be more or less valuable. Second growth of clover, furnished in roots and tops per acre the following:—Nitrogen, 138.96 lbs.; phosphoric acid, 67.25 lbs.; potash, 199.96 lbs. There is removed by 25 bushels of wheat and accompanying straw, nitrogen, 43 lbs.; phosphoric acid, 20 lbs., and potash, 27 lbs. It is believed that most of the nitrogen taken up by legumes is secured from the uncombined nitrogen in the atmosphere. The clover did not add to either the store of phosphoric acid or potash. The plant took them from the soil and made them available.

Curious Bits of News.

A minister in a Kansas town recently adopted a novel scheme for bolstering up the church collection, which had been diminishing. He informed his congregation, just before the plates were passed around, that the members who were in debt were not expected to contribute. The collection that day was double the usual sum.

It really turns out that the population of France has increased three times more rapidly during the past five years than it did during the preceding five, and, consequently, the recent French census is regarded as unexpectedly favorable, notwithstanding that the rate of increase has been extremely low. It is important, if the decline has passed the deepest point of depression.

The oyster trade of England has fallen in ten years from an annual total of fifteen million dollars to two and one-half millions. Sewerage schemes carried out by town boards resulted in flooding the oyster beds with sewage, and several deaths ensued from eating poisonous oysters. The alarm became widespread, and the figures quoted show the disaster brought upon the trade.

It is evident that one of the popular superstitions had no hold on the designer of Uncle Sam's silver twenty-five-cent piece. In the words quarter-dollar are thirteen letters. Thirteen letters compose E Pluribus Unum. In the tail of the eagle are thirteen feathers, and in the shield are thirteen lines. There are thirteen stars and thirteen arrow-heads, while, if you examine the bird through a microscope, you will find thirteen feathers in its wing.

According to the Birmingham "Daily Gazette," an extraordinary character has just passed away in a Carmarthenshire gentleman named Evans. Mr. Evans devoted his life to witnessing hangings, making the acquaintance of executioners, and collecting relics of murderers. In the early days of public hangings he would travel any distance to see a man "turned off." He was so fascinated by the business that on the death of Calcraft he applied for his post. As this was not granted, he set up a gallows in his own house and invited his friends to test the noose.

Exploration, says "Science Siftings," has now revealed relics of Menes, the founder of Egyptian monarchy, fashioned more than sixty-five hundred years ago. Of Zer, the successor to Menes, it is astonishing to find the forearm of his queen still in its wrappings, with four splendid bracelets intact. This brilliant and exquisitely finished group of jewelry is two thousand years older than the jewelry of Dahshur, the oldest up to then known. The arm of the queen had been broken off by the first plunderers, and had lain hidden in a hole in the wall of the tomb.

Two curious cases of the use of the magnet in surgery are attracting some attention. Dr. Garel of Lyons, France, has drawn a nail about two inches long from the bronchial tube of a boy of eighteen months from Buenos Ayres. The nail had been there for some time, causing the child to cough much. Roentgen rays showed the position of it, and an electro-magnet drew it out. Another successful operation of the same kind has been performed by Dr. Piechaud of Bordeaux, on a child of three years. In this case the trachea was opened to get a projection from the pole of the magnet near the nail.

Too Great a Risk.

"I'm going to give up the business," said a life insurance agent with a sigh, whom the Detroit "Free Press" encountered. "I don't care whether they meant it for a joke or not. It's a hard life, and people have no business trying to be funny at my expense.

"I have always prided myself upon my ability to land a man when once I succeeded in getting his attention. But I had a new experience the other day. I was working hard to convince a party that it was his duty to take out some of our insurance upon his life for the protection of his family, and I saw that I had him wavering, when I had to pause for breath, and he broke in with:

"'By the way, how much do you carry on your life?'

"While I, taken unaware by the abruptness of the question, was stammering a reply, he escaped. The incident set me to thinking. I had induced hundreds of men to insure their lives for the benefit of their families, and yet I had never thought far enough to carry any insurance upon my own life. It didn't look consistent, now that I had come to consider the question, and I resolved to remedy it at once. To think is to act with me, and I sat down and filled out an application at once for a good round sum.

"I got the application back to-day marked, 'Refused—occupation too dangerous.' The next paper they get from me will be my resignation."

DAISY GORDON'S FOLLY

—OR—

The World Lost for Love's Sake

By Laura Jean Libbey

Author of The Crime of Hallow-E'en, The Flirtations of a Beauty, Willful Gaynell, Little Leahy, Only a Mechanic's Daughter but the vision of a fair face framed in sunny, golden hair which he caught but an imperfect outline of, haunted him—he could not tell why.

Swiftly the cab which bore Daisy rolled on through the sunlit streets, but it seemed to her darkness reigned.

Of course Harold St. John had recognized her as she rose from her seat and hurried away; surprise must have held him spellbound for a moment, then he must have gone in search of her; he was searching for her even then.

What should she do? That was the agonized cry of her heart.

When she reached the hotel a sudden faintness seized her; what if she should meet her foe in the corridors. He would cry out in a voice like a bugle blast:

"I have found you at last—you are mine—you shall go with me!"

Oh, the horror and disgrace of it; what would Aleck do if he knew?

Trembling with excitement she gained her own suit of rooms; she met no one; she thanked heaven for that.

"How white and ill you look, my lady," cried Janet, springing to her side. "You should not have gone out alone."

"Has any one —called for me—any one been here to see me?" asked Daisy, asking the question with apparent calmness, but the girl could detect a subdued intentness in her voice.

"A stranger called —who refused to leave his card," she answered, telling the falsehood boldly; but she was greatly dismayed at the effect upon her mistress.

Daisy threw up her hands with the bitterest moan that ever fell from human lips.

"At last—the sword has fallen at last!" she muttered.

"Did he say he would call again?" Daisy asked with a most piteous quiver in her voice.

"Yes; and soon," replied the girl, boldly.

Sending her maid from the room, for an hour or more she paced the floor in an agony of mind words are too weak to describe.

"I cannot see him," she muttered. "I must write to him all that I have to say."

"Would that my pen was a dagger," she moaned, as she seated herself before her writing- desk. "I would plunge it through my heart and end it all. The world is narrowing down to a grave."

The lines seemed to waver before her tear-blinded eyes; but with a desperate effort she began her letter, which ran as follows:

"Harold St. John, the hour has come in which we have stood face to face at last. You have hunted me down, I can but confess all now, and then die, for death would be preferable to going with you.

"You wooed and won me through the most cruel of frauds; but I never loved you—I realized that but too plainly as we stood before the altar together. I will not dwell upon how cruelly you deserted me then and there, nor the horrible scene that followed on the heels of it, for you remember all but too well.

"I will confess the truth now, taking the consequence of my folly in my own hands. I learned to love another, and thinking the past would never be found out, I married.

"If you part me from my love it will kill me. There is no love between you and me. There never was. For this reason I pray you to spare me— spare me because I am so young to face and live down the world's scorn. Have pity, have mercy. Go your way and let me go mine, I implore you."

She could write no more, her tears fell so thick and heavy on the page.

Should she send it or should she not? Would her prayers or pleadings touch his heart? She thought not.

No, she would not sue for mercy—she would stand bravely and face the sword as it fell on her head. She crushed the letter in her hand and flung it from her, then it suddenly occurred to her that it would be best to destroy it, but how?

If she should tear it into shreds and trust it to the breeze, into whose hands might the fragments fall? "Ah, no, there was too much of a risk in that," she told herself.

Then it occurred to her that the safest way would be to burn it. Yes, that was the only way.

She gave the bell-rope a violent pull, and when her maid entered, she startled the girl by ordering a fire started in the grate.

"A fire?" repeated the girl, in wonder, looking at her strangely.

"Yes," said Daisy, nervously.

"But," objected the girl, "it is so warm —it is quite a hot day. I am afraid the heat will be too much for you."

"I am as cold as death," said Daisy, shuddering.

It was a strange thing to order a fire built on a September day. "It was unnatural," the maid told herself.

Still the fire was lighted; but it went out. Three or four attempts proved quite unsuccessful.

"How bent she is upon having a fire," thought the girl. "There is an air of mystery about it— yes, it looks as though there was something she wished to burn." At last a bright flame burst out, and the fire gave promise of burning, and the maid quitted the room.

Daisy secured the door, then knelt down before the grate, separated the glowing coals, and placed the paper which bore such pitiful evidence against her between them.

She shook it from her white hands as though it had been the clammy coils of a serpent, and gazed at it with fascinated eyes; the heat seemed to shrivel and harden it instead of burning it.

A moment more and the flames seemed to have claimed it, and as the thick, dark smoke enveloped the crumpled ball, she turned away.

And in that instant she heard her maid calling at the door:

"Oh, my lady, my lady, open the door—quick! I want to speak to you."

With trembling fingers, Daisy flung open the door.

Janet's cunning eyes took in the startled expression of face; also the curling, smoking, blackening mass in the grate at first glance.

"Oh, my lady!" she panted, "you should come down to the parlor at once. Mr. Hamilton has just come in, and he looks so white I am sure he is ill. He fell back into a chair,

Light Hogs.

A good many farmers in eastern Ontario are still adhering to the very foolish policy of marketing hogs that are too light in weight, and quite unsuitable for packing purposes. The Geo. Matthews Co., Limited, report that during the month of January their receipts of hogs graded as follows:—Selects, 1,398; light, 1,840; light fats, 690; heavy fats, 27; sows, 40; stags, 6; cripples, 21; stores, 123; a toal of 4,154 hogs, of which only 1,398, or about 33 per cent., were suitable for the manufacture of first-class export bacon. If the trade in Canadian bacon is to be increased or even maintained, at its present volume, it is absolutely necessary that only hogs of proper weight and quality be sent to the packing houses. F. W. Hodson, Live Stock Commissioner.

A Test For Good Butter.

The good housewife who said, "The way to test good butter is to smell it," was surely an expert judge of butter. The fact is that a really good judge of butter seldom tastes it but depends rather upon the senses of smell and sight. The dealer who really knows and deals in good butter can at any time when he is testing a crock or roll of butter, be seen to very carefully pass it in review before his olfactory nerve, and to break it and note the appearance of the broken surface.

The true flavor of butter can be quickly tested in the entirety of a package in this manner, while, if the sense of taste alone were depended upon and the package was not of even quality, the fact might go unnoticed. The quantity of salt in the butter can, of course, only be determined by tasting it. The surface exposed when a package or sample of butter is broken should exhibit what is known as a good grain. That means that it should have a clearly defined granular surface, similar to that found on the broken surface of cast iron of good quality. Do not fail to apply these tests when passing judgment on the quality of butter. Their careful observance and a little practice will make you an expert.—Michigan Farmer.

Clover For Egg Producing.

Experience has demonstrated the value of clover for egg producing time and again. Clover has just the material in it to form egg shell, and hence it becomes an essential part of every ration fed to the chickens. It may not be generally understood that there are nearly thirty pounds of lime contained in each thousand pounds of clover. The chickens fed daily with clover will consequently prove better egg layers than those denied it. The clover hay should be given to chickens in winter in quantities sufficient to satisfy them, and to make them eat more it is desirable sometimes to prepare it in various ways. Cook and chop it up, and mix it with meal or other articles. This will sometimes induce the hens to consume a great amount of clover each day. Cut up into short lengths and mixed with warm mash, and then fed only as fast as the chickens will clean it up each day, is probably the most economical way to feed the clover. Some cut the second crop of clover and place it in the poultry yard for the chickens to eat and scratch over at pleasure. This of itself is all right, but it is rather wasteful. More than half the clover will be lost, and the chickens do not actually eat much more than the leaves. The stalks contain most of the lime, and these should be prepared so the chickens will consume them. Of all foods that can be raised on a farm for poultry, clover is not only the best, but probably the cheapest, and a field of it is as essential to success as a pasture field is necessary to the success of dairying.—Annie C. Webster, in Massachusetts Ploughman.

Just What You Ask For.

Outside the drug store—the store of J. Milhau's Son, at No. 183 Broadway—you may read the announcement at the head of this column, "We give you just what you ask for."

We are glad to seize upon this occasion to pay a tribute to this motto, and, incidentally, to point out a dishonest and very common practice among merchants —that of substituting one article for another.

One business man devotes all his energy, his money and his time to building up the reputation of a certain article. He enables the retailer to make a large profit, and he spends his money that customers may be plentiful.

When a customer asks for the article in question it is dishonest to say to him, as many do:—

"Don't buy that. We have something else just as good and much cheaper."

If the merchant has something good and cheap of his own, let him sell it to his customers by all means. But let him not steal the trade of a man whose energy helps to build up his business. Let him not divert to his own pocket all of the profit which he ought to in honesty share with another.

There are wares that are made enormously profitable to the retailer simply because men push their business with intelligence and perseverance. It is ungrateful as well as dishonest for the sake of a little extra profit to cut into the legitimate business of the advertising manufacturer.

Incidentally, the public, as well as the storekeeper and the manufacturer, are interested in this question of substituting one article for another.

That which is represented as "just as good" is usually not just as good, but very far from it.

If a man has spent a million dollars building up the reputation of a certain article, it is to his advantage to keep up the quality of the material which enters into the manufacture of that article. His profit is large if he is honestly treated, and it would be suicide for him to use inferior material for the sake of a little extra money.

The man who makes up an imitation article and announces it as "just as good" has no such sum at stake. He has invested nothing. He has no valuable name to ruin, and it is to his interest to make the "just as good" article just as cheap as he can make it.

The buyer should remember these facts and put his confidence in that retailer who, like the man quoted at the head of this article, gives to the customer just what he asks for, treats the wholesaler honestly, and shows gratitude for the energy which builds up a successful business and makes the retailer prosperous.—From The New York Journal. Issued by the Association of American Advertisers.

The caller had a grievance.

"That communication I sent you yesterday," he said, "was signed 'Mors Anon' as plainly as the words could be written. You printed it in your paper this morning 'Omega.'"

"I know it," replied the editor. "We didn't intend there should be any more anon."

Ping-Pong in Society.

We have no idea on this side of the Atlantic of the extent to which "ping-pong" has affected English society, but the following from a London paper of late date gives an inkling of the popularity—absurd popularity, one is tempted to say—which it has attained: —

"The nice conduct of the celluloid has become a cult. 'Professors' we have already, and now comes the 'school,' where beginners are coached in the subtleties of our latest form of amusement.

"As befits the high rank of 'ping-pong,' the teaching class is an academy, and its location is the balcony at Niagara Hall. There half a dozen tables (9 feet by 5 feet) are open to students. They absorb the rudiments and go forward to excellence under the skilful tuition of Mr. P. Fleming, son of Tom Fleming, known as the father of lawn tennis.

"Around these tables stand, day by day, scores of men, young and middle-aged, maidens and matrons, eager to qualify for proficiency in the dining-room. Half a crown is the fee per lesson, and when the 'ping-pongers' have picked up some mastery of the game a shilling secures the table for a set.

"Frequently a really good player strolls in and takes a turn. It is as if Stevenson descended on a pool-room and casually 'took a cue,' or MacLaren played as 'Mr. A. N. Other' on a village cricket ground.

"Thursday brings its special diversion. Men and women from the ice rink below come up and play 'ping-pong' on skates.

"Of course, there are no sofas nor cosy corners in this academy, and hence no easy hiding-place for the errant ball. Players do not grovel on dusty floors. Ingenuity has evolved a 'scoop' with a long handle to entrap the wanderer in meshes of elastic.

"The game prospers all round. Mr. Fleming has always plenty of calls on his teaching ability from private houses.

"On Thursday week his Majesty is to visit Niagara and watch the skating champions on the ice. It is not beyond the dreams of 'ping-pongers' that the King may ascend the balcony and look on at a game.

"Nay, the fluttering hope is that Edward VII. will himself take a racquet and his first (public) essay in what somebody in 'Measure for Measure' long ago foretold as 'the game of tick-tack.'"

The same paper, The Express, in another issue raises the point as to whether the craze for "ping-pong" is not a sign of national decay, and really, after reading the above, the suggestion does not seem unreasonable. Mr. Kipling might have done his country a real service if he had attacked "ping-pong" instead of cricket and football. Or can it be that the craze is partly due to his bitter lines, for in yet another reference to the new game it is stated that "suburban athletes have forsaken football and golf to foregather in a stuffy club room on Saturday afternoons and trifle with a celluloid ball"; and again "The National Sporting Club has invested in a championship 'ping-pong' table, and amateur boxers have been seen glaring at each other, not across the ring, but over a miniature net." Surely the "flannelled fools," etc., have gone from bad to worse, and the Imperial bard should shortly be heard from again.

Misfortunes of Some Welshmen.

The following extract from an article by Mr. W. L. Griffith, Canadian Government agent for Wales, in The Western Daily News, Cardiff, gives a picturesque sketch of the misfortunes of the Patagonian Welshmen who are likely to come to Canada shortly:—When the idea of a Welsh colony in Patagonia was first mooted Wales was seething with political discontent. But, strong as this feeling undoubtedly was, it required much effort on the part of Professor Michael Jones of Bala and the Rev. Lewis Jones of Festiniog to prevail upon the small band of people which eventually made the venture. The motives of the self-deceived leaders in the movement will always remain open to debate. The attraction to the rank and file was the vision of free land, immunity from taxes, and the self-government so dear to the heart of the Welshman. Fired with these ideas, the imaginative Cymry saw visions of a Cymric Utopia. They not only cherished these ideals, but they were prepared to do all in their power to compass their realization. They were brave, earnest, laborious, ready and willing to sacrifice self. It is pathetic to think of the shock these brave men and women encountered when they finally landed on the desert shores of New Bay, and discovered that the country they had fondly pictured as one of illimitable resource was nothing but a barren desert, and that their leaders, whom they implicitly trusted, had been guilty of carelessness, which was, perhaps, worse than inexcusable. In fairness it must here be stated that Professor Michael Jones squandered a private fortune on what had become his pet project. As they were without means the Welsh people were face to face with starvation. There was nothing to do but, to use an Americanism, "scratch for a living." The history of these people during the first years of the settlement entitles them to the greatest credit.

A Story of Prince Henry.

Prince Henry of Prussia, according to a story told by a diplomat who was once attached to the British Embassy in Berlin, was one day chatting with an English friend in a cafe in Bonn, when he became an object of suspicion to one of those meddling minor officials who flourish in such numbers in Germany. The Prince is too discreet a man to discuss affairs of State in a public place, but on this occasion some subject arose which, while not of general interest, related to the Imperial family. The conversation was in English, and the spying official was acquainted with that language. At length Prince Henry remarked:—"Why, my dear fellow, don't you see that the Emperor would be even crazier than some people seem to believe he is if he did anything like that?"

The official leaned toward his Royal Highness and said: "Sir, are you aware that there is a lese majeste law in this country? Let me hear another remark of that kind, and I make a complaint against you."

The Englishman took in the situation, and a moment afterward remarked: "As I was saying to your Royal Highness before we were interrupted——"

The meddler gasped, rose hastily and withdrew.

A Good Salve For Horses.

A salve valuable to horsemen may be made of equal quantities by measure of pine tar, sulphur and lard. Mix the sulphur with the tar and stir it well; then add the lard and stir again. Set it on the stove and simmer for six hours, occasionally stirring it. It will cure the scratches on horses, and galls from the harness.

For scratches, thoroughly wash and clean the parts with castile or some other good kind of soap, and then rub in the salve. I have tried it and recommend it to others. I never knew it to fail. It is simple and cheap, and the formula easy to remember. It is not patented; anyone can use it.

It will also relieve sores, ringworm and most skin troubles on men.—J. W.

Ayrshires at St. Louis in 1903.

The breeders of dairy cattle in the United States are already beginning to prepare for the Louisiana Purchase Exposition, to be held in St. Louis in 1903. At the recent meeting of the American Ayrshire Breeders' Association, held at Providence, R.I., it was voted to appropriate money from the treasury to pay the expense of placing a herd of Ayrshire cows in the breed test at that Exposition, and a committee was appointed to take charge of the same. Canadian breeders who intend to exhibit at St. Louis should at once begin to prepare their stock, so that they will not be taken at a disadvantage, when the time for this great international contest arrives.

Canadian Cattle in Aberdeenshire.

The removal of the British embargo on Canadian cattle is evidently still a live question in Scotland, as shown by the following item from a recent issue of The North British Agriculturist, a paper which has strongly opposed the free admission of Canadian "stores":—"A rather curious debate for a literary society, 'Should the restrictions on Canadian cattle be removed' was held in the Public Hall, New Deer, under the auspices of the local Literary Society. The local papers state that there was a large attendance, and considerable interest was taken in the debate. Mr. Milne, coach-builder, supported the negative, and Mr. Godsman of Mains of Fedderate the affirmative. Mr. Milne made an able speech in favor of his side, pointing out the injury that would be done to small farmers and crofters, who depended mainly on their stock for a living, were Canadians admitted; but Mr. Godsman, who argued mainly on free trade theories, was one too many for him, and in the end carried the affirmative by a considerable majority. The great majority of those present were not farmers at all, but the vote shows how opinion may go even in this large cattle-breeding country."

How to Secure Good Lambs.

Begin with the ewes before the breeding season. For two or three weeks put them on better feed. The best I have found for this is rape pasture. Let the ewes run on the rape for an hour twice a day for the first few days until they get accustomed to it. This will put them in good flesh and in shape to raise strong lambs.

I always raise a few acres of turnips and these I feed regularly twice a day during the winter in connection with ground oats and bran. About a quart for each sheep with as much hay as they will eat up clean is sufficient. This care of the ewes during the winter gives to the lambs when they are dropped a large amount of milk. When the lambs are less than a week old they will begin to eat a little grain. The ewes must then be fed more liberally. I generally have a place where the lambs can be fed by themselves, and then give them ground oats and a little bran in the morning with cornmeal and bran at night. I always give a feed of roots during the day. By this method I have raised lambs which have dressed 78 pounds at thirteen weeks old. I always keep the following points in mind:—Give plenty of clean water, dip in late summer, keep clean and in a good dry barn, give regular attendance and feed.—J. Withers, in American Agriculturist.

Pigs and Cows.

The dairyman of to-day is of necessity a breeder of swine. The two go together so thoroughly that it would be a waste of good material and opportunity to neglect either. There can be no doubt that nature intended that the pigs should be the companion of the cows in the clover fields. But more than that, the swine should be fed on the skim milk that comes from the dairy. Pigs and shoats will thrive on this skim milk as on nothing else. The milk fed in this way will yield a larger profit than if sold in the ordinary market, where only a few cents a quart can be obtained, and often not that. The waste of time and material in trying to find a good market for skim milk is the most discouraging feature of the dairy business. Many a man has been induced to leave the business entirely on account of this. After settling up his accounts for the year he has found that he was actually no gainer for the year's work.

The only actually sure way of making money is to have a well organized dairy and pig farm. Enough of the latter should be kept at all times to consume the skim milk. By rapid growing and selling, turning the money over quickly, a good profit can be made for every quart of skim milk fed. Some keep their pigs too long. It is better to sell them as young pigs than to wait until they are so fat that few want them. A good healthy pig, with plenty of lean and fat on his sides, will usually sell better than the excessively fat hogs. The clover and grass will always help to make the pigs grow, and on a diet of good clover and plenty of skim milk there is no danger of hog cholera or other swine diseases in the hottest of weather. Corn and dry grain are the breeders of disease and illness in hogs during the summer. The hog cholera is undoubtedly the produce of over-heated blood, superinduced by heavy corn and grain feeding. We cannot stamp out the disease until we change the diet. Let that be skim milk and green clover and grass from June 1 until the end of September, and any man can raise as fine a flock of clean, healthy swine as any market man could ask for. And the market for such animals —A. B. Barrett, in Indiana Farmer. s always ready, with prices far more constant than for most farm products.

The Veal Age.

"This is assuredly the Veal Age in literature. People no longer ask about an author, How old is he? but How young is he—or she, as is usually the case. Of the writers on the staff of Jack, Goch & Co. 85 per cent. are under the age of twenty-one, and 25 per cent. are under sixteen years. Sixty-eight per cent. of these write historical romances and 33 per cent. write in the colonial style.—[illegible]"

A MARVELLOUS MEDICINE

"No Cure, No Pay," is the Newest Proposal of the Proprietors of Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills

Editor Morning Times

Sir,—We make the following proposal to the readers of the Times: To any one who is a subject of rheumatism (no matter how long standing), or any blood disease, as enumerated below, and will give Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills a fair trial, and do not find a perfect cure, we will refund the money paid for the pills. If no substantial improvement is observed, we will in addition, pay $10 in cash on satisfactory evidence being supplied us to this effect.

We have yet to know of a single case where these wonderful pills have not been almost entirely successful in effecting a cure. CANADA CHEMICAL CO.

Our New Book uo Cancer

should be in the hands of every sufferer from this dread disease.

We have just completed a new book on Cancer which we believe is the most comprehensive popular work on this subject published in America. It was written for us by a physician who has given the subject a great deal of thought and study, and it will no doubt prove of considerable interest and be of great benefit to those suffering from cancer or tumor.

If you are afflicted with cancer yourself, or have a friend or relative who is, send two stamps to Stott & Jury Bowmanville, Ont., and a copy will be mailed you promptly in plain wrapper.

From the Camp Outside Bloemfontein

Comes a letter from a member of "C" Company, Royal Canadian Regiment, telling how "Foot Elm" helped the Canadian boys on their marches.

There is no section of the British Army now in South Africa so well equipped to undertake long tiresome marches as the Canadians. The secret is that they have "Foot Elm" in their shoes, and this harmless and wonderful discovery prevents, scalding, blistering, and chafing, and robs marching of the foot-soreness which is its invariable accompaniment Mr. T. Buckart, "C" Co., R.C.R. sends the following letter from the camp outside Bloemfontein to Messrs. Stott and Jury, Bowmanville, Ont.:

"The regiment was supplied with Foot Elm en route to Cape Town. Most of the boys have used it continuously, and all express themselves as highly delighted with the results, as it prevents scalding and chafing. A friend of mine still has a portion of his box left, and he says it is one of the most treasured things his knapsack contains." (Signed), T. Buckart

"Foot Elm" is 25 cents a box at all druggists, or by mail, Stott and Jury, Bowmanville, Ont.

SORE FEET

If your feet are sore, tired and aching. Foot Elm can give you wonderful ease and comfort. Price, 25c, a box at all druggists, or sent by mail, postage free. Stott & Jury, Bowmanville, Ont.

Take a Pointer Boys

A number of boys whose ages range from about 15 to 12 years, make it a custom to congregate on Water street, near Hunter on Sunday evening's, and make the locality resound with their howls jig-dancing etc. The police would do well to keep an eye on these embryo rowdies.

The Fortnightly Club

Two meetings of the Fortnightly Club will be held in the near future. On April 29th, the meeting will be addressed by Mr. H. D. Burnett, and the other meeting to be held later, will be addressed by Mr. D. O'Connell.

"Daddy's" the Engineer

Engineer Julius Dabby Boyers, of Everett, will be at the throttle on the steamer "City of Peterborough," this season. The vessel is being thoroughly overhauled, preparatory to commencing the season's work. It is expected that she will be "in the water" in about a week.

Teachers for South Africa

Misses McFarlane and Tenny, of this town left at midnight, Saturday, to join the corps of Canadian teachers at Halifax for South Africa. The young ladies received a hearty, and well-deserved send-off from a large number of friends.

Toothache Cured in One Minute

Saturate some batting with Polson's Nerviline and place in the cavity of the tooth. Rub the painful part of the face with Nerviline, bind in a hot flannel, and the toothache will disappear immediately. Nerviline is a splendid household remedy for cramps, indigestion, summer complaint, rheumatism, neuralgia and toothache. Powerful, penetrating, safe and pleasant for internal and external use. Price 25c. Try Nerviline.

Use Dr. Hamilton's Pills for biliousness.

MILITARY NOTES

Recruiting for the fourth Canadian Contingent will be commenced to-morrow morning at nine o'clock at the DrillShed. As there is no limit set for the quota from here there should be a large number taken on. All those wishing to enlist should be at the shed on Tuesday at nine o'clock sharp. Surgeon-Major Young of the 3rd Dragoons will be Medical Examiner at Lt. Col. D. Sutton, recruiting officer.

The regular weekly drill of the 57th Regiment will be held to-morrow evening. There will altogether be a march out. A large number of recruits have been taken on during the past two weeks.

The 14th field Battery will start drill during the next two weeks. There is a great deal of interest being taken in the Battery and judging from present appearances the sections with head-quarters here will be up to their full strength in a short time.

Will Peterboro Have a Team in the C.L.A.?

Are the Lacrosse loving people of Peterborough going to allow the game to be at a deadlock again this season? The present outlook for entering a team in the C.L.A. is not very gratifying.

About four weeks ago the Vaticans called a meeting and organized, and a few nights later the Peterborough Lacrosse team called for a meeting of Lacrosse enthusiasts to meet in the Y.M.C.A., the Vaticans sending representatives.

A Club was organized and after considerable discussion it was decided upon to enter a team in the C.L.A. This seems to be as far as they have proceeded and practically matters have been allowed to drop and nothing more done to revive the game.

Surely Peterborough is not going to take a back seat in Lacrosse, "Canada's National Game" We have the material to put a winning team in the field for championship honors — with such men as McCabe and Glover, who were the main stays of the Port Hope team last season, and Dunsford, Lynch, and numerous others Peterborough should rank as one, if not the strongest teams in the Intermediate series. The question of grounds seems to be the only draw back or excuse offered, and as for putting the game away for another season, as it has been for the last three or four years, will practically bury the game, and the longer Lacrosse enthusiasts allow this state of affairs to continue the more difficult it will be to bring the game to life again. If Peterborough can support Rugby and Cricket teams why can she not support a Lacrosse team? A game that will draw large crowds and more gate receipts than either Cricket or Rugby, and with less travelling expenses, as the matches are played nearer home than the Rugby Clubs.

A more opportune time to put Lacrosse on its old standing can not be had. The Vaticans have called a meeting for Tuesday night in the Oriental Hotel and are determined to make Lacrosse the game of the season. With a little hard work, and the help that can be obtained by donations to the interests of the game "Lacrosse" should make such a hit this season that it will no longer be a question of doubt as to the ability of Peterborough supporting a winning Lacrosse team in the C.L.A. A large crowd is looked for at the meeting on Tuesday night.

LONDON HIRING OUTSIDERS.

One new name has been added to the list of players of the London Lacrosse Club. A signed contract was received this morning. This makes six players in all under contract so far. Secretary Hawkshaw stated this morning that they had applications from over a hundred players.

"But they must go to work if they come to London," said the Secretary.

Hired Lacrosse players are dropping off trains at every station where Lacrosse is known. Occasionally one such looks out of the car window while passing Stratford, but he hears the little German band playing that grand new song, "Our Team's All Our Own," and passes regretfully on and drops off at London.

Nervous and Sleepless

There is just one cure and that is plenty of food for the blood and nerves, which is best supplied in Ferrozone, than which no blood builder, nerve tonic or strength producer is better. Ferrozone promotes healthy digestion, which results in improved nutrition. The blood grows rich and red, furnishes stability to the entire system, and the store of nerve force and energy increases daily. A rebuilding of the constitution, new spirits, health and strength, all come from the use of Ferrozone. This marvelous renovator is sold by druggists for 50c. a box, or six boxes for $2.50. Sold by Ormond & Walsh.

MAKING MONEY TOO FAST.

Thrilling Experience of a Peterborough Railway Man in the West

It was in the back parlor of the Snowden House. The genial proprietor had just loaded his corn cob and was clearing his throat preparatory to once more telling the story of the accident he met with at Calamity canal, when Conductor Fred Haskell entered. Now, Fred is popular with everybody, and always has something new to relate, of his own personal experience.

"When I was railroading out west," Fred began, as he reached over and pulled a cigar out of Mr. Snowden's vest pocket, "I had an experience which I will never forget. We picked up a new Irishman somewhere up-country and set him to work braking on a construction train at three cents a mile for wages. One day when him and me was on the train, she got away on one of them mountain grades, and the first thing we knowed she was flying down the track at about ninety miles an hour, with nothing in sight but the ditch and the happy hunting grounds when we come to the end. I twisted em down as hard as I could all along the tops, and then of a sudden I see Mike crawling along toward the end of one of the cars on all fours, with his face the color of milk. I thought he was getting ready to jump, and I see his finish if he did.

"'Mike,' I says, 'for God's sake don't jump.'

"He clamps his fingers on the running board to give him a chance to turn round, and looking at me contemptuous, answers:

"'Jump is it? Do yez think I'd be afther jumpin' an' me makin' money as fast as I am?'"

SENSATIONS IN DROWNING

A contemporary publishes an account of a certain well known provincial lawyer who was drowned, but who refused to stay drowned. The lawyer has filed a denial of the popular belief that before a drowning man sinks into a pleasant dreamlike state and total unconsciousness all the events of his life pass in quick review through his mind. His account of his sensations is meagre, and he makes no note of acute suffering such as the impossibility of breathing might be supposed to cause, at least for a moment. Most persons who have dived deep have had a feeling of suffocation and distress, and it is reasonable to think this would become excruciating if prolonged a few seconds. Evidently, however, this sensation passes quickly away, else it would be the most vivid of all a drowned man's recollections. The lawyer does not refer to it at all, and neither did a member of Parliament who was drowned at a summer resort a year or two ago and who was brought back to life by artifical respiration. The latter said he had not suffered much; that there was no feeling of horror, no passing in review of those acts of a lifetime which are calculated to make a conscience howl. He had felt a great weight on his body, a tremendous beating on his eardrums and a sense of fullness from having swallowed so much of the lake—after which he went to sleep.

Probably drowning affects different persons differently. Perhaps a person with an aggressive conscience, who has not been hardened by the practice of the law, or by two or three terms in Parliament, may recall in an instant all the important and trivial incidents of his career. The excitement of being drowned may make the mind act quickly. How quickly the stored-up impressions of a lifetime may be forced into consciousness we may imagine from experience with dreams. There is a knock at the door to arouse a sleeper, and in a second or two he becomes conscious and replies; yet in that second or two he may have a dream (caused by the knock) the events of which would occupy a day, and the mere recital of which would take an hour.

There is one unfathomable mystery about which neither of these drowned men tells us anything. This concerns the place and condition of his conscious spirit during the half hour which elapsed between the drowning and the resuscitation. All the functions of life had ceased. In each case the man was practically dead—wholly unconscious of the outer world. It is the same with a man felled by a blow on the head. He may remain unconscious for hours, or even days, and when his senses become active again there is no record in his mind of the period of lifelessness. A curious case is reported in surgical annals. A man was kicked in the head by his horse "Tom." As the animal raised its feet the man cried "Whoa!" and then he was struck. Hours later the surgeons lifted a piece of the skull which pressed on the brain, and the man completed his cry with—"there, Tom!" In other words, he took up life exactly where he left off.

Items of News

London, April 12.— Both the Chancellor of the Exchequer, Sir Michael Hicks-Beach, and the Colonial Secretary, Joseph Chamberlain, attended the Cabinet council held at the ForeignOffice at noon to-day. Prior to the meeting of the Ministers, representatives of the Bank of England had a conference with the Chancellor of the Exchequer, indicating that the budget was a prominent subject of discussion by the Ministers, especially as to the best means of issuing a war loan.

LORD ROBERTS LONG WAIT.

London, 13.—"My Lord,—For nineteen years I have led an abstemious life in the hope of this day."

Such was the remarkable answer of Lord Roberts to Lord Lansdowne's request that he should go to South Africa to take supreme command in December, 1899.

It is published for the first time in the fourth volume of Mr. J. MacLaren Cobban's "Life of Lord Roberts." Commenting upon it the author says:

"It is as remarkable for what it implies or suggests as for what it expresses. It suggests that the peace patched up by Mr. Gladstone after Majuba had had to Lord Roberts' mind from the first no element of permanence, that it was merely a postponement of the issue which would have to be fought out between Briton and Boer. It implies that for nineteen years Lord Roberts had lived in the sure and unshaken belief that when the inevitable crisis did come in South Africa affairs he would be summoned to be the leader of the British hosts.

"That the Government did not thus summon him in the beginning of October instead of at the end of December is but evidence that the gravity of the military situation had not been apprehended by those responsible for the conduct of the nation's business, who at first appointed to the chief command a general of no particular military reputation in place of the 'organizer of victory in India.'"

PING-PONG BALL SECRETS.

London, April 12.— One of our trade secrets has remained undiscovered by the Americans, viz., how to produce xylonite ping-pong balls absolutely round. The British maker holds this secret very tight, and as a result exports gigantic quantities of the balls to the United States, where the game is in the full height of popular favor.

The demand is such that no balls are kept in stock, every day the output of about 300 gross being sent direct from the factory. A week's output represents over £1,000. Since the game was invented some 5,000,000 balls have been turned out in London.

QUEER WORK FOR A DUCHESS.

London, April 14.—The Duchess of Sutherland, while in Russia with the Duchess of Marlborough, acted as a drummer on behalf of the Highland cotters. She took with her to St. Petersburg and Moscow several trunks packed with samples of the tweeds made by scotch peasants, and, spreading out the goods like a regular commercial traveller, invited the leading tailors there to examine and buy them. She believes her action will result in opening a new market for the peasants.

MISS STONE SEES MOTHER.

Chelsea, Mass., April 12.— Miss Ellen M. Stone, the missionary, who returned here last night and spent the night at her brother's house, visited her aged mother just before noon.

The meeting was pathetic. The mother, who is over 80 years of age, and feeble, was cheered by the presence of her daughter. She said God had heard her prayers and permitted her to live to see her daughter again.

SHOT NEAR PORT HOPE.

Ottawa, April 12.—Five years ago death on the gallows stared Edward Prentice a young English farm lad, in the face. To-day he is at liberty and on route home to England to his friends.

Prentice was employed on a farm near Port Hope. He quarrelled with a neighboring farmer's son over a rail, and a fight took place. The farmer took up his son's quarrel, and Prentice, lying in wait behind a fence, shot him dead. He was tried and was sentenced to be hanged. This sentence was, however, commuted to life imprisonment.

During this week, upon a favorable report from the judge who tried the case, Prentice was pardoned by the Minister of Justice.

PRISONER KILLS POLICE.

Cumberland, Md., April 12.— Chief of Police John Marstellar of Elkins was shot dead to-day by a man named Davis, whom Marstellar had arrested.

The shooting occurred while Davis was being taken to jail. Someone handed Davis the pistol which he shot the officer. Excitement runs high and there is talk of lynching.

TO PROTECT BIG GAME.

Pretoria, April 12.—At the present time, many valuable species of big game in South Africa are threatened with total extinction—for instance, the conteboek, the koodoo, the black wildebeest, the bushbuck, the oribi, and others. It is proposed, in view of the necessity for immediate action, to establish regulations upon strict drastic lines for their preservation.

It is suggested that camps should be formed on all the experimental farms which will be shortly established, in connection with the Agricultural Department, to be set apart for the purpose of breeding certain species of game, in order that South Africa may be restocked. The Zoological Society of the Transvaal is anxious to induce the Administration to take immediate active steps and have the Sabi Reserve proclaimed and well guarded. It is hoped that Rhodesia, Orange Colony, Bechuanaland, Cape Colony, and Natal will co-operate in furthering this important work, for unless preserves are made and kept very soon the interesting fauna which may now be preserved will be gone for ever.

WHY BOERS REFUSE PAROLE

London, April 12.—To a British friend who pointed out the folly of the Boer prisoners at Umballa in forfeiting their chance of a cool healthy climate during the summer months, one old man said, "Our kinsmen are in the field enduring all kinds of hardships and privations. Some of our sons are there also. Is this a time for us to be signing parole and humbling ourselves for the sake of making life more comfortable? No, we are not comfortable, but we have everything we need to keep us fit and healthy. Let those who have taken us prisoners make their own arrangements." This is the answer in different forms all through the camp, and from this position the prisoners will not move. To the authorities they give no explanation, and their [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible].

Kitchener Reports Some Pretty Severe Fighting As Occurring at the Latter Part of Last Week.

Special to The Times.

London, April 14. — News of severe fighting in the Transvaal at the end of last week has been sent by Lord Kitchener, who reports that about two hundred Boers were killed, wounded, or captured. There were about a hundred British casualties.

The British also captured three guns and a considerable quantity of supplies.

Commandant Potgieter was among the Boers killed.

Colebrander's Operations.

Lord Kitchener, in a despatch dated from Pretoria, Sunday, April 13, recounts how Colonel Colebrander, after locating Commandant Beyer's laager at Pael Kop, moved his force, force, by different routes, from Pietersburg, Transvaal Colony, blocking the principal lines of retreat. The fighting commenced April 8, when the Inniskilling Fusileers attacked Molippoort, covering the Boer position, and by dusk had seized a hill eastward of the Poort, after considerable opposition, resulting in Colonel Murray being wounded, and Lieutenant Lincoln being killed. An officer and five men were wounded.

Since then the operations continued daily. Colenbrander's latest report, April 12, gave the Boer losses in killed, wounded or prisoners, at 106 men. The Colonel hoped to be able to report further captures.

Ian Hamilton's Good Work.

The most severe fighting occurred on April 11, in Western Transvaal, where General Methuen in command of the British troops. The Boers attacked Colonel Kekewich's force near Roywal, and fighting at close quarters ensued. The Boers were repulsed, leaving on the field 44 men killed, including Commandant Potgieter and 34 wounded. The British captured 20 unwounded prisoners.

According to last accounts, General Ian Hamilton was pursuing the remainder of the Boer commands. The British losses in this fight were six men killed and fifty-two wounded.

At the beginning of the pursuit Col. Kekewich captured two guns, a pom-pom, a quantity of ammunition, and a number of wagons.

British Patrol Taken.

A force of Boers recently overwhelmed a strong British patrol sent out from Bulfontein, Orange River Colony, to clear distant farms. An officer and two men were killed, fourteen men were wounded, and the remaining members of the patrol were surrounded and captured. Lord Kitchener mentions holding an inquiry into this reverse.

STRONG HOPES BUILT ON A SLIGHT BASIS

Boer Leaders Said to Have Merely Asked for Use of the Cable from Lord Kitchener to Communicate with Kruger

Special to The Times.

London, April 14.—It is said that the communication of the Boer leaders to Lord Kitchener amounted to little more than a request for permission to use the cable in consulting Mr. Kruger and the Boer delegates in Europe regarding a basis for a peace settlement.

There is a distinctly hopeful feeling in official quarters.

Replying in the House of Commons today to the Liberal leader, Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman, who asked whether any terms of peace had been suggested by the Boer leaders in South Africa, the Government leader, A. J. Balfour, said it was impossible, at present, to say more than that a message had been received Saturday from the Boer leaders through Lord Kitchener, and that a reply had been sent to them. Further communication was expected.

The Trouble Between the Two Countries not Yet Settled

Switzerland Refuses to Give Satisfaction for Its Insult

Special to The Times.

Berne, Switzerland, April 15 — The trouble between Switzerland and Italy is not yet settled. The Bundesrath has sent the following communication to parliament: "Regrettable misunderstandings have occurred between us and Signor Silvestrelli, the Italian minister. We have felt constrained to request the Italian Government of the two countries to recall Signor Silvestrelli. The Italian government having refused to do so, we broke off relations with Signor Silvestrelli, whereupon the Italian government, on its part, has now broken off relations with our minister at Rome. We shall publish the documents relating to this conflict."

The article which led to the differences appeared in an anarchist sheet published in Geneva. Signor Silvestrelli demanded that the authorities prosecute the paper, but the Swiss government replied that it could not act without a complaint being formally lodged by the Italian government. Italy declined to adopt this course, and the correspondence became acrimonious, leading finally to the rupture of diplomatic relations.

ITALY TO GET TRIPOLI!

Rome, April 14.—A fierce agitation is proceeding in Italy against the supposed intention of The Government to send an expedition to Tripoli. The agitation is being engineered by the Socialists and Republicans and meetings of protest have been held in most of the large towns.

The majority favors the project on the assumption that it can be accomplished without much risk, and nine-tenths of the Italian newspapers vehemently support it. As a matter of fact, the Italian Government has practically abandoned the idea of an armed expedition, it now being understood that the object desired may be acquired without violence.

The story goes that the German Emperor, with a view to countering on the Francophiles in Italy, promised to use his influence at Constantinople to induce the Sultan to grant Italy a lease of Tripoli, which, of course, is an euphemism for cession, and that Italy is prepared to pay up to 100,000,000 francs to the Sultan. The sovereignty of the Porte would be nominally preserved as in Egypt.

SENT $100 BY AN ADMIRER.

Rome, April 13.—Musolino, the notorious bandit, has received in the prison at Lucca a cheque for $100 drawn on the National Bank of New York, and signed "Mortimer Bakopp." The envelope bears the New York postmark. Musolino was astonished, and can form no guess as to who the sender is. His trial will begin at Lucca to-morrow.

$150,000,000 WAR LOAN

London, Monday, April 14.—According to the Daily Telegraph, the consensus of opinion in Stock Exchange and banking circles is that the Government will need a loan of about £30,000,000 to cover the year's requirements, and it is surmised that power will be asked from Parliament for the creation of a further £40,000,000 founded debt, of which amount £20,000,000 to £30,000,000 will be issued forthwith. The city would like, says the Telegraph, a guaranteed three per cent. Transvaal loan, but such a loan is not generally expected.

REBELLION IN GOA.

Bombay, April 14.—Another revolt against the Portuguese has broken out at Goa, the colony of Portugal, on the west coast of India. The leader of the Mahratta land-owners has taken up arms, with five thousand followers, who have burned the military barracks at Valpoy, where some soldiers were killed.

TROOPS FOR FRENCH CONGO

Paris, April 14.—The Minister of the Colonies, M. Decrais, has ordered reinforcements to be sent to the scene of the troubles in the French Congo, as the result of a despatch which he received confirming the report of a revolt of natives in the Sangha district.

The Paris manager of the Sangha Company, in an interview, attributes the outbreak to the fact that the fanaticism of the natives has been aroused by human sacrifices, which were extensively celebrated recently. In October last signs of trouble were noticed, and the local manager vainly asked for assistance from the authorities. The Paris manager adds that the natives are well armed with modern rifles, obtained from foreign traders in exchange for ivory and rubber.

CRIMEAN VETERAN DEAD

London, Ont., April 13. — Ex-Police Sergeant James Crawford died here very suddenly at noon to-day, of convulsions. Deceased was born at Woolwich, England, 67 years ago. He fought at Sebastopol and other places in the Crimea and was at the front during the Fenian troubles of 1866. He served for years on the London police force, and lived here altogether over half a century. He was also chief of Galt for a time. Of late he served as a county constable, and was on duty Saturday. The surviving family are Mrs. A. H. Clinger, city; "Jack" at the Soo; Dr. Walter, in England; and Rev. Ed., missionary in East Africa.

THE LATE KING HUMBERT. OF ITALY

REPRIEVE ARRIVED TOO LATE

Governor of Missouri Did Not Act Promptly Enough and Execution was Carried Out

Special to The Times

St. Louis, April 11.—A reprieve granted by Governor Dockery was received just 35 minutes too late to prevent the execution of Henry Flutcher, colored, at 6.10 o'clock this morning. During an altercation August 27, 1900, Flutcher shot and killed Louis Roth, aged 16 years. He was sentenced to be hanged between 6 a.m., and 6 p.m. to-day. Preparations for the hanging had almost been completed when Circuit Attorney Folk, at 11 o'clock last night, telegraphed Governor Dockery, at Jefferson City, recommending a ten days' reprieve to investigate more fully some testimony to the effect that Flutcher acted in self-defence when he killed Roth.

At 2 a.m. a message was received from the telegraph office at Jefferson City as follows: "Yours to A. M. Dockery, signed Folk, received. Messenger reports Governor would not come to door, stuck his head out of second story window, asked 'What's wanted?' Messenger told him nature of message. He told messenger to put it under door; made no reply."

This message was opened by Sheriff Dickmann, as Attorney Folk had gone home. He telephoned to the Attorney, and both concluded that this ended the matter. Flutcher was told, and did not express any expectation of a respite.

At 5.50 Sheriff Dickmann told the condemned boy to prepare for the march to the gallows. The boy walked with steady step, and before the black cap was adjusted, made a short speech, in which he declared that he fired the shot that killed Roth, but that he had no other intention than to disarm his assailant. He spoke for three minutes and then waved a good-bye to those assembled, and turned to the Sheriff. A minister stepped forward and made a final prayer. Immediately after, at 6.10 o'clock, the trap was sprung, and Flutcher's neck was broken in the drop. A formal inquest was held, and the body was turned over to the family, when a message was received at 6.45 o'clock from Governor Dockery saying: "I have granted a respite of fifteen days in case of Henry Flutcher, to be hanged to-day. Stay execution. Answer."

Deputy Sheriff Bilharts, who received and opened the telegram containing the reprieve from the Governor, said that the message was received by him twenty minutes after it had been filed in Jefferson City. It came to the Western Union office on Eighth st., and was delivered by a messenger who had run the entire distance of six blocks to the Four Courts where the execution took place.

Circuit Attorney Folk said: "There can be no doubt as to Flutcher's guilt. He was given a fair trial before an impartial jury, and his case was fully examined by the Supreme Court. When Detectives McNeil and Harrington came to my house last night at eleven o'clock and reported they had just discovered witnesses, who, it was alleged, through fear, had been restrained from appearing at the trial, I thought best, as a matter of caution, to ask the Governor for a respite of ten days, until I could fully investigate and examine these witnesses."

THE GOVERNOR'S EXPLANATION.

Jefferson City, Mo., April 13.—Governor Dockery to-day declined to discuss the time of receiving Circuit Attorney Folk's telegram regarding Flutcher, but says he did not decide until an early hour this morning to grant a respite. The Governor says he went down stairs to get Folk's message, and read it at 12.30 this morning, but that he did not decide to act until 5.55 this morning. He at once wired Sheriff Dickmann, and also telephoned him to stay the execution, the order, he says, being sent at 6 o'clock. The telegram reached St. Louis 35 minutes too late, and the telephone message ten minutes too late. Governor Dockery stated that Flutcher should have been executed, and that the respite could only have operated to stay the execution a few days.

APPEAL FOR AID

Gov. Yates' Boer Relief Fund Committee Requests Cash

Special to The Times.

Chicago, April 14 — The Gov. Yates Boer relief fund committee on Saturday issued an appeal to the public.

In the appeal the committee says: "We desire to collect five million checks and drafts of $1 each, from all parts of the United States, payable to Theodore Roosevelt, to be used by him for such aid as he may be able to render the people, and as a practical and beneficent demonstration of the sympathy of the people of America for these reconcentrado camp sufferers. These checks and drafts should be sent to Peter Van Vlissingen, 172 East Washington street, Chicago.

The appeal is signed by Edward F. Dunne, Carter H. Harrison and Peter Van Vlissingen.

THE WAR SITUATION AS IT REALLY EXISTS

Britain Will Not Weaken in Her Efforts to Make Peace

WOLSLEY'S VISIT TO AFRICA

Not One Shred of Their Former Independence Will be Allowed—The War Goes Merrily on.

Special to The Times.

London, April 15 — In the face of the endeavors of pro-Boer organs to create an impression that Britain is weakening in her determination to continue the war in South Africa until the dream of the Afrikander Bond is finally dispelled, it is necessary to constantly refute the numerous rumours which gain currency. In the first place it is perhaps inaccurate to say that actual negotiations are taking place, either between diplomats favorable to the Boer cause in Europe and the British Cabinet, or between Lord Kitchener and the so-called Boer Governments in South Africa; our authority for this denial is the official statements made in the British Parliament this very week. All that Lord Kitchener has been authorized to do is to facilitate interviews between Schalkburgher and his civilian colleagues with their scattered friends who are still able to retain a following upon the warpath. The story that Lord Wolseley had a mission from the King to report and to negotiate behind the back of his constitutional advisers had no sooner received its quietus than it is replaced by a rumor that Lord Rosebery is going upon a similar mission. Probably the latter will scarcely take the trouble to contradict the report, which the ex Commander in Chief did when, upon embarking on board the Walmer Castle, at Southampton, he said: "I am going to the Cape upon strictly personal business, and may possibly return to England on this steamer's homeward trip."

The British position really remains as it was defined by Lord Salisbury at the time when Holland attempted to intervene. The Premier then said he would never be a party to any negotiations which would aim at restoring to the late Transvaal and Orange Free States "one shred of their former independence." After all, though rarely named in connection with the war, it is Lord Salisbury who is "the man at the wheel," and, having kept the ring clear so successfully for three years, we can quite believe that he has no intention of now surrendering to any Boer bluffing. Sir Gordon Sprigg, the Premier of the Cape Colony, tells us that the war will not actually be over until the last individual commando in the field has been broken up. If any additional proof is needed of the unswerving determination of the Home Government and the Colonial Administrations in South Africa, it will be best found in the Budget statement which the Chancellor of the Exchequer is to make next Monday, when it will be seen that provision has been made for carrying on the struggle with undiminished energy during the year which ends on March 31st, 1903.

Venezuelan Insurgents to Fight and Rising to Follow

Special to The Times.

Willemstad, Island of Curacao, April 14. — News has reached here that Government troops, to the number of 1,500, under the command of General Velutini, Minister of the Interior, left Piritu, a small village on the seashore near Barcelona, capital of the State of Bermudez, to engage the revolutionists, under the command of General Monagas, who are encamped fifteen miles from Piritu. A battle is expected between these forces to-day. If it be won by the revolutionists, the victory will be a signal for a general rising.

REVOLT IN FRENCH CONGO

Massacre of a Manager and Factory Pillaged—Local Militia Routed the Insurgents

Special to The Times.

Paris, April 15.—The Minister of the Colonies, M. Decrais, has received a despatch confirming the report of a revolt of natives in the Sangha district of the French Congo. A body of natives attacked the French Company factory on the river Sangha, murdered the manager, and also burned and pillaged another factory. The local militia defeated the rebels. Reinforcements of Senegalese troops were despatched to the scene of the trouble. According to advices received by the Journal, the natives employed at the French factory were also massacred, and goods valued at 150,000 francs were pillaged. This report states that the rebels, who are cannibals, marched later on to attack other factories. It is feared that many persons have been killed.

MOB THROWS ACID AND TROOPS FIRE TO KILL

Belgian Rioting Has Become Savage and Many Victims Being Reported--Disorder Said to be Spreading

Special to The Times.

Brussels, April 15.—There were no serious disturbances here throughout Saturday, with the exception of a few cases where revolvers were fired, but at 10.30 o'clock Saturday night there was an affray between the gendarmerie and the rioters, which is described as worse than any of the disorders and riots in 1893 and 1889.

A mob had assembled in the Rue Haute, near the Maison du Peuple, pelted the gendarmes with balls containing sulphuric acid, and attacked them with butchers' knives, shouting at the same time: "Long live the revolution and the Republic."

The gendarmes fired into the mob, and the fire was returned from revolvers in the hands of the people in windows. The number of casualties has not yet been ascertained, but it is feared that they have been extensive.

Later there was another collision between the mob and the police, in which one person was killed and several others injured.

The scenes in the neighborhood where the riots occurred were frightful. The mob was intensely excited, and the word "revolution" was freely pronounced on all sides.

Complete quiet prevailed here to-day. The ugly emeute of last night raised the gravest apprehension, and everybody feared that Sunday, being a holiday, would see a more serious manifestation. The day, however, was quieter than usual, owing partly to the fact that a considerable number of the respectable people, fearing a renewal of the rioting, left the city. The King spent the day at Ostend, having gone there this morning. The authorities have a firm grasp on the situation. Burgomaster Demot caused the city to be placarded with a dignified appeal against violence, but further measures were taken to guard against an outbreak. The city authorities, acting in conjunction with Gen. Verstrate, had 300 Civil Guards posted inside the Palais des Academies, 150 in the Cercle Artistique, 150 in the Hotel de Ville, and others in other places, including a flying squadron of cavalry, all of whom were at the service of the burgomaster.

THE ENTIRE ARMY NOW UNDER ARMS.

This afternoon Gen. Verstrate and his staff strolled through the streets, as did also the Count of Flanders, the King's brother. There was not the slightest demonstration. There were no signs of the extra police and military, all of whom were concealed from the public view, but ready at an instant's notice to proceed speedily to whatever point was deemed necessary.

At the present moment the entire forces of Belgium, numbering 85,000 men, are under arms.

During the afternoon a crowd never numbering more than a thousand people, consisting chiefly of curious sightseers, drifted round the Maison du Peuple, the Socialist centre, where a meeting was in progress.

After seven o'clock this evening the city was patrolled by a thousand Civil Guards. There was some groaning at the guards as they entered the Hotel de Ville in the evening, which was the only demonstration made.

After the breaking up of the meeting at the Maison du Peuple, those attending it and the small, drifting crowd in the vicinity, quietly dispersed. It was unanimously resolved at the meeting to abstain from violence. Some of the speakers recommended that a universal strike be inaugurated this week.

The appearance of quiet has not removed the alarm, and the situation is still regarded as being most serious. Yesterday and on previous occasions M. Van der Velde, the Socialist leader, and others were looked for recommending that the Socialists demonstrate without violence. To-night when the meeting at the Maison du Peuple was over every approach to the place was barred by the Civil Guards. They numbered eight hundred, and formed a double line about the building. Each man had ball cartridges and his bayonet fixed. The only persons allowed to pass the buildings were the patrols. Foot passengers, omnibuses, and tram cars were turned back. Many of the shops and houses have their windows and doors strongly barred, and some of the cabarets have had special shutters placed in position as a protection in the event of street fighting. Many doctors are in attendance day and night at the places where the military is stationed out of sight. Ambulances and members of the Red Cross are stationed outside the Maison du Peuple. The general feeling of calm is ominous rather than reassuring. The Government is ready to declare a state of seige. The chief anxiety, however, is felt regarding the country, especially the mining districts.

FURTHER DETAILS OF SATURDAY'S RIOTING.

The bloody repression of the disorders of yesterday evening has created a painful impression among all classes here. Yesterday for the first time the police fired their rifles loaded with ball cartridges. Previously they had used their swords and their revolvers, the latter usually loaded with blank cartridges. The rioters were the dregs of the population, with a sprinkling of what is called the young Socialist guard, made up of mere boys. The Maison du Peuple is situated on the upper slope of the hill. The central boulevard and most of the business portion of the city lies at the foot of this hill, while the Royal palace, the law courts, the Chamber of Deputies, and the Ministries stand upon the ridge. The quarter around the Maison du Peuple is the worst in the city. It is a perfect rookery of low-class dwellings, intersected by steep and narrow streets and malodorous alleys. The mob was mainly composed of the rough population of this quarter. The serious troubles began when a number of roughs when at a safe distance, fired revolvers in the direction of the police cordons. The gendarmes charged, firing revolvers loaded with blank cartridges; they were greeted with a hail of missiles, such as stones, bottles, and heavy iron rivets. This happened in several streets. An officer of the gendarmes ordered the crowd to disperse, but no notice was taken of this order. Then the gendarmes fired their Mauser carbines, loaded with what are called "strike cartridges," which contain a ball, but a minor charge of powder. The gendarmes fired only one volley, but, when the mob scattered, several bodies were lying on the ground. Two of the wounded were mortally hurt, and died while being conveyed to the hospital. It is impossible to ascertain the exact number of the victims of yesterday's rioting. The director of the Hospital of St. Pierre, however, stated this afternoon that three rioters had died in the hospital and another was believed to be mortally injured. Thirty people who are badly hurt were received at the hospital last night. Among the injured are many imprudent spectators of the rioting. A doctor, who was returning home after having visited patients, was caught between two bodies of charging gendarmes, and his nose was cut off with a sword. A woman was also among the injured. One of the men killed was the assistant secretary of the Socialist Jewelers' Union. Only one or two policemen were hurt.

At Antwerp everything is perfectly quiet. The Civic Guard has been discharged, and the police are guarding the dwellings of clerical deputies. There was another manifestation at Mons, but no casualties resulted. At Liege the Socialists paraded the streets and destroyed property.

A general strike of coal miners in the Charleroi district is ordered for Monday. Messrs. Boch Bros., crockery manufacturers at La Louviere, received yesterday morning a threatening letter, declaring that if work was not ceased the establishment would be wrecked with dynamite. The managers ordered all hands to quit the premises, and consequently work has ceased.

The threatening aspect of a mob, near the Maison du Peuple, at 11 o'clock to-night, caused the police and gendarmes to charge it, with the result that five of the demonstrators were wounded. One of the injured men will die. He received a bayonet thrust in the back. Sixteen arrests were made during the course of the evening.

ATTEMPT ON THE KING'S LIFE PLANNED.

London, Monday, April 14.—The Brussels correspondent of the Daily Telegraph says that the Cabinet met Sunday at Laeken Castle, King Leopold presiding. It was decided to oppose vigorously the motion concerning universal suffrage to be laid before Parliament Wednesday. The Council agreed upon extraordinary measures in order to prevent further outbreaks. Other reports agree with that of The Morning Times correspondent that the King passed Sunday at Ostend.

A despatch to the Standard from Brussels says that King Leopold, the Liberal leaders, and several of the Clerical leaders recommend the immediate dissolution of Parliament, and the organization of a referendum on open suffrage as the only measure likely to set a limit the increasing effervescence, but the Ministry continues to observe a hesitating attitude.

The Paris correspondent of the Times says it appears certain that the agitation in Belgium was designed to coincide with an attempt at Biarritz on the life of the King of the Belgians. Happily, the plot was frustrated by the fact that King Leopold left Biarritz sooner than he originally expected.

The recent departure made by the London post offices in employing girls as well as boys for the express messenger service is meeting with great success. The girls prove more reliable than boys, and are quite as able to stand the strain of the work. There is no examination to be passed beyond the fact of knowing the locality thoroughly. All applicants must be over eighteen years of age, have good characters, be quick walkers and be thoroughly healthy. They are expected to walk with any message which lies within ten minutes' distance of the office to which they are attached. Beyond that radius either a bus or underground railway fare is allowed.

Phil. Marquam, of Marquam, Ore., has been testing his theory of living in thin clothes. Marquam believes that clothes are an unnecessary evil, and for three years has been accustoming himself to living in light clothes all the year round, thereby hardening his system and his skin to resisting low temperatures. In Eastern Oregon he worked in the cold when the thermometer was ten degrees below zero, clad in cotton shirt and trousers, and experienced no ill effects. This, he contends, demonstrates his theory. He has so far suffered no ill-health as the result of his experiments.

UNINTENTIONAL YANKEE KINDNESS.

The pro-Boers of the United States are willing to go to almost any extreme in their efforts to handicap Great Britain in South Africa. Their dearest wish is to see the mother of nations defeated and humiliated. No story, no matter how ridiculous, how improbable it may be, is rejected, or even investigated, so long as it accuses Britain or British soldiers of brutal, cowardly or disgraceful conduct. Everything they can do to aid the Boers is done.

Sometimes, however, they overreach themselves in their hatred of the nation that gave them their existence, their country and the best of their laws. For instance Britain goes to enormous expense to maintain the Boer concentration camps in proper condition. She feeds the fugitives there collected on better food than her own soldiers are given. She pays medical men to attend to their physical health, and school teachers to dispel the dense ignorance that enclouds them. No other nation under the sun would treat such sullen, implacable and unreasoning enemies as the Boers in such manner.

Were the War Office unburdened by the necessity of supporting the thousands of Boer women, children and aged men (hundreds of whom have been taken to the concentration camps for safety by their relatives), the enormous sums devoted to this purpose every month could be used in prosecuting the war more vigorously.

Here is where the Yankee pro-Boer "gets his work in." The sum of $5,000 has been collected in the United States, and, by permission of the British authorities, sent to South Africa to be devoted towards the support of the fugitives in the camps. The secretary of the committee that collected the money states that the collection of a fund of $5,000,000 will be commenced immediately, and applied to the relief of the Boers.

The committee ought to receive every encouragement in prosecuting the work of freeing Britain's hands in this direction. We would suggest that the Yankee pro-Boers assume the entire cost of supporting the Boer fugitives. The good British gold that is now put to that purpose could then be used to stamp out the embers of war in the Transvaal and Orange River Colony more quickly and effectively.

THE BELL TELEPHONE BILL.

The Bell Telephone Company is pressing on its bill for the increase of its capital stock from $5,000,000 to $10,000,000. It was introduced in the senate a week ago and given its second reading and referred to the railway committee. It will be remembered that when Hon. Mr. Fitzpatrick was waited on by a deputation representing the municipalities in reference to the other telephone bills before the house, he refused to commit himself to any assurance that the bill of the monopoly would be held over until next year. Senator Kirchhoffer in his speech introducing the bill in the senate gave as the reason for the increase in the capital stock that the farmers of the Northwest were crying for telephones and money was needed to extend the lines into the highways and byways of the prairie. This and the alleged cost of renewing plant in the large cities, which apparently is not done out of the enormous rates at present charged, are the only reasons made public as the reasons for the increase asked for. Last session the monopoly did not even condescend to give reasons.

In the face of the protest of the municipalities the Fitzpatrick and Maclean telephone bills have been held over till next year and it is only proper that the Bell Telephone Company's application for an increase of stock should be held over until the public see what the terms of the government bill will be. There is no consideration coming to the Bell Telephone monopoly from the people of Canada. That monopoly has gouged and bulldozed and imposed on the people and the municipalities to the full extent. Before the Bell Telephone Company is granted any more favors in Canada the people want to see that they are protected against the monopoly and that they are secured in some rights which the arrogant corporation is bound to respect. The municipalities should demand that the Bell Telephone Company's bill be held over with the others until next year, and that then any favors from Parliament, which as the people of Canada, shall be granted only after a satisfactory basis of arrangement has been reached. The senate knocked the bill out last session and it will serve the people of Canada equally well if it insist on the measure being held over another year.—Ottawa Citizen.

NEW CUSTOMERS TO BE LOOKED AFTER

Seven thousand immigrants from the British Isles and 30,000 from the United States are the inside figures mentioned by a Winnipeg correspondent for this year. He adds that "these figures are sufficiently remarkable to attract attention without destroying their value by exaggeration. They furnish a series of propositions in mathematics that railway builders, elevator men, merchants, and those engaged in industrial enterprise are trying to solve. How shall the grain in these great new sections be hauled out, where stored, and by whom marketed? Where will these settlers get their implements, their thoroughbred stock, such of them as go in for mixed farming, and where their general supplies? We may be very sure that the manufacturers and merchants of the Northwestern States will follow them up and seek to retain their trade, tariff or no tariff. Here is a problem for the manufacturers of the east. Winnipeg will do all it can to sell them Canadian goods, to make this great army of consumers Canadians commercially as well as geographically. In woollens, in boots and shoes, in fine imported dry goods, our position is safe, but the implement manufacturer and the hardware man must fight for this market. It is worth fighting for, and the fight should begin now by putting before the new comers the best implements that can be manufactured. The tariff alone will not do the trick, and it will be folly to charge all the tariff will permit. That is not how new markets are won. The 18,000 of last year become the 36,000 of this year, and the stream is only beginning to flow. Wait till it cuts a channel for itself."

A Visit to a Saint Factory.

WHAT lends a peculiar interest to a visit to such a factory, writes a contributor to "Pearson's Magazine," is the curious suggestion of humor which, in one's conversation with the workmen and employees, comes to relieve the deep sense of awe and reverence which at all times weighs upon one.

I remember that, having contemplated, not without a painful feeling in my breast, the most lamentable figure of an old man in monk's attire, whose hands were pierced, whose side was pierced, and from whose furrowed brow large drops of blood were trickling down, I asked a passing workman to tell me whom the statue represented. And he called to a fellow-workman: "Who is that old gent up there?" It was St. Francis d'Assisi. The painful feeling was for a while dispelled. This was but a figure after all, an article of trade. And so also, when one hears the clerks calling through the telephones: "When is that St. Maurice coming down?" "Five St. Anthonys, with their pigs, wanted at once." And so on. There is not a vestige of irreverence in these remarks, but, as I say, they are not without a most welcome suggestion of humor.

For, indeed, the terrible realism of many of these statues must impress even the most indifferent. I could not refrain from asking the maker of saints why he allowed his artists to carry the horrible to such extremes. Here was a St. Jean de Dieu succoring a leper, on whose body the modeller had not omitted one of the horrid signs of that most foul of maladies. Here was a writhing St. Sebastian streaming with blood. Here a chained woman in the flames of purgatory extended her anguished hands.

"We export very largely to South America," said Monsieur Pacheu, "and it is necessary that, to impress the imaginations of the people there—who are indifferent, as a rule, to suffering—we should strike hard. Yet in none of our figures is truth surpassed. That leper is studied from life. Those horrid bruises were copied from a corpse."

So many persons are operated upon every day that it is becoming quite a distinction to go to the grave all in one piece.—Atchison "Globe."

"Doesn't it make you the least bit envious to see what elegant furniture Mrs. Eyefly is putting into her house next door?" "Not a bit. My husband says it will be sold by the sheriff within six months—and I'll be there to buy."—Chicago "Tribune"

The eccentric millionaire decided to build a Venetian palace in the little lake that adorned his country home.

"It will be easy enough to build the palace," said the architect whom he was consulting, "but there may be some trouble about the foundation."

"Well, you start for Venice on the first steamer that sails for Europe. Find out how they lay the foundations for their palaces over there, and add your expenses to the bill."

"WHIZ!! WALK A MILE"

Is a laconic definition of a toboggan ride. It's quick work going down the slide, but it's a long climb back to the starting point. It is very much that way with health; it is quickly lost and slowly regained. When the first symptoms of failing health appear, proper care may prevent the descent to utter weakness and debility. Usually the complication of disorders known as general debility has its origin in a diseased condition of the stomach and other organs of digestion and nutrition. These diseases are perfectly cured by the use of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. It cures through the stomach disorders which have their origin in a diseased condition of the stomach.

There is no alcohol in the "Discovery," neither opium, cocaine nor other narcotic.

"I was all run down; had no strength; had sharp darting pains all through me; head and back ache every day," writes Mrs. Frank Caswell, of Salamanca, N. Y. "I was also troubled with a distressed feeling in the stomach and pain in front of the hip bones. I had a severe cough and it nearly killed me to draw a long breath, I was so sore through my lungs.

"I wrote to Dr. Pierce, telling my symptoms as near as I could. He sent me a very kind letter, advising me to try his medicines, which I did, and before I had taken them a week I was decidedly better. I took two bottles of the 'Golden Medical Discovery' and two of the 'Favorite Prescription,' and am sure I never felt better in my life than when I quit taking them."

and did not answer me when I spoke, so I am sure he is ill."

"Aleck ill!" cried Daisy, in grand alarm.

She did not wait to hear the rest of the girl's story, but flew with desperate, breathless haste down to the parlor. As she hastened away, she did not notice that she had left the girl in the room behind her.

Ten minutes later Daisy returned to her room; the maid was still there.

"What could you mean by telling me my husband came home ill, Janet?" she asked impatiently. "He has not been home since luncheon. No one in the house has even seen him."

Daisy never noticed that the girl's face was flushed and her manner strange.

"I was so sure it was Mr. Hamilton!" she declared, murmuring something about being sorry she had made such an awkward mistake; "but I am very glad to know he was not ill."

Glancing toward the glowing bed of coals in the grate, Daisy was thankful to see that no trace or fragment of the letter remained.

There was a terrible load lifted from her heart; she had seen Harold St. John leaving the hotel in the hack that went to meet the noon train.

He had not recognized her then; heaven had spared her.

Aleck was surprised at the wonderful change in her when he returned an hour later.

She threw herself into his arms with a hysterical sob.

"It is going to be as you wish, Aleck, my love!" she faltered. "We will not go; indeed I— would rather stay here."

Aleck was puzzled as well as being amused.

"I had just come to tell you, darling, that I have bought tickets back to New York," he said gayly.

A strange smile passed over the maid's lips.

"Ha! my lady, I will go with you; the terrible secret I have discovered shall be converted into a little gold mine. You shall pay me handsomely, or ere tomorrow's sun rises Mr. Hamilton shall know all!"

CHAPTER XV.

The Price of Silence.

No one ever yet took a first step in the downward path of concealment and folly, but was forced by necessity still farther down the broad road that leads to a precipice.

"Oh, what a tangled web we weave,
When first we practice to deceive."

Poor hapless Daisy had sinned too deeply and too piteously to retrace her steps now— she was recklessly following the hand of love that led her on to her doom.

Amidst new scenes and new faces Daisy told herself she would once more be happy, even though she knew her danger.

There was one thing, however, that puzzled and annoyed her, and that was the great change that had come over her maid Janet.

The French maid was no longer deferential to her wishes; there was a look in her black eyes that Daisy could not comprehend, and there were occasional hints of secrets she had discovered in the lives of many of the dainty ladies who had employed her, and her words were always accompanied by a piercing smile and a peculiar nod that made Daisy's blood almost turn to ice around her heart.

"Can she suspect? Ah, surely not," Daisy assured herself over and over again, for the very thought terrified her.

The girl's manner was becoming intolerable to her, and she concluded to dispense with her services at once.

Janet received her dismissal with a sneering smile.

"I have that to say which may change your decision, madame," she said, and to Daisy's great surprise the girl glided swiftly across the room and turned the key in the lock.

"Why do you do that?" she asked, in amazement.

"Because I want to talk to you without interruption, my lady," answered the girl.

Daisy rose to her feet in haughty displeasure.

"You behave very strangely," she said. "I do not like it."

She looked fixedly at the girl, whose face was not pleasant to see— there was a lurid light in her eyes, and an air of cringing, yet defiance, in her whole manner.

"You may as well be seated, for you must listen to me, Mrs. Hamilton. I hold a secret of yours, and it would not be well to make an enemy of me. I intended to leave your service long ago, but I must not go away emptyhanded. You must pay me well if I keep your secret!"

"You can know no secret of mine," returned Daisy bravely. "How dare you insinuate such a thing?"

"But I do," persisted the girl, "and I could very soon convince Mr. Hamilton that it was a very dark secret, too. If you want it kept from him you must pay me a thousand dollars for it."

"You— you have taken leave of your senses," cried Daisy, clutching nervously at the marble mantel, her lovely face paling, and her blue eyes expanding in guilty terror.

"You will find, on the contrary, that I was never more sane in my life, Mrs. Hamilton. Let me tell you what I have to say."

Daisy leaned heavily against the cold marble and looked at her.

Had this girl in any way found out the terrible secret which was wearing her young life out like a blighting canker at the heart of a rose? Ah, no, she had been too careful, too guarded for that. Even the register in the dim old church could not reveal what had happened there—fate had screened her name in so curious a way at the expense of poor Lillian Ruthven, the heiress.

Daisy collected her scattered thoughts by a great effort.

"Say what you have to say quickly," she said. "I suppose I must listen. Let this unpleasant scene terminate as quickly as possible."

The maid rose from her chair and glided toward her.

"Do you remember what happened yesterday, my lady?" she asked.

Daisy started, her face paling to a dead white.

"Say what you have to say very quickly," she replied, steadily. "I cannot comprehend what you are getting at."

The girl returned her gaze with glittering eyes.

"Do you remember, my lady, how excited you were when you came back

(To be Continued.)

The Veal Age.

This is assuredly the Veal Age in literature. People no longer ask about an author, How old is he? but How young is he—or she, as is usually the case. Of the writers on the staff of Josh, Gosh & Co. 85 per cent. are under the age of twenty-one, and 25 per cent. are under sixteen years. Sixty-eight per cent. of these write historical romances and 32 per cent. write in the colonial style.—[illegible]

The Friend of M'dame.

HERE is a little story which was told me in the twilight, when we had finished our tea and still sat, cups in hand, loth to say good-bye. We were talking of a town far down east, near which there is a queer old gray stone house which has not been inhabited in twenty years.

Once, said the visitor, it was one of the prettiest places in Canada. A handsome young mistress ruled over it and over two of those old-fashioned loyal family servants who are now out of vogue. The master was a traveler, often away for a month at a stretch, but Jean and Jacqueline and "M'dame" were as happy and contented as three people could be. "M'dame" had her dogs, her horses, her pigeons, her books, her piano and her needlework. She was convent-bred, and had married from school—an orphan, who had never been to a dance or a play or a race meet, nor even a big dinner. The Cure dined sometimes at the Stone House, the doctor came to smoke a pipe with the master and play cards; the master invited no one else, and the mistress withdrew herself from the few gentlefolks who would have entertained her in the neighborhood. She was gently born and convent-bred—you know how that type can be happy in a seclusion that would madden you and me.

One day Jean and Jacqueline were made anxious by the delay in the return of m'dame from her drive. Long after the simple little dinner of fish and fruit was spoiled by waiting m'dame came home—was brought home, rather—by a strange gentleman who had startled her ponies in an unfrequented road, and after a time stopped their runaway career and taken them in hand. The gentleman came up to the verandah with m'dame, and because it was so warm, and he a bit tousled and dusty, Jean took him into the dressing-room of monsieur and brushed him, and Jacqueline made him a famous drink of fruit-syrup and ice, with a dash of something French and liquorish.

"I shall look in to-morrow, if I may, to see that you are none the worse," they heard him say, as he lifted his hat in farewell to m'dame, and Jean said to Jacqueline: "He is not Canadian, nor of the Republic, but English," and Jacqueline nodded, "So it appears to me, my friend."

To-morrow and on many other morrows the stranger sat on the rose-wreathed verandah, Jean and Jacqueline always watchfully chaperoning their mistress. M'dame read and played and sang to the stranger, who was courtesy and compliment personified, and Jean and Jacqueline agreed that never had they served a finer fellow than this one whom they always mentioned as "the friend of m'dame."

Monsieur was away on a long trip, somewhere in that region vaguely known as the North-West, but just before he might be expected home the servants heard the Englishman regretting that home news had arrived calling him back to England.

So he went away, and monsieur duly returned. M'dame drove to meet him, and on the verandah, in the hearing of Jean and Jacqueline, detailed the story of the runaway, mentioned that the stranger had called, and had gone to England. It was strange how her story gave the impression that he had only called once! Jean and Jacqueline thought it strange, though neither one made any remark, each being secretly a bit ashamed of having noticed it at all.

It was about this time that Jacqueline began to be anxious about the health of m'dame, and ventured to give monsieur a few timid words in that connection.

"M'dame not strong!" cried monsieur heartily. "Nonsense!" Monsieur was a very big, very robust and very slow-witted person, it seems. Jean was also moved to remark that m'dame needed change of air, did not sleep well, ate less than formerly, and rarely sang those brilliant and somewhat "risque" French songs which monsieur preferred. Monsieur protested. "You and Jacqueline have absurd fancies," he said, testily.

And then he told m'dame, and she, wonderful to relate, grew suddenly furious at her two servitors, and rated them for officious meddlers. You could not picture the horror and chagrin of those two! M'dame, their cherished, petted, adored one, abusing them in wrathful tones! "Certainly she is ill," said Jean, with sorrowful pigheadedness. "We must be very, very good to her, until she is quite recovered."

When monsieur went away again, this time on a shorter trip, he asked m'dame to come with him. She promptly refused. "In this heat I should die of the railway train, smother in the country inns and fall ill of the viands," she said with a wave of her pretty hands, consigning the whole scheme to limbo.

"On the way to the train, monsieur met the physician. "I wish you'd take a look in occasionally at my wife," he said; "she's not ill, but silly old Jean and Jacqueline persist she is, and I think she is suffering from the heat."

"She has been driving about so much and walking too far. The English are such walkers, and that young man has made her walk too far every day in the sun," said the doctor testily, for he had not once been asked to smoke a pipe while monsieur was this time at home.

Monsieur was boarding his train at the instant and scarcely comprehended the remark. It went in at his ears and did not at once reach his brain. But when he had settled himself, some moments later, suddenly it arrived. He started. "Young Englishman—walking in the sun every day!" the physician's words jostled each other to the tuck-a-tuck of the train over the rails.

Monsieur turned a very deep red. "Good thing he's left the country!" he said in a very ugly tone, and then got redder yet, for his next neighbor "pardoned" and asked what monsieur had remarked.

"Oh, nothing! nothing!" he shortly replied, nervously unable to think of a tactful improvisation.

Meanwhile m'dame and Jean and Jacqueline were living in the old gray stone house, the same equable lives as before, only always m'dame growing more and more difficile, passing Jacqueline's tastiest soups and entrees and sitting much in her hammock under the arbor from which one could see a long way down the dusty country road.

The old French people grew very sober and silent. Even when Jacqueline went down the orchard to milk her Jersey cow, she quite forgot to sing and call Bijou, the poodle, to trot at her side. She prayed often to her good Saint Anne, and opened her fat little savings bank and took out her coin and bought four big candles, which burned gaily the next Sunday before the altar of Bonne Ste. Anne in the church of the village.

One day m'dame came in from her drive a bit late, and as she pulled up her ponies at the gate she cried: "Jacqueline, ma bonne, hast thou a good dinner? I am hungry again!" And Jacqueline, hastily crossing herself and sending a sort of telegraphic "thank you" to Bonne Ste. Anne, told of the little chicken roasting and the late salad and the early Crawford peaches on the ice, with Devonshire cream, and then, in gratified tones, mentioned that m'dame's favorite potage was just ready to serve.

It was the old merry dinner-hour, when Jean and Jacqueline almost quarrelled about who should serve m'dame, though it was well known that it was to Jean to serve, to pour the wine, to enquire if the dinner was as m'dame liked, while Jacqueline stood humbly by the door until it was time to remove the different services.

Jacqueline was a bit bumptious when she remembered her four candles and the evident complaisance of Bonne Ste. Anne, and so far forgot herself as to march in with the roast chicken and actually place it herself before m'dame. Only the exceeding content of Jean with m'dame's appetite and spirits made him overlook this breach of privilege!

After dinner m'dame and Bijou strolled down the orchard as usual, and Jean gently reprimanded Jacqueline, who immediately demolished him with the revelation of the four candles and the complaisance of Bonne Ste. Anne.

Then Jacqueline trotted busily down the orchard with a little shawl, for m'dame had gone out with her beautiful shoulders bare. She, good Jacqueline, paused at the prettiest of pictures, m'dame reading a letter, Bijou sitting up before her, begging; then m'dame kissing the senseless sheets of paper and crushing them to her bosom and crying: "He comes, Bijou, my little one! Only you must know it! He comes! He cannot leave us, Bijou!"

Jacqueline came forward all smiles. "A little shawl, m'dame," she said, archly. "Monsieur will not be pleased to find m'dame with a cold," then shrank back from her flushed and frowning mistress. In one instant the letter was in m'dame's pocket and she had recovered herself.

"Some day, Jacqueline, you will frighten me to death. Don't follow me about, my good soul!" she said quickly. "I am going in. I shall not need the little shawl, and you know I never take cold," and, like a flash, m'dame swept by, calling to Bijou to come in for his forgotten lump of sugar at once.

There was an envelope on the grass, which Jacqueline picked up. It was not addressed, and it was crushed and a little rubbed and dirty. The old woman dropped it as if it were hot.

"I have wasted my four candles," she sighed, as she went hurriedly back to her kitchen.

That night m'dame slept like an infant, as the anxious old woman assured herself by many visits to her bedside, but Jacqueline slept not at all. Instead she prayed, but not once to Bonne Ste. Anne.

For several days m'dame came home from drives or walks in famous appetite and spirits. Jean chortled, and teased his glum companion, enquiring if she begrudged the four candles now, and being overcome by her fierce rejoinder that she did.

At last one evening Jacqueline's forebodings were realised; the rustic gate swung on its hinges with a bang, and the tall form of the friend of m'dame came to the verandah. Jacqueline stood behind the shutters and remarked the meeting. M'dame was neither flurried nor surprised. Indeed, she barely held out her hand, but Jacqueline could see how her whole frame trembled.

The old woman hurried out to the kitchen garden, where Jean was picking some herbs for drying.

"See here!" said she, explosively. "This will not do. Here is that cursed Englishman back again!"

Jean dropped his tray of herbs. "Where?" he gasped.

"But there on the verandah. What must be done?"

"Calm thyself, good Jacqueline. I have not been kind with thee lately. Is it no new thing, this idea of thine?" Jean's voice was trembling with confusion and distress.

"New! New! And I vowing candles to Ste. Anne and spending one whole night on my knees, while thou in bed snored and snored! It is this cursed Englishman, only him! She was so content and happy here. He has ruined us all!"

Jean put his hand over her mouth. "Shut up! you are dreaming!" he said, fiercely.

"Oh, am I, indeed? Well, one awakes! Let me tell you—" and in a torrent of whispers she told of the letter, the changed spirits and the words to Bijou. "Now, isn't this too much for us?" she cried between sobs.

"If only monsieur were here!" said Jean distractedly. A heavy hand fell on his shoulder.

"Well, my good Jean, he is here," and so was he, in traveling dust-coat and valise, having come up between the ranks of vegetables and herbs from the back gate. "Don't be frightened, you two. You, at least, need not fear," said monsieur, kindly. "I gather from you, good woman, that the serpent has entered my Eden. Well, I shall put the serpent out. It will not be a mighty task, never fear. Jacqueline, will you very quietly give me a biscuit and a glass of wine, out here?—as quickly and as quietly as you can—not to disturb m'dame. Jean, take my valise into your own room and return here to me directly."

Monsieur sat down on a rustic bench amid the vegetables and herbs, while Jean and Jacqueline stole into the house.

"I shall tell m'dame," said Jean, "if monsieur shoots me for it."

"You will do as you like," said Jacqueline, rooting in her biscuit-box. "I know enough to obey." Jean hung his head and softly mounted to his own chamber with the valise and coat.

Monsieur drank two glasses of wine and ate a biscuit.

"I am going out as I came, and shall meet the serpent outside paradise," said monsieur. "Unless m'dame rings for you, you will remain here, you two." Then he went back down the narrow path between the vegetables.

"Hold my hand, Jean!" said Jacqueline in a shrill child's voice.

"I am sore afraid, too!" sighed Jean.

Outside on the dusty road monsieur paced to and fro. Presently, as hour or so later, the rustic gate swung back and two figures came out.

"You will come with me to-morrow!" said the strong English voice. "Promise me!" Then monsieur listened as one listens to the nails driven in his scaffold.

"Not to-morrow," said m'dame, pleadingly. "It is not possible!"

"But the ship sails next day, beloved, and if he returns." M'dame slipped inside the gate, trembling, warned by some psychic current, who knows? and faltered:

"I cannot go to-morrow! I must think. I will tell you in the morning, at the old place, when I can go," and then her white dress and pale face flitted under the trees, up the verandah steps and into the shadows.

In a moment her bell tinkled and Jacqueline's voice was heard crying, "A l'instant, m'dame!"

The Englishman laughed.

"Cursed French tricks," he said, loudly. "I've a good mind to sail without her."

Monsieur strolled down the road; the Englishman stared at him curiously.

"Bonsoir, monsieur! Could you oblige me with a light?" said monsieur. The Englishman handed him a match-case.

"Monsieur resides here?" politely enquired he, striking a match and lighting a cigar.

"No," said the Englishman, shortly. "Just making a call."

"Ah, you know the afflicted one?" (politely to a degree).

"Afflicted one? What do you mean?" stammered the stranger.

"I mean," explained monsieur, "but I detain you. Let us go together, if agreeable; I am walking to the village."

"But, you mean?" insisted the Englishman, anxiously.

"Only this, that the beautiful lady is mad. Surely you know her sad history?" queried monsieur in surprised tones.

"Good God!" cried the Englishman. "Mad! Why, she goes about everywhere!"

"But always watched, my dear sir. You would not remark it, but it is true. When she receives friends there is always a keeper concealed close at hand, within earshot. When she drives she is perhaps in peril, but she has never come to much harm. Once she was rescued in a runaway by some tourist, whom she has since spoken of in her times of delirium. Her physician sent for me to-day to decide whether she should be put under restraint. I am, monsieur, the superintendent of the insane asylum. We await the return of that much-to-be-pitied man, her husband. Monsieur will pardon me, but, seeing you emerge from the gate, I fancied you might be he. However, no such tragedy darkens your life, for which you may be thankful."

The Englishman walked mechanically along beside monsieur. He stepped high as if his feet were numbed. Presently he shook himself together.

"Good God!" he said again. "What an escape!" Monsieur "pardoned."

"Oh, nothing! nothing!" said the Englishman hastily. "If you don't mind, I'll just hurry along. I believe my train leaves at midnight, and I have some things to pack."

Monsieur stood watching him as he strode through the dust. "A fine, handsome fool!" said he, bitterly. "I am glad she took time to think it over!" Then a sudden fury shook him. "How I'd like to feel his neck between my hands! How I'd enjoy running him through. What pleasure to pitch him over the cliff!" he gasped, and laughed as devils might.

Presently monsieur re-entered the vegetable garden, where old Jean stood waiting.

"Well, my good Jean," said monsieur cheerfully. "The serpent has left Paradise. But, to be quite sure that he has—to satisfy yourself, good Jean—would you very much mind walking to the station about the time the midnight train passes here? It is late, I know, but, to satisfy yourself—" and monsieur paused. Jean looked curiously at him. "And monsieur?"

"Oh, I shall smoke here until you return," said monsieur, sitting tranquilly down. "I always enjoy this kitchen garden, and I want to enjoy it greatly this autumn because, good Jean, I think of moving into town a little later.

When Jean got home at one of the morning, monsieur still sat smoking in the moonlight. He nodded when Jean said "I am satisfied, monsieur," and remarked: "You might ask Jacqueline to tell m'dame when she takes her the morning coffee that I arrived home by the midnight train, Jean, and am sleeping in the guest-chamber rather than disturb her."

M'dame slipped from her lace-draped bed and ran across the hall to the guest-chamber when Jacqueline had duly delivered herself of this message. There she found monsieur soundly sleeping. He was awakened by the clasp of her arms about his neck and her glad cry: "I have wanted you so badly! I am glad you are here!"

Jacqueline, shamelessly eavesdropping, said under her breath: "Forgive me, m'dame! Forgive me, Bonne Ste. Anne! And thou shalt have four more candles for Christmas!"

Warning Off the English.

An ingenious method of obtaining a reputation for patriotism cheaply has been invented by certain Berlin publicans. On their shop fronts they hang legends to this effect: "So long as the war in South Africa lasts I forbid any Englishman to enter my premises." The use of this placard is, it is said, entirely confined to houses of a class that never entertained an Englishman in the course of their existence.

Intellect vs. Morals.

It is the tendency of a sophisticated age like the present to overestimate intellectual as compared with moral and emotional gifts. The material civilization upon which we pride ourselves is almost entirely the achievement of the intellect. Fame and wealth, luxury, cultivation and leisure—all the big prizes of the world, in fact—are obtained by the successful exercise of the intellect. The moral qualities, of themselves, can procure a man nothing but a clear conscience, and the approval, perhaps mixed with contempt, of his neighbors. And yet, when the intellectual qualities are brought to the test of reality; when one's view of them is not clouded by pride, avarice, or passion, how amazingly does their value shrink and shrivel!—Henry Childs Merwin in "Atlantic Monthly."

Our New Book no Cancer

should be in the hands of every sufferer from this dread disease.

We have just completed a new book on Cancer which we believe is the most comprehensive popular work on this subject published in America. It was written for us by a physician who has given the subject a great deal of thought and study, and it will no doubt prove of considerable interest and be of great benefit to those suffering from cancer or tumor.

If you are afflicted with cancer yourself, or have a friend or relative who is, send two stamps to Stott & Jury Bowmanville, Ont., and a copy will be mailed you promptly in plain wrapper.

From the Camp Outside Bloemfontein

Comes a letter from a member of "C" Company, Royal Canadian Regiment, telling how "Foot Elm" helped the Canadian boys on their marches.

There is no section of the British Army now in South Africa so well equipped to undertake long tiresome marches as the Canadians. The secret is that they have "Foot Elm" in their shoes, and this harmless and wonderful discovery prevents scalding, blistering, and chafing, and robs marching of the foot-soreness which is its invariable accompaniment. Mr. T. Buckart, "C" Co., R.C.R. sends the following letter from the camp outside Bloemfontein t Messrs. Stott and Jury, Bowmanville, Ont.:

"The regiment was supplied with Foot Elm en route to Cape Town. Most of the boys have used it continuously, and all express themselves as highly delighted with the results, as it prevents scalding and chafing. A friend of mine still has a portion of his box left, and he says it is one of the most treasured things his knapsack contains." (Signed). T. Buckart

A Pair of Bad Actors

A man named Williamson and his wife were arrested yesterday evening by constables Stewart and McGinty, charged with disorderly conduct. The pair were manoeuvring in front of the Southern Hotel, with a horse, attached to a buggy. The woman was repeatedly rolled in the mud while attempting to turn the rig. The pair were vile in their language.

Valuable Advice to Rheumatics

Eat meat sparingly, and take very little sugar. Avoid intoxicants, keep away from dampness, drink water abundantly, and always rely on Nerviline as a quick reliever of rheumatic pains. Being five times stronger than ordinary remedies, Nerviline's power over pain is simply beyond belief. It cures also sciatica, lumbago, neuralgia and all pain, whether internal or external. Large bottles, price 25c.

Death of Mrs. McColl

On Sunday morning there passed away at the family residence, Douro, Jennie K. Hunter, daughter of Mr. George Hunter, of Ashburnham, and wife of Mr. William H. McColl. The deceased had been a sufferer from consumption, and bore her trials with true Christian fortitude. Mr. McColl has the sympathy of a very large circle of friends, in which The Times heartily joins. The funeral will take place to-day, at 2 o'clock, to the Little Lake Cemetery.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVORS MEET

In School Room of George Street Methodist Church to Discuss the Referendum

The meeting commenced at 8.15 in George St. Church Sunday School room by singing of hymns 117 and 359. Rev. Mr. Crowley offered prayer followed by a Male quartette.

Mr. H. P. Lindsay then addressed the meeting referring to passing of prohibitory law in 1893 and the plebescite taken in 1894 resulting in a majority of 81,000, and to the Privy Councils discussion in fall of 1896 relating to sale of Retail Liquors. Also to Mr. Buchanan's Bill having been passed by the Government of Manitoba, quoting long extracts from the 'Guardian' and 'Alliance' dealing with this question. Two minutes were allowed for general discussion in which several speakers joined. After a usual vote of thanks to the chairman the meeting was closed by singing of hymn "Onward Christian Soldiers.

A WHOLE FORTUNE

Good Food and Good Health

This food tale from a trained nurse is worth reading.

"I want to tell you of the curative properties of the good food Grape-Nuts, and will say they are a whole fortune to anyone suffering as I did for years with a stomach so rebellious as to be almost useless to me.

For years and years I was tortured with flatulency, heartburn, bloating, tenderness of the stomach, and many a time I cried bitterly because of my great distress.

One never to be forgotten day sister came up from Columbus to visit me. She bought a package of Grape-Nuts to see if the food would agree with me. I found the new food very delicious with cream, and it caused me no pain or disturbance whatever.

To make a long story short, I have been using Grape-Nuts ever since. Have gained 20 pounds in five months, and my health is perfect. It is a pleasure to be plump and healthy, and feel well again. I am a professional nurse and naturally appreciate this change in my health." Lucy M. Richardson, Box 164, Logan, Ohio.

DOVER VS. DENNE

Judgment for Mr. Denne in the Court of Appeal — This is the Third Court in which Mr. Denne Has Been Upheld

In the Court of Appeal at Osgoode Hall, judgment was given in Dover vs. Denne, a case of local interest, as follows: Before Armour, C. J. O., Osler, Maclennan, J. J. A.

Judgment (H) on appeal by plaintiffs from order of Ferguson J., dismissing appeal from report of Master at Peterborough, finding that defendant Denne, one of the three trustees under the will of Stephen Wood, who died in 1892, was not liable to make good a loss of about $5,590 incurred by reason of a breach of trust by his co-trustee, Burnham, who died in December, 1897. The Master found that Denne had no reason to suspect that Burnham, whose reputation for honesty and integrity was very high in the community, would be guilty of misappropriation of the trust funds; that when the testator was about to make his will he asked Denne to become one of the executors and trustees, but Denne refused, because, as he said, he was old and did not know about such things, whereupon the testator told him he did not want him to act in any way, because Burnham would manage everything, as he had always been theretofore doing, (Burnham having been the testator's solicitor), and that he, (testator) merely wanted Denne's name in order that if anything should happen to Burnham, Denne would communicate with testator son-in-law in England, the defendant Carruthers; that thereupon Denne consented, honestly believing that he was not obliged to take any part in the management of the estate. The Master also found that the beneficiaries and third trustee (Charruthers) acquiesced in the sole management of the estate by Burnham. Held, that the report of the Master was right and the appeal should be dismissed. Per Maclennan, J. A.—On the passing of the accounts, all debts and charges having been paid, and the residue ascertained, the executors became trustees of the testator's estate, and the liability of the respondent must be determined in that regard; re Willey, W. N 1890, p 1; re Smith, 42 Chy. 302; re Chipman, 1896, 2 Chy. 773; Phillips v. Munnings, 2 M. & Cr. 309, 314; Dix v. Burford, 19 Beav. 412. Then, regarded as a trustee, was the respondent guilty of such default as to make him liable? There is no question of the honesty of his conduct. He trusted Burnham, and had no reason to suspect him, a circumstance considered material in such cases. See in re Gasquoine, 1894, 1 Chy. 476. Of course it cannot be contended that confidence in a co-trustee, or the absence of reason for suspicion, will or ought to excuse the omission of a plain, obvious duty, but there was no such plain, obvious duty omitted or neglected by the respondent. The respondent is not responsible for the money received and misapplied by Burnham nor for the mortgages that he improperly assigned. Even if it were held that the respondent was guilty of a breach of trust, it ought also to be held that he had acted both honestly and reasonably, and ought fairly to be excused: 62 Vict., ch. 15, sec. 1, O. Altogether what passed between him and the testator would be no excuse independently of the statute, it is very material on the question whether under the circumstances his conduct was reasonable. See re Smith, 18 Times L.R., 433. Appeal dismissed with costs. A. B. Aylesworth, K. C., and F. R. Edwards, K. C., for plaintiffs. G. H. Watson, K. C., and Louis M. Hayes, Peterborough, for defendant Denne.

Greatly Increased Hotel Accommodation for Tourists

A Toronto Star correspondent has been interviewing some of the boatmen on the Stony Lake waters, with the following result:

Captain Young, of the Kawartha Lakes Navigation Company: "We are expecting a busy season up our way this year. In fact, there are indications that the tourist travel will be greater than ever before. The popularity of the Kawartha Lakes district is growing very rapidly. The district does not now have to depend upon the local traffic. It is nearly all tourist travel from the other side."

Captain Reynolds: "Our greatest trouble has been lack of proper hotel accommodation, but we are in a fair way to have that deficiency remedied so far as the Kawartha Lakes district is concerned. Several of the hotels are being enlarged, and one new one is to be erected which will be"

Congratulatory Messages

From the Ladies

The daily mails bring to the manufacturers of the Diamond Dyes congratulatory messages from ladies in every city, town and village in Canada. These letters speak of great successes and triumphs with the Diamond Dyes. Such unsolicited testimony regarding the vast superiority of Diamond Dyes is conclusive proof that no other package dyes can be compared to them in strength, fastness and beauty of colors.

It is also quite evident that the Diamond Dye Mat and Rug Patterns have increased their popularity; the present large demand is the strongest proof. RIVER FOREMAN KILLED

ALFRED EDGAR, THE VICTIM OF A SAD MISHAP

Was Jolted from His Seat on a Wagon and Sustained Internal Injuries.

Mr. Alfred Edgar, a well known citizen of Bobcaygeon, met with an accident on Tuesday last, which has since resulted in his death. Mr. Edgar was in charge of a gang of men for the Gilmour Co. of Trenton, who were on their way to Swamp Lake to drive that company's logs to Trenton. When within six miles of their destination, at a point on the Galway Road nearly opposite Mr. Chris. Graney's residence, Edgar fell or was jolted out of the wagon and alighted on the sharp end of a log.

He was picked up in an unconscious condition, and taken back to Bobcaygeon, when Dr. Thorne was summoned. It was discovered that the unfortunate man had sustained severe internal injuries, and in spite of the best medical treatment he slowly sank until death relieved his sufferings. Deceased was about forty years of age and leaves a wife and several children.

Paine's Celery Compound

The Great Spring Medicine

WHILE IT DRIVES OUT THE SEEDS OF DEADLY DISEASES IT QUICKLY BUILDS UP FLESH AND MUSCLE

A Marvellous Restoration Vouched for by a Prominent Clergyman

THE CURED MAN SAYS:

"I Feel Like a New Man, Which Condition I Owe to the Blessing of God and Paine's Celery Compound"

Thousands of families to-day mourn the loss of near and dear ones who, when sickness first came upon them, were forced to use other medicines instead of the great disease banisher, Paine's Celery Compound.

We earnestly appeal to the relatives and friends of the suffering, to break away from the bondage of medical etiquette and dictation, in order that the suffering ones may have a surer and happier hope of a new life.

The one remedy known to medicine that can bring vigor, strength and permanent health to the weak, rundown, rheumatic, neuralgic, dyspeptic and those burdened with kidney and liver troubles, blood diseases and derangements of the digestive organism, is Dr. Phelps's great medical prescription, Paine's Celery Compound.

The following letter from Mr. R. W. Daniels, Lawrencetown, N.S., will surely inspire every suffering man and woman with fresh courage and hope. Mr. Daniels' cure is vouched for by Rev. O. M. Tyler, a prominent clergyman of the Methodist church:

"I feel constrained for the benefit of suffering humanity, to add my testimony to the wonderful effects of your Paine's Celery Compound. I was induced to try your Compound through its wonderful effects upon a Mr. Parks; I had previously used a vast quantity of patent and doctors' medicines, only to find myself growing weaker. After using your Paine's Celery Compound to the number of five bottles, I gained forty-three pounds, and I am able to work hard all day and a season, with comfort to myself. I feel like a new man, which condition I owe to the blessing of God and your Paine's Celery Compound."

THE CRUELTY STORIES

Falsehood of the Boers and their Friends Exposed

London, April 15—In view of the recent repetition of the oft-exposed falsehoods about the British cruelty to the Boer women and children, the evidence of a continental newspaper correspondent will not be without interest. The Suisse Liberale, of Geneva, has a representative, M. Leopold Perrin, who has spent the last six months visiting the concentration camps in Natal, that he might furnish an unbiased report of what the conditions really are. He now writes his paper from Howick camp that as soon as the necessary pass was obtained, no restrictions were placed upon him. He freely mixed with the Boer men and women in the camps and visited all the buildings. The camp had four thousand Boer men, women and children, and he questioned many of them. The families were somewhat cramped for room, but he found them comfortable enough.

"I specially remarked," he says, "that the hospitals were supplied with every comfort, and furnished with the latest medical appliances. The Boer patients who were dangerously ill were supplied with every delicacy, such as milk, eggs, brandy, port, and even champagne. A son of Louis Botha, who was recovering from typhoid fever, received two bottles of champagne every day."

BACK TO ACADIA

The last Family of Anticosti Colonists in Manitoba to the East

Montreal, April 15—The departure of James Osborne as soon as he and his family are released from the Winnipeg pesthouse will mark the close of the Anticosti colony which was established in Manitoba three years ago for the fishermen who had been driven from their island home by the purchase of Anticosti by the French chocolate king.

After Menier secured control of the island friction between the inhabitants and the proprietor ended only when they were finally ejected. The Dominion Government came to their aid, offered them land in the far West, and aided them to reach it. About forty healthy families took advantage of the Government offer, left for Manitoba and settled in the Dauphin district. Here they made an honest effort as agriculturists, and in a few instances they met with a fair measure of success: but in the end they pined like children for the salt breezes, and eventually, one by one, returned to the Atlantic coast. With the incoming of many new settlers the gradual departure of the Anticostians was finally settled. It was known that they were not satisfied, and some were even assisted to return; but it was only upon the arrival of the Osborne family in Winnipeg a short time ago that it was ascertained that they were the last of the colony. The Osborne family was attacked by smallpox, but have recovered and within a few weeks will resume their journey to the Atlantic coast.

Mr. Osborne says the climate was unsuited to the new comers, farming was new to them, the prairie was unbearably monotonous and the changed conditions began to tell upon their health. Then began the movement eastward. Needless to say, all the islanders feel very bitter toward the French owner of Anticosti.

SCHOOL BOYS WHO WANTED TO FIGHT

Adventure of Three Woodstock Lads Bent on War.

WISHED TO ENLIST FOR S. AFRICA

Walked to London to Join the Regiment for South Africa — weary and Footsore They Returned.

Woodstock, April 16.—A day or two ago, two lads of 13 and 12, named Whaley and Edwards, did not answer the roll-call at Delatre Street School. A boy of about the same age named Ferney also failed to show up in his class at the Separate School.

There was a mystery somewhere which was further enhanced when the parents of the Whaley and Edwards lads sent word to Principal Cameron in response to enquiries from him that the young hopefuls were not at home either.

The mystery was cleared yesterday by the return home of Masters Whaley, Edwards and Ferney. They explained that fired by military ardor they had gone to London to enlist for South Africa. Their total resources consisted of four coppers, so they decided there was nothing else to do but walk to London, where they understood recruits were enlisted, taking consolation from the fact that when they got to South Africa they'd have plenty of walking to do, anyway, and a little here wouldn't matter.

So they walked every step of the way to London, though the roads were bad and the weather atrocious. Each cheered the other on the way.

But by the time the plucky trio arrived in the Forest City, weary with footsore, they had concluded that they had had soldiering enough. How to get back home was the next question.

Emboldened by the adventures they had already had, they were ready to rush into more danger, so they jumped a freight train that was coming this way, and rode as far as Ingersoll. There the trainmen caught them, and chased them away, and the three made the rest of their way home as they journeyed to London—on foot.

BRITISH MULES AT LATHROP

MISSOURI FARMERS OBJECT TO STOPPING SALE

They Appeal to Governor Dockery—Say That the Traffic Has Reached the Value of $7,000,000 in Mules and Horses.

Lathrop, Mo., April 15.—It is said here that the order of President Roosevelt to investigate the purchase of horses and mules by the British Government will include the supply camp at this place. The farmers during the last year have sold $7,000,000 worth of horses and thousands of dollars worth of feed, and will ask Governor Dockery to prevent the possible stoppage of the traffic.

The statement of Major Moore, of the British army, in charge of the camp, that the British Government has not purchased any horses or mules at Lathrop, but simply inspect the animals here, the purchases being completed after they are landed in South Africa, is refuted by the statement of J. D. Guyton, President of the Guyton and Harrington Mule Company.

He says, "We do not own any of the horses and mules here now.

"In fact, we do not even furnish one-half of the horses and mules which are concentrated by the British Remount Department. We sell to the British considerably more horses and mules than any other firm in the country. You will notice when the stock is arriving that each and every animal bears on his left hip the official brand of the British War Office, namely, the broad arrow."

Jefferson City, Mo., April 15—Gov. Dockery has decided to investigate the charges that a British supply depot is being maintained at Lathrop to furnish the British army in South Africa with horses and mules. Last night he sent his private secretary, O. P. Gentry, to Lathrop under instructions to investigate thoroughly the situation.

The Governor says there is some question as to whether the neutrality laws are being violated by the British Government. If they are, he says, the national authorities at Washington will have to deal with the situation. He will make the investigation, and then report it to Washington with recommendations. The Governor says he is in sympathy with the Boer cause.

A SPLENDID REPORT

Presented at the Annual Meeting of the Western Bank of Canada

We have much pleasure in directing the attention of our readers to the report of the twentieth annual meeting of the shareholders of the Western Bank of Canada, which took place at the head office of that institution, Oshawa, on Wednesday, April 9th.

The report speaks for itself. It shows that great care has characterised the management of the Bank during the past, and that substantial progress is the order of the day. That the earnings of the Bank for the last financial period is in excess of any previous year, is perhaps only natural under the circumstances. After paying two half-yearly dividends of 3 1-2 per cent. each, $16,000 to Rest Account, $12,857.33 to the credit of the past due paper, $4,078.21 has been carried forward to Profit and Loss. While the deposits have increased nearly half a million, the circulation about $14,000, and the gross assets $530,452, over previous year, the losses have decreased, and are below the average of previous years. The Rest Account now stands at $150,000.

We heartily congratulate Mr. T. H. McMillan, the cashier, and the board of directors, on the splendid showing.

THE PAGAN INDIANS MAKE THREATS

Onondaga Chiefs Object to Proposed Division of Their Land

TO KEEP ONLY FULL BLOODS.

They Have a Law Which Enables Them to Expel All Half-breeds from the Reservation

Special to The Times.

Syracuse, April 14—The Onondaga Indians are aroused over the proposition to admit Indians in this state to citizenship and to divide their lands into individual holdings. They declare that they will retaliate by expelling all except full-blood Onondagas from the reservation.

The pagan Indians are leading the movement, and last night they held an indignation meeting to consider it. A resolution to that effect was passed by the Council of Chiefs.

Under the Indian law of this State such an expulsion would be possible. It provides that upon the petition of a majority of the chiefs of any tribe, any person not a member of the tribe may be cited before the county judge to show cause why he should not be expelled from the reservation. Upon proof that the accused is not a member of the tribe through maternal descent, the court must impose a sentence of expulsion.

If the threat be carried out there will be left twenty families on the Onondaga reservation. The other eighty or more families will be sent away, each to its own tribe.

"It is not an unjust move," said one of the pagan party; "it is only for our protection. We have adopted civilization, and we want the benefit of civil laws. We have worked and made homes for ourselves, and we do not want to see them taken away. Our children should have them when we are gone. We would compel no one against his will to adopt citizenship. Let there be a period of twenty-five years in which the older Indians may remain in our present state under the protection of the Government, while the less conservative ones may assume citizenship immediately."

BRITISH CONFLICT WITH RUSSIA

London Times' Comments on the Budget Speech of the British Chancellor

Special to The Times

London, April 16.—The Tokio correspondent of The Times quotes the leading Japanese paper as saying that although a British-Russian conflict in Central Asia, through Russia's seeking an outlet by way of Afghanistan, would not necessarily involve Japan, nevertheless the Japanese appreciate the fact that the spirit of the treaty with the British is not bound by the mere letter of the convention.

London, April 16.—An editoral in The London Times, discussing Sir Michael Hicks-Beach's budget speech, says: We are not clearly convinced by the Chancellor's argument that tobacco would not bear a somewhat heavier burden. If competition with American dealers reduces the praise, consumption will probably be stimulated, and the State ought to profit." The Times says the proposals of the Chancellor are eminently simple and clear.

SPANISH GOVERNMENT CUNNING.

London, April 16.—A despatch from Madrid to The Times says that the Spanish Government has overcome the difficulty confronting it in the registration of the religious communities by procuring a decree, with a royal order, purporting to explain and facilitate the measure, but which in reality renders it nugatory. The Government could neither enforce nor revoke measures against the religious associations.

Items of Interest

Ottawa, April 16.—Yesterday Premier Laurier laid upon the table the report of Messrs. Clute, Munn and Foley on Japanese immigration. In their conclusions the commissioners say: "The consensus of opinion of the people of British Columbia is that the Japanese do not and cannot assimilate with white people, and that while in some respects they are less undesirable than the Chinese, in that they adopt more readily our habits of life and spend more of their earnings in the country, yet in all that goes to make for the permanent settlement of the country they are quite as serious a menace as the Chinese, and keener competitors against the working men, and as they have more energy, push and independence, more dangerous in this regard than the Chinese."

The Japanese law of August 2, 1900 forbidding emigration of Japan laborers to Canada is commended the hope expressed that it may be repealed. In the event, however, of that statute being revoked the commissioners state that the welfare of the Province of British Columbia imperatively demands that effective measures be adopted to take the of the inhibition now imposed by the Japanese Government. Your commissioners recommend that in that event an act be passed by the Dominion Government in the line of what is known as the Natal act, made sufficiently stringent and effective to accomplish the desired result.

Montreal, April 16.—Albert Lussier, ex-M.P.P., Seigneur of Varennes, was shot and probably fatally injured by his son, Aime Lussier, at an early hour in the morning. The affair took place at the father's house in Varennes, about twenty miles below Montreal.

The son spent the evening in the company of some young ladies of the village, but returned early and retired to his room. Shortly after midnight he came down stairs, and entering the bedroom of his mother, struck her several times with a cane. A young sister, who also slept in the room, tried to interfere, and he struck her.

The father was aroused by the noise and ran to the assistance of his daughter, when Aime Lussier hurriedly left the room. He went to his own bedroom, picked up a revolver he had in a drawer, and came downstairs again. Without any warning he shot his father four times, inflicting probably fatal wounds.

The son was arrested. He refuses to discuss the crime. He is 22 years of age, and has been well educated. The Lussier family is one of the best known in the Province. Mr. Albert Lussier, who is very wealthy, is a director of the Provincial Bank, and was member of the Legislative Assembly from 1886 to 1897, and at different times mayor of the parish and warden of the county. He is a brother-in-law of Hon. C. B. De Boucherville, ex-Premier.

THE BOERS IN EUROPE

Utrecht, Holland, April 14.—Dr. Leyds, the Transvaal agent, and other Boer leaders had a long conference yesterday evening. Dr. Leyds afterwards asserted that the meeting was not connected with the conference proceeding at Klerksdorp, Transvaal Colony. Peace however, he added, could not be concluded without previous consultation with the Boer representatives in Europe.

LONDON'S MEAT FAMINE

London, April 14.—The so-called meat famine, which has already been exploited throughout the British press, has now become a matter of keen interest to Londoners, who hitherto have not been affected by the prevailing scarcity. A careful canvass of London shows that the retailers at the present time are the sole sufferers by the advance in the wholesale price which amounts to a penny a pound on all grades of meat. Since January the majority of the retailers have been running their business absolutely without profit, because lack of organization prevented a uniform increase of prices. A meeting, however, has been called, which undoubtedly result in a uniform increase in the price of meat on the part of the retailers throughout London.

MILLER SENTENCED FOR LIFE.

Detroit, April 15.—Prof. Joseph M. Miller, the music teacher, who yesterday confessed to having murdered Miss Carrie N. Dannet with a hatchet, was arraigned in the Recorder's Court to-day. The question of Miller's sanity was raised and three alienists, Drs. Emerson, Kennedy and Hitchcock, found that he was sane. He was sentenced to Jackson Prison for life this afternoon. At midnight to-night, 72 hours after his murder of Miss Jennet, Miller was in the prison to spend the rest of his life there at hard labor. His wife, who has been an invalid for several years, is prostrated at her home and is in a critical condition.

Woodstock, April 14.—Since the news of the murder committed by Joseph Miller in Detroit reached this city numerous citizens have recalled the man, and all speak well of him, though it seems to have been generally understood that some time before leaving Woodstock he had got into the hands of bad companions. Relatives of his wife still live in the vicinity of Norwich, and they have all along been of the opinion that the Miller household in Detroit was a happy one. This opinion was found from letters received from time to time from Mrs. Miller.

Queenstown, April 16.—Gunnery Lieutenant James H. S. Hayne, Lieutenant Miller and nine bluejackets were instantly killed yesterday afternoon by the bursting of a twelve inch gun on board the British firstclass battleship Mars during gun practice off Berehaven. In addition several men were injured by the explosion. The breach of the gun blew out after it had missed fire twice. The bodies of the two men who were sighting the gun were shattered to pieces and blown overboard. The injured seamen were brought ashore here to-day.

THE DISTURBANCES IN BELGIUM.

Brussels, April 16.—In consequence of the disorders the pupils of several communal schools have been dismissed and the premises have been utilized as barracks for the troops.

All the factories and mines at Morlanwelz, Valere and Mabille have been closed.

Socialist disturbances occurred last night at Namur. A mob there stoned the police, who charged with drawn swords. Subsequently a force of gendarmes scattered the rioters.

HARD BOILED EGGS IN CHURCH.

London, April 13.—After the special Easter service last night at St. Mary-at-Hill Church Monument, the rector, the Rev. W. Carlile, received offerings of hard-boiled eggs from the congregation.

A large number of people before the church was opened presented a rather curious spectacle as they crowded about the doors with little paper bags in their hands containing the eggs.

The collection of the offerings by the sidesmen was another unusual spectacle.

The eggs were afterwards used at a supper given in the rectory to penniless and starving men.

CO-OPERATION OF ZIONISTS.

London, April 16.—The very latest thing in co-operation is its adoption by the Zionists in order to raise funds for the return to Palestine.

The belief in the eventual return to Palestine is growing stronger and stronger among the Jews, and already the Zionists number over 500,000, and have raised $250,000 as a nucleus for the expenses of the new exodus.

But they realise that this sum will have to be largely augmented before anything definite can be done, and it is with this object that the new co-operative societies are being organized.

Already one such society has been founded at Mile-end, and some hundreds of members have already joined. No interest is to be paid on the capital, but after paying away a certain percentage of profit 10 per cent, will be devoted to the Zionist fund.

WANTS MEN FOR CANADA.

London, April 16.—The Bishop of Moosonee, who is at present in this country, is making an urgent appeal for men for his diocese. He specially wants two clergymen to fill immediate vacancies, one at Fort Churchill, where the work is among Chippewayans and Eskimos, and the other at Bismotasing, on the Canadian Pacific Railway. "Our life," says the Bishop, "is hard but healthy, with never a case of serious illness; our lot is lonely, but happy, and there is at times a spice of adventure which lights up the monotony."

Ottawa, April 16.—"Three thousand Americans a month is the rate of immigration into the Canadian West," says Mr. W. J. White, inspector of Canadian immigration agencies in the States. Mr. White has just returned from the West, and says the Canadian agents are getting hundreds of enquiries from all parts of the Western States about land in Canada.

A NOVEL SPORTING EVENT.

London, April 16.—A novel sporting event was witnessed on Saturday at Linthwaite, near Huddersfield.

A local innkeeper named Lightowler back his Irish terrier for £5 to run 300 yards while a pigeon belonging to another man named Horner was flying the same distance, the conditions being that the bird should alight on its owner's shoulder or hand.

The distance was covered by the terrier in 27 seconds, but the pigeon was not equal to the task, and taking a zigzag course was seven minutes on the journey alighting on the ground in front of its owner.

Large odds were laid on the pigeon.

NO INFORMATION REGARDING PEACE

Mr. Balfour Makes an Announcement in the House

UNWISE TO SPEAK JUST NOW.

But when There is Any News to Communicate the Government will Immediately Inform the House.

Special to The Times.

London, April 16.—The Government leader, A. J. Balfour, replying to a question in the House of Commons, to-day, announced that the ministers had no information to impart on the subject of the South African peace negotiations, nor, under the circumstances, could any information be imparted at the present stage of the negotiations. The Government, Mr. Balfour added, would immediately inform Parliament of the fact when they had any news to communicate.

MACEDONIA TO BE INVADED

Revolutionary Committee Orders a Rising for April 27

Special to The Times.

Cologne, April 16.—The Sofia correspondent of the Cologne Gazette telegraphs that M. Sarafoff, president of the Macedonian Committee, has issued a proclamation calling to arms all Macedonians resident in Bulgaria. The proclamation fixes the rising for the Greek Church Easter, on April 27 and 28.

The Macedonians are ordered to report in Sofia and the frontier towns of Dubnitza and Kustendje, and be prepared to invade Macedonia simultaneously from different points.

Large parties of Macedonians are journeying daily toward the frontier.

BRITISH UNPOPULAR IN SPAIN.

People Credit England With Checking European Move Against Us.

Special to The Times.

London, April 16.—Once upon a time when the British warships visited Spanish ports they were made welcome and officers and men used to have a good time ashore. All this is changed since the belief has seized the Spanish people that the British Government prevented Europe from helping Spain against the United States. It is nowadays regarded as unsafe for an Englishman to go about in many Spanish towns after dark, and without exception the newspapers are furiously Anglophobe.

The feeling of hatred from fresh vent at the beginning of this week when the British Channel squadron visited Coruna. The British bluejackets received the customary shore leave. They found themselves boycotted. The men were preparing to resent this when their officers interposed and all were sent back to the ships and the squadron left the port two days earlier than had been intended.

THE MISTAKEN IDEAS OF THE FIGHTING BOERS

How the Capture of Methuen May Have Brougot Delarey to his Senses

The Enormous Extent of Territory Where the Fighting is Being Done - The Winter Season Now Begun

Special to The Times.

Montreal, April 15—The Star says: The Methuen disasters seem to have given, in certain quarters, an altogether fictitious importance to the present military position of the Boer forces; the very fact that, within two weeks of that affair, the guns which Delarey captured had been recovered and his temporarily concentrated force again scattered into diminished fragments proves amply, to the average mind, that there is no longer any effective cohesion among the individual commandos themselves, let alone any possible effective co-operation between the "generals" who control bands of perhaps a few hundred each, scattered over an area as far as from Halifax to Calgary in one direction and from Montreal to New Orleans in another.

It is also opportune to remind the pessimists that this month commences that six months of winter in which the climatic conditions are altogether unsuitable to Boer tactics. Messrs. Kruger and Steyn commenced this struggle in the month of October, deliberately, because, at that period, they had their best campaigning season in front of them. A British commander just home invalided thinks that the involuntary meeting of Lord Methuen with General Delarey may have a very satisfactory effect, inasmuch as his talks with that able and humane captor would give Delarey a very much better understanding than he ever had before of the determination of the British to see the war "through" at all costs and to accept no terms short of unconditional surrender.

The time for the exercise of leniency, diplomacy and wise statesmanship will come when the vanquished throw themselves upon the generosity of their conquerors. Those who think that undue harshness will then be shown must have utterly and wilfully failed to understand either the British character or the motives which prompted the Mother Country to take up the quarrel of the loyal population of South Africa.

ORCHESTRAL ENTERTAINMENT

A Decided Success Achieved by Charlotte Orchestra

The music-loving people of Peterborough who attended Charlotte St. orchestral entertainment last evening were amply repaid and Charlotte St. orchestra is to be congratulated on being able to furnish such high-class music, each of the different numbers showing careful training and marked artistic ability.

The director, Mr. Hodgson may be justly proud of his success which is evidenced by the large attendance at those entertainments which are growing in popularity and we feel sure the progress of Charlotte St. orchestra will be watched with much interest.

PROGRAMME.

Orchestral selection ...Message from Mars
Address.............................Chairman.
Orchestral selection...overture...Salutation
Recitation......................Miss White
Trom-bone Solo........Mr. Jack Robinson.
Vocal Solo with flute obligato ...Miss Clara Bellegham.
Orchestral selection ...Bright and bewitching.
Recitation.................Mr. Jack Robinson
Flute Solo The Bob-o-link ...Mr. J. E. Hodgson.
Vocal Solo The Volunteer, with violin and piano accompaniment.
Flute Solo Swissboy...Mr. J. E. Hodgson.
Orchestral ....Creole Belles
Recitation How a Dutchman set a hen... Mr. Jack Robinson.
Oboe Solo The Palms (by request)...Mr. J. E. Hodgson.
Orchestral selection ....Medley.

As worthy of special mention we might note Mr. Hodgson's well-rendered flute solos. His artistic rendition of "The Swiss Boy" was thoroughly enjoyed by all. His versatility is shown by his thorough acquaintance with the violin and oboe in addition to the above mentioned instrument. It would indeed be difficult to tell which of the three was most enjoyed.

We are informed the next of this series of entertainments is to take place in about a month, and we venture to predict a full house.

MR. H. LONG'S ENTERPRISE.

Back in the Old Premises Which Have Been Beautifully Finished Throughout

Mr. H. Long, who was a sufferer by fire when the Crystal Block was destroyed, and who occupied temporary premises, has returned to his old stand, which has been handsomely finished. The store is now one of the prettiest in town, the interior being very artistic and beautiful.

Mr. Long has added several improvements, the most important being a large ice cream parlor and supper hall. This new room is being elegantly furnished, and will be specially suited for dinners and social gatherings.

Items of News.

From our own Correspondent

New York,—It was reported from Paris yesterday that Prince Eugene—Napoleon—Nicholas, Duke of Nericia and fourth son of King Oscar of Sweden, had become engaged to marry Miss Helen Gorman Wild of Baltimore, Md., who is related to the well-known Carroll family of Maryland. She is a Catholic and the Prince is a Protestant by the nature of his country's religion and politics.

The marriage, therefore, will necessitate his renouncing all the rights he has to the throne, which are not many, as he is sixth in the line of succession to the rule of Sweden and Norway. According to the report, King Oscar at first was very much opposed to the idea of the union, but was won over by the Queen, Eugene's mother, who asserted that her son had set his heart upon marrying Miss Wild and that the King's refusal to sanction it might make a great deal of trouble.

The Prince is an interesting man of excellent education and reputation. He is 37 years old. Miss Wild has been abroad for some time and according to the reports has often attended services in a little church in Paris's Latin Quarter, where it is said the wedding ceremony will be quietly celebrated. The Queen, it is said, has decided to give half her fortune to Prince Eugene.

Paris, April 16.—Eight hundred Greek emigrants, who had been booked to sail from Havre to-day on the steamship La Gascogne, refused, when at the docks, to embark. They said they were convinced that the steamship had been chartered by the British Government to convey them to South Africa, where they would be compelled to fight the Boers. The Greek Consul intervened and persuaded most of the emigrants to go on board, but a number of them persisted in demanding the return of their passage money.

CONGRATULATES CANADA

London, Ont., April 14.— In an interview here yesterday Rev. Thomas Moran, of Tipperary, Ireland, was asked as to the comparative status of the drink traffic in Ireland and in Canada. He said: "From my observations in Toronto, Hamilton and London, I consider that Canada is to be congratulated on her comparative freedom from the awful evils of strong drink. In Ireland there are many more hotels in proportion to population than here; more drinking per head of population, and you see much more open drunkenness there."

Ottawa, April 16.—A postmaster in a rural district in Quebec was dismissed last week because of his remitting postage stamps to another place, thereby increasing the revenue of his office for the purpose of expanding the amount of his commission upon stamp sales. The vendor who received the stamps was also dismissed.

DEAD ITALIAN CAME TO LIFE AGAIN

Broke Open the Lid of His Coffin on the Point of Burial

HE SCARED THE UNDERTAKER

Four Men Dropped the Coffin in a Fright—When the Corpse Began to Speak — Remarkable Sensation

New York, April 16—Four assistants to an undertaker suddenly dropped a coffin they were carrying out of the Paterson, N.J., jail door. When the suppose corpse broke open the lid and sat up, and in vociferous Italian said he "wasn't dead." He was Alexander Scazzeletta, who had been imprisoned for some slight offence. He had been called in the morning by the keeper, but did not respond. His cell was opened, and the man could not be roused. The jail officials were informed, and they sent for a physician, telling him that a man had died in the night. The doctor made a casual examination, and pronounced the man dead, and the undertaker was sent for. His employees were carrying the supposed corpse out to the wagon when Scazeletta opened his eyes and sat up in the coffin. For two days he talked incessantly in jail, but on Saturday apparently lost the power of speech only to recover it in the coffin, when he abused the undertaker's assistants. The jail physician ordered his release.

DEATH OF REV. T. GOLDSMITH

Venerable Minister Labored Sixty Years in Church

The death is announced of Rev. T. Goldsmith, of Toronto, a gentleman well known in Peterborough in connection with St. Paul's church, he having officiated as pastor for several months when Dr. Torrance was laid up with fever. Mr. Goldsmith, who had been ill for nearly eighteen months with liver trouble, was born eighty years ago in Prince Edward County. He was the son of U. E. Loyalists, his grandfather being Capt. Goldsmith, who came to this country at the time of the revolution.

Of the sixty years' service in the ministry, thirty were spent in the Methodist Church, and the last thirty years as a Presbyterian minister, among the charges held by him being at Seaforth and St. John's Church, Hamilton. Since leaving the latter city twelve years ago Mr. Goldsmith had led a retired life at 2 Walmer Road, having occasionally acted as supply. For one year he was at Peterborough and for six months at St Andrew's Church, King Street, in the absence of the late Rev. Dr. Macdonald.

His wife predeceased him, and two daughters survive. The funeral will take place this afternoon at 1 o'clock from his late residence to Aurora by Metropolitan Railway, where his wife was buried.

General - Sports.

The Vaticans met last evening at the Oriental Hotel to elect officers for ensuing season.

The following gentlemen were appointed

Hon. Pres.—H. LeBrun.
Pres.—R. F. McWilliams.
1st. Vice. Pres.—Alf. Terrell.
2nd Vice Pres.—W. Crawley.
Manager,—A. Dorris.
Secy.-Treas.—J. Picard.
Exec Committee,—Messrs. W. Lynch, C. Taylor, W. Parrell and R. Rickey.

Several old players were present who expressed their intention of donning the colors again for the ensuing season.

With such a list of names we feel confident that prosperity is ensured the club and to which we offer our congratulations and best wishes for continued success.

Paine's Celery Compound

WOMAN'S HOME FRIEND

IT QUICK BANISHES THE ILLS AND PHYSICAL TROUBLES THAT ARE TOO COMMON IN SPRINGTIME

A multitude of the healthiest, brightest and most active women of this North American continent are deeply indebted to Paine's Celery Compound for the blessings of health.

Women, old and young, know well that this famous medicine is specially adapted for all the ills peculiar to their sex. When it is used, the sick and suffering ones are seen to gain steadily in health, strength and vigor. No room is left for doubt to the skeptic and stubborn-minded individual. The joyous transformation from sickness to health through the use of Paine's Celery Compound is constantly going on in every direction, so that those once alarmed about the safety of near and dear ones, now rejoice to see the bloom of returning health lighting up and beautifying features once pallid and wan.

Paine's Celery Compound continues to be woman's best home friend in times of sickness. At this season, when the numberless ills of women are a source of danger and anxiety, women stand in need of a disease banisher and life-giver like Paine's Celery Compound to cleanse the blood, to restore digestive vigor, to banish sleeplessness, to brace the nerves, to banish the symptoms of deadly kidney disease, to dispel the agonies of rheumatism and neuralgia.

This is the season, to-day is the time to begin the use of this best of medical prescriptions. There is not the slightest reason to advance why any woman should continue in suffering, when Paine's Celery Compound can be so easily procured. Heaven grant that you may have faith sufficient to use at least one bottle of nature's health-builder in order that you may be convinced that it is what you need.

Weather Notes

Probs. To-day,—Light winds, fine and a little warmer.

A pronounced area of high pressure now covers the Lake Region and from present indications will remain almost stationary during to-day and to-morrow. The weather is fine throughout the Dominion, with a general tendency for higher temperature.

PETERBOROUGH, APRIL 16, 1902.

BE WIDE AWAKE, CANUCKS.

The Insurance Blue Book, recently issued by the Finance Department at Ottawa, contains figures that will startle thoughtful Canadians who read them.

For instance, it is shown that during 1901, United States insurance companies drew $1,331,000 in cash premiums for fire insurance from Canadian insurers, while Yankee life insurance companies benefitted to the amount of $4,709,000, in cash premiums during the same year. The total sum of life and fire insurance premiums paid by Canadians to Yankee corporations in one single year amounted to $6,040,000. Extending the perspective we find that during the period between 1875 and 1901 Canadian companies effected insurance to the amount of $558,000,000, British companies $61,737,000, and Yankee companies $326,000,000, the aggregate being nearly $1,000,000,000, and the Yankee companies getting more than one-third of this sum. The premium income during the same period shows that the Yankee companies drew the same proportion.

In 1901 Yankee companies were given Canadian risks amounting to $107,000,000. Since 1869 Yankee companies have drawn from Canadian pockets more than $18,000,000 in net cash premiums, from fire insurance alone. During a period of thirty years Canadians have enriched Yankee insurance companies to the amount of $86,000,000.

Let Canadians consider the situation and there can be no possible doubt but that their native good sense will prompt them to patronize Canadian companies and thus keep at home the immense sums now sent to the United States to still further distend the bursting pockets of bloated Yankee corporations, whose best wish for Canada and Canadians is that our country and our people will ere long become a portion of their so-called republic to share their enormous tax-bills, to suffer under their crude and ill-executed laws, to submit to Judge Lynch's rulings, and become tools and playthings in the hands of the offscourings of Europe, now being driven from their native hearths to the alleged "land of the free."

WHAT WAR IS.

Major Waller, of the American army in the Philippines, testified recently in his own defence, on a charge of executing natives of Samar without trial, that Gen. Smith instructed him to "kill and burn," saying that "the more we killed and burned the better pleased he would be," that it was "no time to take prisoners," and that he was to "make Samar a howling wilderness." Major Waller asked Gen. Smith to define the age limit for killing and he replied, "Everything over ten." Capt. David D. Power, Capt. Hiram I. Bearss and Lieut. Frank Halford, all of the Marine Corps, corroborated Major Waller's testimony.

A trooper of the Bushvelt Carabineers states that the guilty Australian officers of that shamed and disbanded corps killed nearly forty unarmed Boers, including three children who had come to ask food.

Such unsoldierly deeds are no part of the British scheme of conquest. They are on the contrary deeply and in shame regretted by Britons everywhere. Kitchener has promptly executed the Bushveldt murderers; Mr. Montague White, the Boer agent in the United States, credits Chamberlain with an earnest attempt to cure the horrors of the reconcentration camps.

But whether in South Africa or in the Philippines or in China, the game of war, in spite of the best efforts of the humane participants, becomes at times what Sherman called it—"all hell."

MUNICIPAL OWNERSHIP IN CHICAGO

A few days ago the voters of Chicago had the pleasure of a referendum, in fact of four referendums or referenda. Of these the two most important relate to "public ownership," a subject in which various performers take a deep interest and many politicians affect one. First, shall the city of Chicago own all the street railroads within its corporate limits? Second, shall the city of Chicago own the gas and electric lighting plants and furnish therefrom light, heat and power for public and private use?

As to municipal ownership of street railways, the voters said aye, by a vote of 124,594, to 25,987. As to the municipal ownership of lighting plants the voters said aye, by a vote of 124,180 to 18,477.

The magnificence of the majority may be due in part to the fact that municipal ownership is and long or ever must be a speculation and a dream so far as Chicago is concerned. The city is so far from having money to burn that the municipal "ghost" is very tottering and uncertain in its walk. The stupendous debt that would have to be incurred were the city to go into the railroad, gas and electric lighting business was not before the voters as an actuality or immediate probability. But the decided expression of their opinion will encourage the numerous Democratic statesmen who believe that the municipal ownership of public utilities is a promising issue to coddle. Their troubles will begin whenever the scheme advances from its present gaseous state into a condition of concrete and figure-laden reality.

When the cost of municipal ownership is counted and the details are plotted, the enthusiasm of the voters may fall a good many degrees.

ARE THE LAWS ENFORCED

The Stony Lake Cottagers Association has done a great service in calling public attention to the fact that the fishery inspectors are not doing their duty. Their complaint applies to more than one species of inspector. What is the reason of it? It is a well known fact that fish and game are sold openly out of season and in complete disobedience of the law. What is the good of laws and of inspectors? The truth is that a tight hand and a watchful eye are needed over them and it will pay the Governments to mind the people's business better in this respect.

Revolutionary Proposals.

It must have struck many of the admirers of the melodramatic stage that the various outrages to which the hero is subjected during the course of the four acts, when he is "up against it" good and hard, are as like each other as a row of Japanese dolls. The locomotive, the fire-reel, the buzz-saw, the mine explosion, and the shipwreck, have been worked over and over again. What we need is novelty. And if I might make a suggestion, some new and startling climaxes could be worked up from the modest incidents of our daily life. For there are climaxes in the domestic circle just as distressing as any depicted on the stage. Even when the canvas buzz-saw is advancing on him with all the energy a perspiring stage carpenter can impart to it, the hero does not suffer the agony of apprehension that convulses the soul of the average man when he arrives home at three o'clock in the morning and hears the contemptuous sniff which apprises him that the wife of his bosom is awaiting him at the top of the stairs. Nor does the heroine, when starving to death in the latest black cashmere "Daily Hint from Paris," evince more trepidation than does the average matron, when the leader in her particular brand of "sassiety" drops in and finds her in a cotton wrapper with her store teeth in a tumbler of water and her magnificent chevelure lying on top of the bureau. There are calamities just as soul-harrowing in the domestic circle as in the drama. The trouble is that the playwrights have never taken hold of them in the true spirit of discovery.

We will take as an example one heroic incident that lately happened in this city when a prominent citizen induced a small girl to save her life by jumping from the windowsill of a burning house on to the tails of his ulster, which she accomplished without even breaking his flask. We can easily picture to ourselves how this could be worked up for the stage. The Angel cheeild is backed up on the windowsill with a pound of red fire burning on a tin shovel behind her. The hero comes tearing on from the side scenes. He sees her, and clasps his hand to his forehead. (Heroes always do that. It is a kind of a send-off.) He seizes a handful of clustering locks from his wig and tosses it into the air. It comes down "Tails!" The cheeild must be saved. With a wild wrench he whips off his liver-pad and holds it outstretched in his strong arms. The cheeild jumps and rebounds from it like a half a brick from a book-agent's cheek. Once more she springs; and again he is foiled. With a cry of anguish he hurls the liver-pad at the sneering villain and catches her on his breath. And as she is lowered in safety to the ground we see the quivering body of the villain nailed fast to the blazing ruins by the faithful liver-pad.

There is another point to which I would like to draw attention. And that is the way in which inanimate objects are neglected. We have dogs, geese, chickens and poultry in melodrama. But that is all. I was once acquainted with a gentleman who played a cake of ice in the river scene in "Uncle Tom's Cabin." And the barrel in "Panjandrum" was a most lovable personage off the stage. Many friends of mine have also formed part of the "hoarse gathering murmur" which always arises in the wings when the hero is getting into a remarkably tight place. But these were not strictly inanimate objects. They drew salaries, and wore red neckties on Sundays. What we need is a further extension of the drama from the farmyard to the grocery counter, and the hardware store. And we shall get it. We shall yet see a drama in which the leading comedy part is played by a tin of canned salmon and the heroine is saved from the villain's clutches by a barrel of patent glue. And why should we not? There are many comedians now on the stage who would compare unfavorably from an intellectual standpoint with a tin of canned salmon. And there are heroes beside whose personal charms a barrel of glue would shine as a paragon of pulchritude. A tin of canned salmon would prove far more useful to the heroine when she is lost on the sandy desert, or afloat on the lonely raft in mid-ocean, than a comic Irishman with a Coney Island brogue. If she did not care to tackle it herself she could feed it to the villain and tie him up in so many knots that it would take a traction engine to straighten him out. And the dramatic possibilities of a barrel of glue are simply illimitable. She could use it for sticking to everything from the angel cheeild to the papers proving her to be rightful heiress to the old baronial home. When the villain sprang upon her, hissing out "At last I have you in my power-r-r!" she could paste him to the kitchen stove and go out for a walk. How would the band of Moorish brigands look if she stuck them all to the adjacent rocks by the slack of their loose trousers, while the manly hero went through their pockets? A dab of glue on her windowsill when the murderer was creeping, knife in hand, into her lonely bed-chamber, would compel him to stay there all night or complete his crime in a costume which the management would not stand for even for a moment. And then how useful it would be to help her to adhere to her salary. It is true that they might have to soak the hero in hot water to get him away from her. But then he often richly deserves to be soaked. In every other instance the faithful glue pot could give cards and spades and little casino to the most useful comedian who ever trailed the villain to his lair.

These are only two of the instances in which the use of inanimate objects in the cast would increase the novelty of the drama. But their number could be indefinitely increased. We have long had the wooden actor. Why should we stick at the inanimate tragedian? Herein we have a bright idea for the budding playwrights who have dramatized every book that has a circulation of over ten copies, until the principal value we place on the dictionary is the fact that even the most ambitious of them have never used it as the basis of a romantic play. And we charge nothing for this hint to dramatists. It is an absolutely free graft.—Montreal "Sunday Sun."

Nature's Flying Machines.

It is an extraordinary thing that the places where people think that they can invent flying machines are the capitals of Europe. Paris, Vienna, London, Brussels, each takes its turn, in paragraphs in the morning papers and illustrated interviews in the weeklies, at producing flying machine inventors; but the man who will succeed must be more familiar than any townsman or laboratory savant seems to be with the way in which Nature's flying machines, the birds, work. To this the townsman will reply that everybody knows how birds fly. They flap their wings; and what we have to do is to invent a machine which will flap its wings like a bird.

Yes; but which bird? In every one of our undulating Norfolk stubbles there are two birds, among many, that you cannot help observing on the wing. One is the partridge and the other the gull. Let us take the gull first. It is a bird with a very light body in proportion to its expanse of wing; and when it wishes to rise from the ground it raises its wings aloft, back to back, and then with one quick stroke—whiff!—wafts itself aloft. Three or four more similar strokes follow, each one visibly raising the bird higher in the air, and then it sails off. Now it is "coasting" down an inclined plane; now its widespread wings catch the wind like a sail and it curves upwards; then it wheels and "coasts" again, and at the turn one vigorous flap of its wings shoots it up into the wind again. Another sail, another "coast," another flap, and so the gull could go on through the livelong afternoon. The albatross, spreading as much wing-sail as Shamrock II., so very nearly equalises its sailing power with its coasting momentum that it remains in the air alongside a steamer for, perhaps, half an hour together, without occasion for a flap of the wing. This is the very highest development of one kind of Nature's flying machines.

Now let us look at the partridge. This is a heavy, substantial bird, with great running power, necessitating a muscular development essentially different from the gull's. The object of the partridge's flight is not to loaf about in the air, always ready to descend at any inclined plane that the chance of snatching food from the restless waves may offer, but to put as large a distance as possible in the shortest space of time between itself and the danger which compelled it to take wing. With the partridge flying is, in fact, merely an urgent improvement upon terrestrial locomotion, whereas with the gull it is the highest development of the art of remaining in the air at the poise most suitable for descending like an arrow in any desired direction.

From this contrast it is evident that the model which human inventors of flying machines should set before themselves is that of the partridge and not of the gull. We need aerial locomotion as an improvement upon our existing means of terrestrial progress. Our flying machine must be a weight-carrier because it has to bear up a terrestrial mechanism—i.e., a man; and the partridge gives us a very good idea of the means whereby this can be achieved. In common with all ground-birds—and if man is destined to be a bird at all it is as a ground-bird that he will have to commence his aerial evolutions—the partridge goes off whirring like clockwork. This is because enormous power, comparatively speaking, is needed to raise so heavy a bird from the ground. But when it has once reached an altitude of, say, ten feet, it goes on at a tremendous pace, gliding for twenty yards, then whirring violently again for ten, gliding for twenty, and so on. Thus the partridge can, taking into consideration all kinds of wind and weather, travel between two fixed points faster than a gull, provided that the point of departure is higher than that of destination. This is not generally understood; and it is common to talk of the amazing power of flight of such long-winged birds as gulls and swifts, although their "power" of flight is small compared with that of partridge or pheasant.

A New Vocabulary.

"I SEE," said the wise person, "that some eminent philologist is again monkeying with the language of the world in the effort to combine them in one tongue that no one will want to learn, but everybody can understand. It has always been a matter of surprise to me that none of these word-arrangers has ever grasped the amazing possibilities of baby-talk as a universal, time-saving method of conversation. Instead of delving into the dusty dimness of antiquity for Saxon and Sanskrit roots, and making it necessary for one to master ten languages to learn one, why do they not go into the nursery with an open mind and a notebook and compile a new mother-tongue that will catch everybody?"

Here he paused for a question, but, as none was forthcoming, he went on:

"What I mean is this: You take any baby that has an intelligent, quick-witted mother, and it can make its wants known with less expenditure of breath than a deaf-and-dumb man. If it says "Wow" she knows that a pin is sticking it, or that it wants its dinner, or that it wants to turn over, or that it has colic. If it says "Ah-goo" she makes a rapid-fire translation which proves that the child has said that it wants to see papa or that it feels good. If it says "Gup" she will at once tell you that it means "look at the horse." If it says "Boo" she can tell you without a moment's hesitation that it desires a peep at its picture-book. And so on ad infinitum, and ad infantum, for that matter. By jing! We don't want Volapuk or any other old universal language, but as a time and tongue saver and word-condenser we need the adoption of baby-talk."

Then, with a sarcastic glance at the young father, he concluded:

"Besides, it would keep a lot of people from telling us what their children had tried to say."—W. D. Nesbit in "Judge."

A Matter of Spelling.

Those who love to study human nature often derive as much pleasure from watching the people who visit picture-galleries as they receive from the pictures themselves. It is not every day, however, which produces so amusing an incident as one which an English paper reports:

Two ladies were looking at a picture by Mr. Faed, in the Royal Academy, entitled, "His Only Pair." The artist has depicted a poor boy sitting up in bed while his hard-working mother mends his only pair of trousers. The boy, although obliged to stay in bed while the repairs are under way, is contentedly eating an orange.

One of the visitors looked at the picture with searching gaze, and then remarked to her companion: "'His Only Pair!' I don't call that a pear at all! It's an orange that he is eating."

The dizziness and faintness from which women suffer may be due to one of several causes. But the most common cause is disease of the delicate womanly organism. The story of Mrs. Brown, told in her letter below, gives a fair example of the conditions under which so many women work: "I had a sick headache nearly all the time, was so weak around my waist could hardly bear anything to touch me. I would work a little while and then lie down a while." Failing to obtain more than temporary relief from her doctor's treatment, Mrs. Brown began the use of Doctor Pierce's Favorite Prescription, with the usual result—a complete cure.

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is the best medicine for the cure of diseases peculiar to women. It establishes regularity, dries offensive drains, heals inflammation and ulceration and cures female weakness. It makes weak women strong, sick women well.

"A few years ago I suffered severely with female weakness and had at times dreadful pains," writes Mrs. Mary V. Brown, of Creswell, Harford Co., Maryland. "I went to my doctor, and he gave me medicine which did me good for a while, but I would get worse again. I had a sick headache nearly all the time; was so weak around my waist could hardly bear anything to touch me. My feet would keep cold and I could hardly do my work. I would work a while and then lie down a while; was completely run down. Suffered from disagreeable discharge and also severe pains at times. After using five bottles of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, three of his 'Golden Medical Discovery' and one vial of Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets, and following the advice you gave regarding the 'Lotion Tablets,' I can truly say that I am cured. The doctor said it was uterine disease I had."

Dr. Pierce's Medical Adviser, in paper covers, is sent free on receipt of 31 one-cent stamps to pay expense of customs and mailing only, or if cloth-bound volume is desired send 50 stamps. Address Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y.

"Daring" Books.

It is women who write "daring" books, and it is women who read them. When once the fair do take their bonnets off they are not content with that; they throw them over the windmills, as the French say. Men do not like this kind of thing. It not only disgusts but bores them. It is a particular kind of woman, usually earnest and very stupid, who enjoys these successes. Our sex, if all this goes on, must provide itself with fans to blush behind. We must leave the ladies before the coffee and cigarettes begin to circulate.—Andrew Lang in "Longman's Magazine."

Out of His Province.

A soap-maker and a banker were at a Wagner concert, says the "Christian Register." The programme did not please them, and they began to talk.

"Every man," said the banker, "wants to do something outside of his own work."

"Yes," answered the soap-maker. "I manufacture good soap, and yet I've always wanted to be a banker."

"You wouldn't be a good one. I am a successful banker, but I always wanted to write a book. And now here's this man Wagner tries his hand at music. Just listen to the stuff! And yet we all know he builds good parlor-cars."

THE WAR SITUATION AS IT REALLY EXISTS

Britain Will Not Weaken in Her Efforts to Make Peace

WOLSLEY'S VISIT TO AFRICA

Not One Shred of Their Former Independence Will be Allowed—The War Goes Merrily on.

Special to The Times.

London, April 15 — In the face of the endeavors of pro-Boer organs to create an impression that Britain is weakening in her determination to continue the war in South Africa until the dream of the Afrikander Bond is finally dispelled, it is necessary to constantly refute the numerous rumours which gain currency. In the first place it is perhaps inaccurate to say that actual negotiations are taking place, either between diplomats favorable to the Boer cause in Europe and the British Cabinet, or between Lord Kitchener and the so-called Boer Governments in South Africa; our authority for this denial is the official statements made in the British Parliament this very week. All that Lord Kitchener has been authorized to do is to facilitate interviews between Schalkburgher and his civilian colleagues with their scattered friends who are still able to retain a following upon the warpath. The story that Lord Wolseley had a mission from the King to report and to negotiate behind the back of his constitutional advisers had no sooner received its quietus than it is replaced by a rumor that Lord Rosebery is going upon a similar mission. Probably the latter will scarcely take the trouble to contradict the report, which the ex Commander in Chief did when, upon embarking on board the Walmer Castle, at Southampton, he said: "I am going to the Cape upon strictly personal business, and may possibly return to England on this steamer's homeward trip."

The British position really remains as it was defined by Lord Salisbury at the time when Holland attempted to intervene. The Premier then said he would never be a party to any negotiations which would aim at restoring to the late Transvaal and Orange Free States "one shred of their former independence." After all, though rarely named in connection with the war, it is Lord Salisbury who is "the man at the wheel," and, having kept the ring clear so successfully for three years, we can quite believe that he has no intention of now surrendering to any Boer bluffing. Sir Gordon Sprigg, the Premier of the Cape Colony, tells us that the war will not actually be over until the last individual commando in the field has been broken up. If any additional proof is needed of the unswerving determination of the Colonial Administrations in South Africa, it will be best found in the Budget statement which the Chancellor of the Exchequer is to make next Monday, when it will be seen that provision has been made for carrying on the struggle during the year which ends on March 31st, 1903, with undiminished energy.

READY FOR BATTLE.

Venezuelan Insurgents to Fight and Rising to Follow.

Special to The Times.

Willemstad, Island of Curacao, April 14. — News has reached here that Government troops, to the number of 1,500, under the command of General Velutini, Minister of the Interior, left Piritu, a small village on the seashore near Barcelona, capital of the State of Bermudas, to engage the revolutionists, under the command of General Monagas, who are encamped fifteen miles from Piritu. A battle is expected between these forces to-day. If it be won by the revolutionists, the victory will be a signal for a general uprising.

APPEAL FOR AID

Special to The Times.

Chicago, April 14 — The Gov. Yates Boer relief fund committee on Saturday issued an appeal to the public.

In the appeal the committee says: "We desire to collect five million checks and drafts of $1 each, from all parts of the United States, payable to Theodore Roosevelt, to be used by him for such aid as he may be able to render the people, and as a practical and beneficent demonstration of the sympathy of the people of America for these reconcentrado camp sufferers. These checks and drafts should be sent to Peter Van Vlissingen, 172 East Washington street, Chicago.

The appeal is signed by Edward F. Dunne, Carter H. Harrison and Peter Van Vlissingen.

'DAISY GORDON'S FOLLY

—OR—

The World Lost for Love's Sake

By Laura Jean Libbey

Author of The Crime of Hallow-E'en, The Flirtations of a Beauty Willful Gaynell, Little Leafy, Only a Mechanic's Daughter from your walk yesterday! How you [illegible]d out to be alone, and how, half [illegible] hour later, you rang the bell sharply and ordered a fire to be built in your room, although the day was very warm!"

No answer fell from Daisy's ashen lips, and the girl went on steadily:

"I said to myself that it was not natural to call for a fire on such a hot day, when the sun was shining so brightly. There must be a reason for it, and that reason was that you had something to burn."

A bitter cry fell from Daisy's lips; but the French girl continued rapidly:

"I may just as well admit the truth to you, Mrs. Hamilton. I did not go away when you sent me from the room. I—I stayed and watched through the keyhole; then I knew my surmise had been correct — you had something to burn!

"I saw you take a letter, and after glancing hastily around as though to make sure you were unobserved, place it on the glowing coals.

"I was wild to know the contents of that letter, and trusted to my ingenuity to find out. It was then that I invented the excuse that Mr. Hamilton was ill down in the parlor, just to get you away from the room.

"You know how well I succeeded.

"The door had scarcely closed upon you ere I sprung into the room and rescued the burning letter from the flames, and hid it in my bosom.

"That night, when you slept in fancied security I was reading that letter in my room; the flames had barely scorched it. Every line was visible.

"You never thought when you went over the past in that letter in such minute detail, what it was to lead to. I was amazed at the revelation, used as we French are to the intrigues of beautiful women.

"I said to myself:

"'So this is the history of my lovely lady, eh! How horrified master would be if he knew it; but know it he shall, unless my lady buys my silence with gold.'

"So there the matter rests, my lady."

The agonizing horror on the white face was horrible to see.

The great wonder is that she did not fall down at the girl's feet dead.

She had fancied herself so securely free; and now, the sword had fallen. Yet, slowly she erected her golden head.

She would never acknowledge that there was anything wrong—she would die first; but if she could temporize with this girl in any way, she would do it.

"I do not wish any harm to come to you, Mrs. Hamilton," interposed the girl, quickly. "I know full well how you love your husband; I know it would be more bitter than death for you to part from him. You love him, and you either that other one. Give me the money I ask for, and I will return you the letter you thought you had burned; I will keep your secret. Not one word shall ever pass my lips. Mr. Hamilton will never know. You can trust me, I——"

"Stop!"

The voice that broke the sunlit, summer silence was like nothing human— more like the moan that one sometimes hears among the trees.

"Stop!" Daisy cried again, though this time there was the recklessness of terrible despair in her tone. "I —I will give you the money you ask for, not because I admit there is anything wrong, but because I do not wish this story repeated— it is so absurd," and again she erected her beautiful head, turning a face as pallid as death itself on the maid. "Tomorrow I will give you the money."

"You are wise, madame; I knew you would take a sensible view of the matter," returned the girl, and the covert meaning in her words made Daisy's eyes flash fire, and her face glow with hot anger.

She pointed to the door, and the scheming French girl who had done her terrible work but too well glided from the room.

The summer sun in all its round since first the flight of time began, surely never fell upon a sadder sight than the beautiful, golden-haired girl standing alone in that luxurious room.

"Let me try to realize what has happened to me," she gasped; "let me grasp the position if I can, although my brain seems reeling, and my heart on fire.

"Am I a sinful, scheming woman, who has lost the world, all for love's sake— the same creature who but a few short months ago, was only a happy child, dreaming my idle dreams in the old orchard of the farm— the idolized child on whom the rude winds of the world had never blown roughly?

"Oh, if I had had strength enough to tell Aleck all and turn away! But I could not; it seemed like tearing my heart asunder, the very thought of giving him up.

"While I rested secure in Aleck's love, while I believed the cause of my terror set aside, while I believed myself safe, fate was tracking me down, my doom was settling darkly around me like a funeral pall. Let me try to think clearly what has happened to me. My sin has found me out."

She thought of the lines she had read only that very day and trembled over:

"I know that each sinful action,
As surely as night brings shade,
Is some time, somewhere punished,
Tho' the hour be long delayed."

Poor, beautiful, hapless Daisy! surely those lines must have been written as a warning to her, for the hour of her punishment had come upon her at last.

She must raise the money this girl had demanded of her as the price of her silence, or she would go to Aleck with the letter.

A thousand dollars— where should she get it? Aleck would wonder what she wanted with so much money. Supposing the girl's demands upon her should increase!

"Great heaven, where will it end!" she moaned, wildly.

It was well she could not foresee her horrible future.

CHAPTER XVI.

Daisy's Desperation.

Daisy never remembered how that day passed; it always seemed like a confused, horrible dream to her.

Before nightfall she must nerve herself to ask Aleck for the money. Never had she exerted herself so much to look pleasing in his eyes, never had she been so tender and loving in her manner. She clung to him, burying her golden head on his breast.

The Saving of Mrs. Mervine.

PERSONALLY, I never liked Mrs. Mervine. It may have been that she was too pretty for any other woman to like, or it may have been something else. I'm not good at analyzing my sentiments. I like and I dislike, that's enough for me. Some people can't wear a bustle without knowing in what period of our evolution a taste for humps was evolved, but for me, I'd go on all fours without a question if it became the style. And when Mrs. Mervine—she was Miss Henry then—married Mr. Mervine, I did a little quiet rejoicing all privately in my own room. You see, George and Miss Henry had had an affair, and, by the way, I hadn't thought of it before, but maybe that is why I never liked her. But then, according to that, I shouldn't have liked George, either. Two things equal to each other are equal to themselves, isn't it? Or something like that. No, don't explain it to me. I couldn't understand in a week, and, besides, I want to tell you what saved Mrs. Mervine.

You see, she was young and pretty as a picture in an Alma Tademaesque sort of way. He was about seventy, and he looked like an antique brass. Just the color, you know, and so many wrinkles that they looked as if they had been made by hand with a chisel. He was rich and respected and all that, but he was a man of principle, and of all things I loathe it's a man or woman of principle. I think principles ought to be like the magazines at a man's club —for the use of all, and not to be gathered up and secreted by one, any more than one would try to swallow all the air around him, so no one else should have any.

Mixed? No, I'm not. The metaphor? Oh, well, I'm telling you what saved Mrs. Mervine. But about his principles. They were a good concrete sort, you know. There was nothing Comtian or Kantian about them. A babe in arms could have understood them. One was that servants should not be tipped. Another, that a man should get his money's worth wherever he went. Another, that a woman who had attained her growth was old enough to take care of herself, and so on and so on. Any one of these was a principle for which he declared himself ready to perish at the stake. Mrs. Mervine knew all about these principles before she married him, but she didn't realise their import, and she went up to the altar pink and smiling and thinking how she was going to spill his money about.

How do I know what she thought? Didn't I tell you that I feel things—lots of them—without ever knowing them? We all went down to the station with them. You know they went to New York and sailed from there for Europe. His best man had the tickets bought and the chairs bought, and he shoved them over to Mr. Mervine. That worthy looked at them and bolted back to the ticket-office. He came back puffing and showed us a handful of change.

"She can have a chair," he said, jerking his thumb towards the bride, who was neither pink nor smiling now, "and I'll sit in the smoking compartment. You see, they can't put me out, because I can show them I've paid for a seat in the car. Nothing like getting your money's worth."

Just then the bell rang for the train to start. Poor old Mr. Mervine was born, you know, ages before trains were thought of, and he always had a panic about catching one. Well, he forgot everything except that he was scheduled to catch that train, and he whisked through the gate alone, galloped down the track and threw himself on the platform. Of course, there wasn't anything left for Mrs. Mervine to do but to make a hasty explanation to the gatekeeper and sail down after him. She scrambled on to the rear platform, with the aid of the porter, and never turned to wave us good-by.

We threw the old shoes and rice at a young couple that came in on the local and stopped behind a load of trunks to kiss.

Mamma and I went abroad that year, and I had almost forgotten the old Relic and his bride until one day in Paris I heard an American voice. It was at a kiosk where I was buying a magazine, and there was the Relic flourishing the Paris edition of the "Herald," trying in execrable French to have it exchanged for a "Galignani" of the same date. The old woman who kept the booth imagined herself threatened by a maniac or an assassin, and was about to call a gendarme, when I interfered and explained. The Relic was profuse in his thanks, but begged that since I had already been so kind, would I do yet a little more and see if I could not induce the old woman to take the "Herald," which he had read, in exchange for the "Galignani," which he desired to read. I glanced across the way, and saw Mrs. Mervine seated on one of the public benches watching us with narrowed eyes, which she averted as I turned toward her. She was gorgeously dressed, and I saw she had a hand full of new diamonds, but her face was absolutely colorless and her eyes looked bright and hot as if she hadn't been able to have a good cry for a year. I knew the Relic's principles were getting on Mrs. Mervine's nerves, and I slipped a few sous into the old woman's hand and gave the Relic his "Galignani."

He was quite embarrassing in his gratitude, and summoned Mrs. Mervine with a sort of whistle, such as one uses in emergencies for hackmen or motormen. She had learned the signal well, for she came up promptly, with a look in her eyes as if she expected to see ghosts. She was quietly cordial, saying and acting the correct thing, as she had always done, but it didn't occur to me until afterwards how weakly she had seconded his effusive invitation for us to dine with them.

Mamma, you know, is always quite unhappy on the Continent. She misses her morning oatmeal and ice water, and, most of all, someone to whom she can talk English; so, whenever we meet an American, I have all I can do to prevent her legally adopting him into the family. So, when the Relic insisted on having us dine with them, mamma joyously consented. It was arranged that they should call for us at our hotel, and from there we were to go to the Palais Royal and later to the Comedie Francaise.

Well, they came on time—in an old voiture with a drunken driver who had agreed to take them for less than the regular tariff. The Relic has a morbid habit of demonstrating everywhere that he knows more than any other one or two human beings about him, so we had no sooner started than he began to declare to the "cocher" that he was driving us in a roundabout way to er-[illegible] to consume time and earn a bigger fare. The "cocher" had traveled Paris drunk and sober for forty years, he told me, and when he forgot, his horse knew anyway, but the more the Relic argued, the more convinced he became that there was a deep plot on hand to rob him, and it ended by our stopping and calling a gendarme, who called another, who called another, and they all performed a sort of autopsy over us, while every gamin in Paris walked around us and made comments. You know them.

At last we were sent on our way, the Relic yet unconvinced, and Mrs. Mervine pale and trying to smile. Poor mamma's eyes had fairly popped out of her head, and she held my hand and trembled as if we were going to the guillotine. At the Palais Royal the driver insisted on being paid for the time consumed during the autopsy, but we fled into one of the little jewelry shops, where I talked like a graphophone, from sympathy for poor Mrs. Mervine. At last the Relic came, looking copperier than ever. But there—you're looking tired.

No, I'll not tell you all the details. It was too awful. Poor Mrs. Mervine looked as if she wanted to die then, and how she lived with him for four years after I don't know. You see, he bounced into the restaurant ahead of us and plunged down in the first chair. Then he grabbed the menu and gave his own order to the waiter, explaining that his wife would take the same, but that one order would suffice for both. He fairly drowned himself in his "vin ordinaire," trying to get his money's worth. Before we left, he gathered up the few extra lumps of sugar and pocketed them, declaring that when he paid for a thing he liked to have it. As we prepared to leave, the waiters lined up to receive their customary fee, but the Relic was true to his principle, and not for millions would I again run the gauntlet of their withering scorn as we crawled out, like so many worms.

I don't remember just what happened at the theater. Some of the Revolutionary blood of our ancestors, never before agitated, was stirring in mamma's veins, and she looked like the pictures of frontier women about to attack Indians. I didn't want her to claw the Relic there. And poor Mrs. Mervine. I forgot George then, and the affair, and all her evil gloating over us when she captured the Relic, but I couldn't have felt more wretched for a soul in purgatory.

I remember him scrapping with the woman who takes care of the wraps for a couple of sous, and I remember being marched into the theater, the only ones in the house with hats. I remember him scooting down ahead of us and jumping into his seat. He wouldn't buy a programme, it was another principle of his, and he didn't understand a word. He went to sleep, and when he was folded back over the seat with his mouth hanging open, snoring gently (an usher would have jerked us out if he had snored loudly), Mrs. Mervine looked a bit more natural, and asked me about everyone at home—everyone but George.

I don't remember how we got home. I know mamma said things I had never taught her, and I know I had to put a hot water bag to her feet and an ice-cap on her head.

A day or so afterward I met them again at the Invalides. You know how the Continentals are about their treasures. There are as many cast-iron rules about seeing them as a presentation at court, and one of them is that no one shall enter Napoleon's tomb without removing his hat. Well, the Relic had another principle. He'd have died for it along with the others. That one was not to take off his hat to anything that was not "American." When I saw him at the Invalides that day, he was coming down the marble stairs too rapidly for it to have been spontaneous. I knew he had been trotting out one of his principles, and the French guards had been enforcing theirs.

Poor Mrs. Mervine! I get quite maudlin yet when I think of her face as she stumbled down the steps after him.

Mamma met them once after that, in London. He was puffing along the Strand with an umbrella held over him and one under his arm. The one over him was to protect him from the rain, the other one was to assist him in making a way through the crowd. Mrs. Mervine was following umbrellaless behind, majestically as always, as though she didn't know that his umbrella was pouring rivers over her. Mamma leaned out of the carriage to speak to her, but decided not to do so, which was pretty good for mamma, you know. If it had not been in England, I don't think she could have resisted it.

We sailed for home a day or so after that, and you know George and I were married right away. In the excitement of getting ready and acknowledging presents and receiving afterward, I forgot the Mervines completely until one day I saw among George's letters one directed in a woman's handwriting. Of course, it wasn't right to open it, but — Well, anyway, I did open it, and it was from Mrs. Mervine.

It just comes to me it isn't right to tell this, but I've gone so far, and anyway, she is in Japan, and the Relic has been dead a year. Well, the letter was all blotchy and blistery, and the writing ran off the lines and the sentences weren't finished. What? Of course I remember it. You don't suppose I just glanced at it! I memorized it [illegible]:

"I am sick and heart-broken. For weeks nothing has kept me alive but the thought that as soon as I landed I should see you. I tried to see you yesterday, but the tyranny—Oh, George, come and take me away! I cannot endure it—I cannot. You would lift the cart-wheel from off a dog's neck in the street. Take me away—take me with you. You loved me once, and I would make you love me again. I don't care for the dreadful things you said when I married. I did sell myself—oh, yes, oh, yes, and the coin I received! If I knew where you were I would go to you, and you could not, would not send me away. It needn't be for life, you know, but just until I know what I can do or where I can go. Oh, George, if it is a sacrifice, make it for the sake of the time when you did want me—oh, that time when I took my life's happiness in my foolish, sinful hand and gave it back to you."

Now, wasn't that scorching? And, don't you know, the beauty of it was—I often think I should have been a saint and had my picture in the Catacombs—the beauty of it all was that I didn't get angry at either of them. Of course, I think George must have looked very silly begging Miss Henry to fly with him when at that time he didn't make enough money in a month to buy one of her kimonas, and, naturally, I can never, never trust him again; but I understood the business at a glance. You see, she hadn't loved George a bit, but when she was isolated with the Relic for something over a year, all the old Eve and Delilah and Mrs. Potiphar in her came to the surface. She just had to be loved by some one, and the more she thought about it, the more she became convinced that George was It.

Perspicacious? Thank you. I've been telling you one can see some things without a [illegible]. What did I do?

Well, first I locked that letter in my desk and then I put on my mauve grenadine—the one, you know, with the Renaissance yoke and the embroidered flounce. I had Thompson rub up Major and the coupe and the harness until they shone like silver. Then I went to call on Mrs. Mervine. A shabby butler in a greasy coat opened the door. The hall was dusty, and everything was upside down. You know, as soon as you go in a house you can tell whether the people are happy or not.

I had arrayed myself to go and demolish Mrs. Mervine with my wifely dignity, and to give her Sunday-school advice from the heights, but when I went into the drawing-room I found her there, crouching over a steam radiator. She was thin and blue and wretched, and I just went up to her and threw my arms about her—forgot my Renaissance yoke entirely—and I said: "Oh, you poor, little, battered thing!" And I kissed her, and she didn't resent it, and then we cried.

I think we must have cried a gallon, and then it seemed so funny, and we both laughed a while, and then I think we cried some more. Anyway, it did us both loads of good, and then we talked it over. I explained to her that George and I were married, and that he couldn't do a thing, but that I could do something, and that I would; and when I proposed that we go to mamma's for a month or so, she couldn't speak for gratitude. I told her I was going home to tear up the letter, and that the rack or thumb-screws couldn't make me tell George anything about it. You can understand, when she saw it from my standpoint, it seemed very silly, and she wouldn't have had George know it for worlds.

The next day I carried her off to mamma's. The reasons I gave George for taking Mrs. Mervine with me made no mere "tissue of falsehood." It would have supported an elephant. When one begins to fabricate, it's silly to leave holes big enough to throw you.

We stayed there a month, and we talked the prospects over in every possible light. We couldn't see the shadow of a chance to do anything but just stand it, but the talking and the sympathy and mamma's sublime ignorance of everything did her good, and she went back without a murmur. She got a new butler who didn't wear a greasy coat, and she fixed up the house, and when things got too awful she came over to see me and cried it out. She didn't fancy meeting George, but I cross my heart and hope to die, he doesn't know a thing to this day.

I suppose you think that it was the Relic's death that saved her, but it wasn't. It was me. Oh, well, it was I, then. If I had preached that day, she'd have taken a scenic-railway speed to destruction with the first man in sight. No, she isn't immoral. She's as good as I am, but St. Cecilia couldn't have stood the Relic and his principles for more than a year and not have done something "wicious." — From "Ainslee's."

Fish Stories in the Talmud.

THE Talmud of the Hebrews is a depository in which one would seek for many things before looking for huge fish stories and chronicles of the immemorial sea-serpent; yet there are some specimens therein which would put the veriest ass of the sea to shame and show that the early rabbis were not devoid of a keen sense of humor. The following are from the latest section of the English translation by Rabbi Rodkinson:

"Rabba b. Hana said again: 'I have seen an alligator as large as the city of Hagrunia, which contained sixty houses. A snake came and swallowed it, and a large-tailed raven came and swallowed the snake, and then the raven sat on a tree!'"

The translation of another is as follows:

"Rabba said again: 'At one time when on board of a ship I saw a fish into whose gills a reptile crept from which it died, the sea throwing it out on land. And sixty streets were destroyed by its fall, and sixty streets consumed its flesh, and sixty other streets salted the flesh that was left; and from one eye they filled three hundred measures of oil; and when I returned thither after twelve months, I saw its bones being sawed to restore the streets that were destroyed by it!'"

Were the speaker other than Rabba b. Hana, who would have believed this?

"He said again: 'At one time I was on board of a ship, which was driven between two fins of a fish; three days and three nights the fish was swimming against the wind and we were sailing with the wind. . . And R. Ashi said that this was one of the smallest fishes of the sea which has two fins!'"

From the same inexhaustible source we have the following also:

"It once happened that I was going on a boat, and saw a fish on which sand was gathered and grass grown thereupon. And we thought it was an island, descended, baked, and cooked upon it. When the back of the fish grew hot, it turned over, and had the ship not been so near we would have been drowned."

It is scarcely to be wondered at that at the close of one of these marvelous rabbinical tales we should find this remark recorded: "R. Papa b. Samuel said: 'If I had not been there, I should not have believed it!'"

Peck's Bad Boy.

Professor Harry Thurston Peck, editor of the "Bookman," has written a delightful story for children. It is entitled "The Adventures of Mabel." A few days ago a woman entered one of the Chicago stores to buy a book for her little girl, says the "Record-Herald."

"How old is she?" the clerk asked.

"Five."

"Here is a nice tale for a child of that age," the clerk said, handing out Professor Peck's story about Mabel.

The woman took the book, looked at the title page, and then handed it back, saying:

"Mercy! I don't want that in my house. I've read some of that stuff he wrote about that bad boy, and that's enough for me."

From the Camp Outside Bloemfontein

Comes a letter from a member of "C" Company, Royal Canadian Regiment, telling how "Foot Elm" helped the Canadian boys on their marches.

There is no section of the British Army now in South Africa so well equipped to undertake long tiresome marches as the Canadians. The secret is that they have "Foot Elm" in their shoes, and this harmless and wonderful discovery prevents scalding, blistering, and chafing, and robs marching of the foot-soreness which is its invariable accompaniment. Mr. T. Buckart, "C" Co., R.C.R. sends the following letter from the camp outside Bloemfontein to Messrs. Stott and Jury, Bowmanville, Ont.:

"The regiment was supplied with Foot Elm en route to Cape Town. Most of the boys have used it continuously, and all express themselves as highly delighted with the results, as it prevents scalding and chafing. A friend of mine still has a portion of his box left, and he says it is one of the most treasured things his knapsack contains." (Signed), T. Buckart

"Foot Elm" is 25 cents a box at all druggists, or by mail, Stott and Jury, Bowmanville, Ont.

SORE FEET

If your feet are sore, tired and aching, Foot Elm can give you wonderful ease and comfort. Price, 25c. a box at all druggists, or sent by mail, postage free. Stott & Jury, Bowmanville, Ont.

Transient Traders Case

Huntsville Forester:—Miss Berryman, who represents Boulter & Stewart, manufacturers of ladies' garments, announced that she would be pleased to meet the ladies of Huntsville at Hotel Kent between certain hours on a certain day, and her announcement cards bore a very enticing illustration of a lady's suit. During the day she is said to have had many callers but towards evening, behold a young man stepped in to ascertain upon what clause of the Transient Traders by-law she hoped to be relieved of prosecution for conducting a retail business in Huntsville, without license or the payment of taxes. Miss Berryman gave her unwelcome visitor little satisfaction. An information, charging her with a violation of the local Transient Traders by-law was accordingly issued and at 7.30 p.m. she appeared before Justice Hutchison. She asked a remand until Monday night, which was granted, but during the interval her employers were communicated with through her solicitor, Mr. D. M. Grant, and on condition that they stay away and pay costs to date, the case was dismissed.

TO INSPECT WATERWORKS

The Water Commissioners Leave to Visit Other Towns

Mayor Dennе and Mr. W. H. Hill, water commissioners, accompanied by Mr. E. H. D. Hall, town solicitor, and Mr. W. Henderson, superintendent of the waterworks system, left yesterday to visit Brantford, London and Windsor to investigate waterworks systems at these places and the management under municipal ownership. Mr. T. F. Matthews, chairman of the commissioners, will join the party to-day.

HOW THEY MANAGE

Doctors' Wives Trained to Arrange Things

Sometimes the wife of a doctor can bring her husband around when he don't know exactly how to help himself. The wife of a certain well known physician in Washington, D.C., concluded that coffee was the cause of the doctor's sleepless nights. She says, "He would retire and lie for hours unable to sleep a wink. I thought perhaps he was nervous from the coffee which he drank at his meals and suggested that he tried Postum. To my surprise he objected most decidedly. I said nothing but the next morning made Postum Coffee instead of the regular coffee and gave that to the doctor. I made it according to directions and it had a beautiful coffee color and flavor. He drank his cup and remarked that the coffee was unusually good that morning and asked for more.

From that time I served him Postum at every meal, and in the course of a week or two he showed such remarkable signs of improvement in health and strength that I told him he had been drinking Postum from the time he had begun to get better.

You never saw such a surprised man. He said, "Well, if the good coffee I have had is Postum, and leaving off regular coffee has made such a change in my health, I never want any other kind in my house.' Since then he regularly prescribes Postum to many of his patients and with good results." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

THE NEW CONTINGENT.

Speculation as to the Officers to Be Appointed to the Various Commands—Nine Commissions For Ontario.

Ottawa, April 14.—His Excellency the Governor-General returned from New York yesterday, and, doubtless, the nominations for commands in the fourth contingent will now go forward to the War Office without delay, that is, presuming the selections all to have been made by the Minister of Militia. The report that two of the commands have been assigned to Lieut.-Col. Williams and Lieut. Boulanger, is corroborated. There has been talk of the two other commands being offered to officers of the third contingent, now in South Africa. This may be probable in the case of Lieut.-Col. Cameron, but it is not likely that Major Merritt will be taken from his present position of second in command.

It is the intention of the Minister to give younger officers a chance for this fourth contingent. An officer with the rank of colonel in a colonial regiment can hope for no further preferment by going to South Africa. All ranks under a colonel, however, may go ahead.

Of the 22 commissions in the contingent, it is said, two will be given to the Mounted Police, and, of the remaining 20 commissions, nine will be given to Ontario officers.

MORE ABUNDANT LIFE.

How Canadians May Obtain That Which All Seek After.

The world's greatest hunger is life-hunger.

"'Tis life, whereof our nerves are scant,
Oh life, not death for which we pant,
More life and fuller that we want."

Perhaps the greatest mistake we make is that of measuring life by its quantity instead of its quality; its length instead of its depth; its years instead of its usefulness, its high purposes and its worthy aims, writes Rev. J. T. Sutherland in Toronto Sunday World. The terrific thing about sin and evil in the heart is that they cripple life, they maim it in the very highest part of its nature. They make the soul sick and weak when it ought to be strong. Men often say, Let us indulge our appetites and passions without control or law, and thus enjoy life to the full. That is the way to make enjoyment of life to the full impossible. Moral health, not moral disease, is what leads to real happiness. Sin, self-indulgence and the "sowing of wild oats" always bring weakness, impoverishment of life and misery in their train. There is no other such enricher of life as a pure and noble religion. This is because religion goes deeper than anything else—it renovates and feeds the very springs of man's purposes, aims, ideals, secret purposes and desires. It gives men new moral incentive, moral motive, moral power, and thus renovates society and lays the only enduring foundation for states, nations and civilizations.

Jesus said: "I came that they might have life, and might have it more abundantly." What a mission was that! His heart was ever close to His brother, and so He felt the joys and sorrows, the hopes and fears, the temptations and struggles of humanity as His own. His soul was ever close to God, and so the tides of the Infinite life swept through Him. Hence His power to become a giver of life, and life at its deepest, richest, divinest, to His fellow men. Are any of us weak? Do we feel the currents of the higher life of the spirit run feebly within us? Let us take His strong hand in ours and be led by Him to the fulness of the Divine Fountain which flows forever for us all in God.

Canada's Large Frogs.

Among large frogs Canada probably has the honor of owning the largest. It was grown on a small farm, Killarney, five miles from Fredericton, New Brunswick. Just before its death it was weighed and found to tip the scales at 46 pounds. Its length was 30 inches and height 18 inches. Across the back it measured 14 inches. Now, stuffed and mounted, it forms an exhibit of which the locality is proud.

The Pressure of Light.

The idea that the waves of light produce a mechanical push or pressure was advanced years ago by Clerk Maxwell, but he could only offer a theoretical proof. Recently Professor Lebedew of Moscow has made an experimental demonstration of the "pressure of light." He employs a radiometer resembling the familiar Crookes radiometers with their revolving vanes, but uses a larger and more completely exhausted bulb, from which the heating effect that is the principal agent in moving the Crookes vanes is excluded. When the light falls upon the vanes, they are driven before it, and the intensity of the pressure thus revealed comes within 10 per cent. of that calculated by Maxwell. The effect is independent of the color of the light and directly proportional to its energy.

"Daring" Books.

It is women who write "daring" books, and it is women who read them. When once the fair do take their bonnets off they are not content with that; they throw them over the windmills, as the French say. Men do not like this kind of thing. It not only disgusts but bores them. It is a particular kind of woman, usually earnest and very stupid, who enjoys these excesses. Our sex, if all this goes on, must provide itself with fans to blush behind. We must leave the ladies before the coffee and cigarettes begin to circulate.—Andrew Lang in "Longman's Magazine."

"You wouldn't be a good one. I am a successful banker, but I always wanted to write a book. And now here's this man Wagner tries his hand at music. Just listen to the stuff! And yet we all know he builds good parlor-cars."

THE TWENTIETH ANNUAL MEETING

OF THE SHAREHOLDERS OF THE Western Bank of Canada

OSHAWA, ONTARIO

Held at the Head Office of the Bank on Wednesday, April 9th, 1902

The following shareholders were present: John Cowan, Esq., W. F. Allen, Esq., Thomas Patterson, Esq., Dr. McIntosh, R. S. Hamlin, Esq., Thomas Miller, Esq., John McLaughlin, Esq., C. W. Scott, Esq., W. F. Cowan, Esq., T. H. McMillan, Esq. George Porter, Esq., R. Dillon, Esq., and Thomas Conant, Esq.

The President, John Cowan, Esq., occupied the chair, and Mr. T. H. McMillan acted as Secretary to the meeting.

REPORT

The Directors have pleasure in submitting the Twentieth Annual Report for the year ending 28th February, 1902.

The earnings of the Bank have been in excess of any previous year. The net profits of the year have amounted to $50,325.58, or about 12 1-2 per cent. upon the average paid-up capital of the Bank, which, added to the balance carried forward from the previous year of $11,175.93, amounts to $61,501.51.

Out of this sum two half-yearly dividends of 3 1-2 per cent. each have been paid, absorbing $28,565.97, $16,000 carried to the Rest Account, $12,857.33 to the credit of past due paper, and $4,078.21 has been carried forward to the credit of Profit and loss.

The deposits of the Bank have increased $490,279.66, and the circulation $13,800, and the gross assets $530,452.80 over the previous year. The losses of the year have been below the average of previous years.

The Rest Account of the Bank now stands at $150,000, or about equal to 36 per cent. of the paid-up capital.

The Agencies of the Bank have been recently inspected, and found in a satisfactory condition.

Oshawa, 9th April, 1902. JOHN COWAN, President.

Moved by the President, and seconded by the Vice-President, that the Report as read be adopted, printed and circulated among the Shareholders.—Carried.

Mr. Conant, seconded by Mr. Dillon, moved: That the thanks of the Shareholders are due, and are hereby tendered to, the President, Vice-President and Directors of the Bank for the manner in which they have conducted the Affairs of the Bank during the past year.—Carried.

Mr. Paterson, seconded by Mr. Scott, moved: That the thanks of the Shareholders be given to the Cashier and other officers of the Bank for their attention to the interests of the Bank.—Carried.

Mr. Miller, seconded by Mr. Porter, moved: That this meeting do now proceed to elect, by ballot, seven Directors to fill the place of those retiring, and that Messrs. C. W. Scott and John McLaughlin be scrutineers for said election, and that the poll remain open for one hour to receive the votes of the Shareholders, and that should five minutes elapse at any time without a vote being taken the poll should be declared closed, and that the Scrutineers be paid $4.00 each for their services.—Carried.

The scrutineers reported the following seven gentlemen as having received the unanimous vote of the Shareholders, viz.: John Cowan, Esq., R. S. Hamlin, Esq., W. F. Cowan, Esq., Dr. McIntosh, W. F. Allen, Esq., T. Paterson, Esq., and J. A. Gibson, Esq., who were duly elected Directors for the ensuing year. A vote of thanks was then tendered to the Chairman for his able conduct in the chair, and the meeting then adjourned.

At a subsequent meeting of the new Board, John Cowan, Esq., was unanimously elected President, and R. S. Hamlin, Esq., Vice-President.

ENRAGED KURDS AND TURKS SLAY HUNDREDS

A Massacre of Christians in a Village by Turkey's Soldiers--Terrible Bloodshed in Armenia.

Special to The Times.

Constantinople, April 17.—News has been received here of a massacre by Turks and Kurds of three hundred Christians at Diarbekir in Kurdistan. A band of roving Armenians recently appeared near the town, and the authorities sent Ibrahim Pasha at the head of Kurdish irregulars to disperse them. The irregulars pursued the Armenians for some distance, attacking Armenian villages en route.

Finally Ibrahim and his party were forced back, and just as they reached the town seeking for reinforcements the Armenians opened fire. Heavy fighting lasted for some time. The Kurds, enraged at not being able to force the Armenians back, turned into the Christian quarter of the town and killed unmercifully. It is estimated that three hundred Christians were massacred. Many Turks and Kurds were also killed.

FINANCIAL INFLUENCE AND THE BOER WAR

Rothschilds Said to Favor Peace Almost at Any Price

IF THE WAR IS TO BE CONTINUED

England Will Put More Men in the Field Who Will Prosecute the War With Energy

London, April 16.— It is generally understood in London in connection with the peace negotiations between the British and Boers that financial considerations are exercising a predominant influence. It is no longer a secret that from the outset the great world-finance establishment of the Rothschilds has been dissatisfied with the policy of Mr. Joseph Chamberlain in South Africa, and considers the war to have been wholly unnecessary and inexpedient. What influence, therefore, they may be able to exercise in bringing about a durable peace will be exerted.

The counter-influences, however, which financed the Jameson raid and backed up the Chamberlain policy with all their power are still potent, and it is feared may prevent the acceptance by the British Government of the conditions under which the Boers will consent to cease hostilities.

What these are have not yet been made public, and may not be for some days, as they have to be passed on by the Boer mission in Europe, who also will consult those who are acting as intermediaries in the negotiations with the British Government, or may be appealed to for support in asking of the latter guarantees for the fulfilment of the conditions that may be definitely decided on, for the Boer mistrust of Mr. Joseph Chamberlain and Lord Milner is such that no confidence is placed in them by either the burghers or their leaders.

The Spectator says: Should the present peace overtures fail, we are in a position to state that heavy reinforcements will be at once despatched to South Africa, and the war will be prosecuted with terrible energy.

Visit Said to be of a Political Nature, and is in Reference to the Monroe Doctrine

Special Telegram to The Times.

Washington, April 17.— At the Mexican Embassy here it is reported that President Diaz, of Mexico, is preparing to visit Washington. It is altogether likely that his visit has something to do with the interpretation of the Monroe doctrine, which is understood to be offensive to the Mexicans. It is an unusual thing for a ruler of Mexico to visit this country, and his welcome will be sincere.

What President Diaz has been and what he has done in the reconstruction of Mexico is of too recent history and is too present a fact to need recounting. Probably not until the great chief of our southern neighbor republic has passed away will America or the world rightly appreciate the ability and greatness of mind which General Porifiro Diaz has shown in his statecraft.

But even in the present short perspective the splendid achievements of the Mexican people and the Mexican Government under his leadership are patent to the world and the United States, as the premier republic of the western hemisphere, has special reason to do him honor.

LEPROSY AMONG THE BOERS

Sensational Report in Holland. Why British Troops Should Withdraw

Amsterdam, April 16.—News of an extraordinary reason for the withdrawal of British troops from South Africa is current in inner circles.

This is nothing less than the discovery that the dread disease of leprosy is widely diffused among the Dutch farmers. A suspicion this became so well grounded a few months ago that Jonathan Hutchinson, F.R.S., consulting surgeon to the London Hospital, was sent to the Transvaal to make an investigation and report.

It appears that Mr. Hutchinson has now returned with notes of the most disquieting nature. He found that the disease was scattered over the whole of South Africa. Originally it affected few besides the natives, but in recent years it has become diffused among the burghers from Cape Town over the whole British territory, being especially prevalent in the Transvaal and the Orange Free State — just where the British soldiery are now most concentrated.

The spread of the disease is believed to be due to the eating of food contaminated by passing through the hands of lepers, especially in the case of salt fish prepared at various places on the south and west coasts.

EPISCOPAL BISHOPS MEET

A Remarkable Convention of Church Dignitaries in Cincinnati

Special Telegram to The Times.

Cincinnati, O., April 16 — Sixty of the eighty or more bishops of the Episcopal Church, including nearly all the foreign missionary bishops, are attending the special meeting of the House of Bishops which began here to-day. The meeting is one of considerable importance to the church. The principal business before the meeting is the election of missionary bishops for Western Kansas, the Hawaiian Islands and Porto Rico. Interest centres particularly in the selection of a bishop for Honolulu, where Bishop Nichols of California is now acting pending the selection of a successor to Bishop Willis, who resigned under protest after the see has passed from the control of the British church into American hands. Another matter of importance before the House of Bishops is a memorial from the Mexican Episcopal church asking admission to the American church. This matter will be considered but it is not believed that final or definite action will be taken at the present meeting.

The bishops opened their meeting with a celebration of the holy communion at Christ Church this morning. Immediately afterward the House went into private executive session in the parish house. Bishop Dudley of Kentucky presided in the absence of Bishop Clark of Rhode Island. The sessions are expected to continue through to-morrow. A missionary service open to the public is to be held this evening at the Pro-Cathedral. Bishop Potter of New York will speak on the Philippines, Bishop Doane of Albany on the "Principle of Apportionment for General Missions," and Bishop Gailor of Tennessee on "Work Among the Colored Peoples of the South." Immediately following the service a reception to the Bishops will be given by the Church Club at the Grand Hotel.

HONORS M'KINLEYS MEMORY

France Does Honor to the Memory of the Late President

Special Telegram to The Times.

Paris, April 16 — One of the most distinguished audiences ever assembled in Paris filled the Theatre Comique to-day on the occasion of the benefit performance for the McKinley memorial fund. Although organized by the American colony of Paris the French people and the French Government aided the affair with their sanction and Premier Waldeck-Rousseau and other eminent representatives of the Government shared the boxes with General Porter and others from the American embassy. More than a score of the most prominent players and singers of Paris contributed their services and it is believed that fully $100,000 for the memorial fund will be realized by the performance.

Plan of a $10,000,000 Company to Build an Elevated Trolley

Special Telegram to The Times.

Trenton, N.J., April 17.— New life was given to the proposition to have quick passage between Philadelphia and New York on an elevated trolley road which will ignore crossings and small communities.

The original American Elevated Railroad Company has increased its capital stock from $5,000,000 to $10,000,000. The company proposes to construct an air line between New York and Philadelphia at an elevation which will give clear passage across the state. The speed is to be 150 to 200 miles an hour.

It is currently reported that the line has control of the franchise recently granted to the Trenton and New Brunswick Traction Company, which completes the connection between Trenton and New York.

WOMEN WEPT IN CHURCH.

Rector Asked for Prayer for Mr. Tower, Whose Wife Slew Son and Self

Special Telegram to The Times.

Poughkeepsie, April 16 — There was a dramatic scene in Christ Episcopal church to-day when the rector, Rev. Alexander N. Cummins, asked for silent prayer for Edward Tower, the millionaire ironmaster, whose wife shot and killed her son and herself in a fit of emotional insanity.

Every head was bowed, and women who knew Mrs. Tower and appreciated her activity in the parish societies wept profusely. One little girl cried so that she had to be taken from the church. The Rev. Mr. Cummins was with Mr. Tower most of the day.

Bishop Potter went to the house to offer his consolation. The funeral of Mrs. Tower and her son will be held to-morrow.

St. Petersburg, April 17.—An official despatch received here from Port Arthur, dated Saturday, April 12, announces that serious fighting has occurred in the vicinity of the boundary of the Provinces of Mukden and Kirin (Manchuria) between Russian frontier guards and Chinese robbers, who had been raiding railroad stations. The Russians surrounded eight hundred Chinese at Kiang Tung Tai and only thirty of them escaped. The Russian losses were very small.

London, April 17.—The British Cabinet held another meeting to-day for the purpose of considering a communication from the Boer representatives who are now at Pretoria, and a message from Lord Milner, the British High Commissioner in South Africa. The session was extremely brief.

After the Cabinet meeting Lord Salisbury, the Premier, had an audience of King Edward at Buckingham Palace, and stayed to lunch with his Majesty. The latter afterwards went to Sandringham.

Berlin, April 16.— Great Britain has accepted Germany's proposition for an international conference to regulate the use of wireless telegraphy. The other powers to which the proposition was made, namely, the United States, France and Russia, have not yet responded, but the officials here confidently expect favorable answers, especially from the United States, which has taken much interest in the matter. Germany's suggestion embraces merely calling a conference, but without definitely formulated propositions for discussion. Germany has also asked the powers to set forth in their answers if they wish Germany to formulate propositions to lay before the conference or leave the matter entirely to the conference.

Later it was asserted that the communication from Lord Milner, considered at the Cabinet meeting, contained the first clear statement of the attitude of the Boer leaders, who, hitherto, had not agreed on the peace terms they would accept.

The St. James Gazette predicts an early public announcement of the progress of the peace negotiations.

The paper says there is little doubt that if the British and Boers arrived at an understanding on the main points of the proposals peace will ensue, the banishment proclamation will be withdrawn, and minor points like re-stocking the farms, will be referred to a board composed of British and Boer representatives.

Hong Kong, April 16.—A courier who arrived at Canton yesterday reported that over 2,000 Imperialist soldiers sent by Marshal Su against the rebels, were ambushed in a narrow defile and were all killed or captured.

The situation in the rebellious districts of Southern China is increasingly alarming. The Viceroy of Canton has telegraphed to Pekin, urging the immediate forwarding of reinforcements. Lack of news from General Ma and Marshal Su is taken to indicate that the rebels have surrounded the Imperial troops and cut off communication with those forces.

BOER HRCISTIAN ENDEAVORERS.

London, April 17.— The Christian Endeavor movement has made considerable progress among the Boer prisoners in Ceylon, and there are now no fewer than eight societies there, with a total membership of 700. The prison authorities have allowed them a small printing press, and they publish every week a Christian Endeavor paper of their own. Societies have also been formed in the Boer prison in Bermuda, and in the prisoners' and women's camps in South Africa. Dr. F. E. Clark, the founder and president of the Christian Endeavor Movement, has been visiting Italy in the interests of the work, and the Waldensians in that country have greatly interested themselves in the formation of societies. Dr. Clark has now gone to Norway and Sweden, and expects to arrive in England in time for the C. E. convention in Manchester next month.

St. Louis, Mo., April 16. — Five thousand persons heard William H. K. Redmond, member of the British Parliament, plead the Irish cause at Exposition Music Hall last night. Mr. Redmond's address was a forceful statement of conditions in Ireland, and a passionate plea for a cause which he said is now about to be won. The meeting closed with a short address by former Congressman John P. Finerty of Chicago. More than three thousand dollars has been subscribed to the support of the Irish cause as a result of Mr. Redmond's visit to St. Louis.

London, April 17.—Professor John Perry is a mathematician, physicist, and engineer. In the first and last of these qualities he appeals for a more practical method of teaching mathematics than prevails now at our public schools and universities. Professor Perry foresees a new order of things, and urges that "Englishmen should prepare for the new phase in the struggle for existence which has so suddenly come upon the world. GERMANS ARE RESENTFUL OVER ROYAL VISIT.

Thought that Alleged Disclosures Over Spanish-American War Would Have Injured Britain in American Eyes

Special to The Times.

Paris, April 17.—A despatch from Berlin to the Paris edition of The Herald says the rumored invitation of the Prince of Wales to America, stirs up a spirit of resentment in the German capital, as it was expected, after the exposure of the attitude of Britain during the Spanish-American war, that the United States would feel drawn closer to Germany. Although it is denied that the Crown Prince of Germany will be sent to the United States in case the Prince of Wales is entertained there, it is true that another mark of high respect is being planned to prevent another estrangement between the two countries.

AMERICAN DEMAND FOR STEEL.

Paris, April 17.—A despatch from London to the Paris edition of The Herald quotes a prominent American in the steel trade as saying: The demand for steel upon the United States cannot be supplied. Stacks of orders are in sight, with no prospect of meeting the demand. The railroads and structural iron workers failed to estimate in proper time how much material they would require. The correspondent says there is no doubt that much steel is being brought on the continent for the American market.

MAN WHO WOULD BE KING.

Calcutta, April 17. A curious case of attempted rebellion and native superstition has come up before the Rangoon Chief Court.

Nag San Baw, the hpongyi of the Kaingyri Myauk Kyaung, declared to a large gathering in the Sikya Mintha that he possessed supernatural powers, that he could make gold and silver, and that he was a king.

The village headman sent one Shwe Kyn to find out what was going on in San Baw's Kyaung. Shwe reported that there were about 150 persons there trying to transmute rice, flour, mercury, and oil into gold and silver by means of cooking in pots over a fire.

San Baw, on being arrested, informed the village headman that he was the Sikya Mintha, and that he intended to seize the Palace of Mandalay and reign over Burma.

He added that he was not afraid of the English nor their weapons, for they would not injure him. On his way to the police station he asserted that it was only out of consideration for the police that he had allowed himself to be captured.

The pretender was sentenced to seven years' rigorous imprisonment, and fifteen of his accomplices to terms ranging from three years' to one year's rigorous imprisonment each.

Official News Still Wanting--Public and Press of England Becoming Impatient for Definite Details

Special to The Times.

London, April 17.—The press and the public are becoming impatient for definite news regarding peace negotiations. There was a meeting of the Cabinet yesterday, at which the majority of the members were present. It is understood that the Boer request for an armistice during peace negotiations was definitely refused.

The Daily Mail is somewhat pessimistic as to the outcome of negotiations.

It says that the questions of amnesty for Cape rebels and the withdrawal of banishment proclamation threaten to prove an obstacle to the negotiations.

A Pretoria despatch from Lord Kitchener says,—

"Bruce Hamilton's columns arrived at the Standerton line last night, having taken 145 Boers, including killed and wounded, during the movement from the Middleburg line."

growing for sixty years, that it is going to be very intense during the next twenty years, that it will be important for the next hundred years, and that the weaker nations will have been completely defeated before the end of that time, before people in general recognise their foolishness in wasting coal." Hence the professor claims that our antiquated and mystifying system should be simplified and made more serviceable to practical men like the engineers. But did not we produce under the old system, the most wonderful mathematician that ever lived, to whom nothing of that sort seemed difficulty, and Euclid appeared to be "rather trifling." Yes, verily; but, says Professor Perry, "Because Isaac Newton was such a superb bowman, and the English yew was even of the finest material, the schoolmen will insist on the use of the antiquated weapon only. I sincerely trust that the English yew, which is very much of a graveyard tree may not yet flourish over the grave of British industry." He points out that Cayley, Clifford, and Sylvester approved the very reforms of geometrical teaching that are now demanded. How very few schoolboys really see the "beauty" of "Euclid!

His South African experience has taught him that such a vehicle is of paramount importance, as giving the best means of pushing scouts to the front as rapidly as possible with the least expenditure of horseflesh and of rendering them independent as regards forage, ammunition, and entrenching tools.

Three horses will be used to draw the wagon, which will carry a detachment of one officer and twenty-two men, three bicycles, a Maxim gun, entrenching tools, and forage and rations for three days, the total weight being two and a half tons.

The horses are to be ready saddled and bridled for instant use by scouts on ground which the wagon cannot traverse.

A FARTHING NEWSPAPER.

Vienna, April 16.—The farthing newspaper, Die Neue Zeitung, has been issued and consists of eight pages. Three of these are devoted to advertisements and five to news. The proprietor intends to give in tabloid form all the news printed by other journals, together with articles and generally interesting matter. The proprietor, who was formerly the owner of a leading daily in Budapest, states that he requires a circulation of 80,000 daily to cover the bare cost of production. This is an enormous circulation in Vienna, where the most popular paper at present does not exceed 60,000 per day, and where there are several dailies with a circulation of less than 10,000.

London, April 17.— The United Kingdom Postal Clerks' Association at their annual conference at Preston made their first selection of a candidate to directly express their views in Parliament.

With but two dissentients Mr. W. E. Clery, of Deptford, was chosen. Mr. Clery, it was understood, was also the selected candidate of the Deptford Liberal Association. It is proposed to pay their "member," when elected, a salary of £300 a year. This will involve an immediate levy of a shilling per member and an increased subscription of a penny each per month.
